Mrs. D. S. Hogg, wife of our president of Port Gibson Femalo College, and two of Minnie Lee's classmates, Miss Grace Wilkinson and Miss Kathleen Carmichael, were at the burial service, and greatly endeared themselves to us by their sympathy. And Sister Hogg made a beautiful talk that was greatly appreciated.

TOO POPULAR WITH THE ENEMY

The daily papers print the picture of a cat in Los Angeles surrounded by a litter of mice. This cat is raising this unusual family. This picture reminds us of a certain Civil War General who was severely criticized because he was "too popular with the enemy." We do not blame anybody for criticizing a man who is too popular with the enemy. There is a lesson in this picture for the preacher: Don't get too popular with the human rodents who are preying on life. You aro sent to guard against them, not to chum with them.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Seashore District Meeting.

To get together, to counsel one with another, to get inspiration for greater Christian activities, especially along missionary lines, to gain a clearer knowledge of the work the Master would have us do, the secretary of the Seashore District accepted the invitation of the Gulfport Auxiliary to hold a district missionary meeting in First Church.

On June 6 and 7 was held a most delightful and profitable meeting, with a number of delegates and three Conference officers present. Mrs. R. E. Johnson, district secretary, presided over all sessions with dignity, calling the conference to order at 3 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon. After the devotional exercises, Mrs. S. E. Cowan, of Pascagoula, was elected secretary, and the reading of her minutes gave proof of the wisdom of the choice.

The conference was fortunate indeed to have available at all times the wise counsel of Mrs. McClesky, Conference president, and Miss Mable Porter, Conference corresponding secretary, with their lucid explanation of all doubtful points. Those who failed to hear both of these gifted women in their inspiring and instructive talks on Wednesday evening were indeed the losers.

Throughout the conference, Rev. W. M. Sullivan, presiding elder of the district, was helpful with kindly advice and information. With his assistance, a chart of the district had been prepared by Mrs. Castle, of Long Beach, which gave a clear insight into the missionary situation in the district. The charges or churches in the district without a missionary society were marked with small golden stars; wherever a missionary society existed a large star was placed. This brought out the thought of the circuit plan: Where it is not possible to organize an Auxiliary in every church, to have one on the circuit at least. The delegates were urged to go home, go out in the district and help organize new Auxiliaries. A poster made by Mrs. Castle was displayed, "A Missionary Society in Every Church," as was also another poster, a missionary roster of the conference officers, made by this same interested woman.

Misses Tinsley and Alexander, of the Biloxi Wesley House, were present and told of the splendid work accomplished there. They named among the many things needed at the Wesley House, bedspreads, more books for children, toys for nursery, toilet soap, talcum and wash clothes, thimbles, thread and emories.

A delightful luncheon was served by the Gulfport Auxiliary on Thursday, and at this time a playlet showing just how some missionary societies are conducted when the officers and members are not interested, was given by home talent.

Reports of an encouraging nature were made by the delegates, and the work in all its phases was discussed. Systematic giving was stressed and many told of personal tithing. Brother Sullivan encouraged the conference when he said the Woman's Missionary Society was the most thoroughly organized department of our church.

Explanations of the Belle H. Bennett Memorial were made by Mrs. McClesky and Miss Porter that were explicit in detail as well as general information. Mrs. Dacey, superintendent of supplies, presented her work as encouraging thus far. A birthday idea was brought to the notice of the conference by some lady whose name we did not get, but the idea will no doubt bear fruit. Mrs. W. W. Syfan made a forceful plea for the Voice in every home. Resolutions of appreciation were presented by Mrs. W. F. Hopkins, Mrs. J. T. Rankin, and Mrs. H. D. Mason.

Mrs. R. E. Johnson stressed the importance of the week of prayer as a last word to the conference, and in parting each one felt this June conference had been the best she had ever attended, and a benediction indeed. An invitation to meet next year in Wiggins was accepted.

A NEW SCHOOL.

The Summer School of Missions at Mount Sequoyah, Western Methodist Assembly, Fayetteville, Ark., is a new enterprise of the Board of Missions, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. For two years it has been conducting a Missionary Conference and Summer School of Missions at Lake Junaluska, N. C. The attendance and results of this School have been very gratifying. It has been discovered, however, that many persons who wish to attend such a School could not do so on account of the distances which they would have to travel and the expense involved for that reason. It was, therefore, decided to provide another School in the central area of our church. This one will be similar in character and comparable in the coures of study offered, platform programs presented, and the type of work done, to the Junaluska School. Credit will be given by each School for work done in the other.

The Purpose of the School.

The purpose of the Summer School of Missions is to help train an adequate missionary leadership for our church. A thoroughly trained leadership is essential to the success of any enterprise. No great objective can be reached or program can be carried out without an adequate number of carefully trained leaders. This is especially true of as great and far-reaching a program as our church is now contemplating of evangelization and Christianization — Missions, in the Home Field and on our Foreign Fields.

Recent surveys reveal that we have an evangelistic responsibility alone of five million in the Home Field and more than sixty million in the Foreign Fields in which we are now working. This means we have twice as many people in the Home Field and twenty times as many in our Foreign Fields to evangelize as we now have members. In addition to this, there is before us the even greater problem and task of Christianizing these peoples—getting them to make the program of Jesus their program in every relationship of life. This is the contemplated missionary program of our church. It is a stupendous task. A great leadership is needed to accomplish it. To help to train such leadership adequately is the purpose of the Summer School of Missions being conducted by the Home Cultivation Section of the Board of Missions, Mount Sequoyah being one of them.

FROM MER ROUGE, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: We are still on the map at Mer Rouge, La. While we are not getting as much publicity as in other days, we are not dead (the church). We have a loyal membership that stands by the church and preacher. We have just closed one of the best meetings at Mer Rouge in many ways, perhaps, in the history of the church. We began our meeting on May 13, with Brother G. D. Anders doing the preaching for one week; then Brother Dan Kelly and Brother John, with his horn, another week. They make a grand team. Brother John knows how to blow his horn. I need not speak of Dan's work—he is equal to the task. We had fine crowds from the beginning. Great good was done, which only eternity will reveal. As a result of the meeting, several joined the church.

Collinston, my other point of preaching, is doing fine. We have as fine a little hunch as can be found. We are going to build a nice little brick church at Collinston in the near future. We have nearly $5,000 on it now. We hope to begin the building in the next two months.

I am rounding out my four years at Mer Rouge—of course, I will move. I think four years is long enough at one place. So if any of the brethren are looking for a good place, look this way; but you must have something better to trade—and that's hard to find.

SEVERE PAINS AND SO WEAK

Florida Lady Says She Suffered Greatly, but Found That Cardui Helped Her, and She Got "Stout and Well."

Dady, Fla.—"For a long time I had trouble each month, and suffered a great deal, evidently some womanly weakness," says Mrs. E. E. Pagett. who resides here on Route 1. "I would have very severe pains down on each side and across my back. and feel so weak I would have to lie down, and then have a bad headache.

"I knew there was trouble somewhere, and with all the doctoring I had done I didn't get relief. Teas and such didn't reach my trouble, so I decided to take Cardui.

"I found as the time came around, the pain was less, but I kept on till I took six bottles. I am stout and well ....and give Cardui all the praise."

Cardui is a mild, harmless, vegetable tonic medicine, found valuable in the treatment of many common womanly ailments. If you suffer as many women do, don't let your troubles run on without doing anything for yourself. Take Cardui! Since it has helped so many, Cardui may be of valuable assistance to you, in regaining your health.

THE HOME STRETCH.

The dictionary defines the home stretch as that part of a race course between the last curve and the winning post. If we may be so bold as to apply a figure of the sporting world to the work of the church, we would say that we are well into the home stretch and the results of the year will be determined largely by the way we run from now to the end of the race. The fact that we are in the home stretch makes it self-evident that the course has been run thus far—we do not know of anybody who has been "left at the post." We pray that nobody may tire and be left in the stretch. Between now and the meeting of our Annual Conferences there should be increased effort to complete successfully the tasks that have been assigned us, and renewed diligence in striving to meet the obligations resting upon us.

There is an almost irresistible temptation to "let down" in our work during the summer. The weather itself seems to militate against a vigorous prosecution of our plans for advancement; a good many members of the church in various communities are away on visits and vacations; the season is one during which social diversions and dissipations seem to be more powerful than at other times. All the more, therefore, should those who are in positions of leadership in the church give themselves diligently to the work of keeping things moving steadily and successfully. If the feeling becomes prevalent that not much is to be done—not much can be done—during the summer, it is almost inevitable that valuable time be lost at the beginning of fall in reorganizing the forces and laying out plans for the future.

The goal of our work is not, of course, merely "a good report at Conference," though that is worth striving for, but the accomplishment of as much as possible in the establishment, maintenance, and extension of the Kingdom of God upon earth. We are in the home stretch—let us make the most of it.

INDEPENDENCE DAY.

With the annual recurrence of July 4 we turn to a contemplation of the spirit and principles that made possible the existence of our great nation—that spirit and those principles that made independence the only thing that would satisfy the longings of our forefathers. To attain independence, the heroic men of that day were willing to give their all. The memorable words of Patrick Henry simply gave expression to the feeling of all his compatriots: "Sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish, I give my hand and my heart to this cause."

As we commemorate the day upon which the Declaration of Independence was signed, we may well pause to ask ourselves if we have preserved the independence for which the patriots fought, and if we of this day are characterized by the spirit that characterized them. What is worth dying for to obtain, is worth dying for to retain. If life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness appealed to the colonists strongly enough to cause them to organize their troops, muster their armies, and brave the trained forces of England on the field of battle, surely we ought to value those things highly enough to-day to be willing to give our best efforts to the maintenance of the same inalienable rights.

Our conflict, however, is not as theirs was—with an enemy from without—but with the forces within the nation that would nullify our laws and override our Constitution. The test of a democracy is not in the establishment of a democratic form of government, but in the ability to maintain that form. It profits us nothing to say that for one hundred and forty-seven years we have preserved the heritage of our fathers if now we are willing to see that heritage swept away by those who place selfish interests above the prosecution of their own selfish plans. An appropriate sentiment for every patriotic citizen to express on this memorial day is contained in the words, "The Constitution—it must and shall be obeyed."

"WAR IS HELL."

So far as we are able to see, there is no escape from the truth of the statement attributed to General Sherman that "war is hell." There is, of course, merit in the contention that methods of warfare should be made as humane as possible; but when nations engage each other in physical combat we may be sure that the most effective weapons for winning the fight will be adopted, regardless of conventions and agreements to the contrary. A recent writer has pertinently said:

"The stupidity and futility of making rules as to how men shall be killed in time of war have become a matter of wide discussion within recent months. The proponents of chemical warfare defend their mode of killing by gas as more humane than the bayonet, while the old-fashioned soldiers express bluntly their abhorrence of this modern invention and make rules against using it. The submarine and the airplane have their enemies and their defenders. Sentiment seems to play as large a part within the service as outside.

"Meanwhile, the fact of the matter seems to be, as General Bliss has expressed it, that all the rules in the world will not prevent the use of any effective weapon in a war whose issues are victory or extermination. Consequently, there is a rapidly growing body of discussion from the standpoint of declaring organized murder a crime between nations exactly as it is between individuals."

THE DAY OF OPPORTUNITY.

Sometimes we hear a young man lamenting because all the great opportunities for gaining wealth have been seized, and there is nothing now for him to do but plod along as a kind of slave of the men who have already acquired vast fortunes. To such we commend these words attributed to John D. Rockefeller, who ought to qualify as an expert in business affairs: "The most important thing for a young man starting life is to establish credit—a reputation, character. He must inspire the complete confidence of others. To get on, young men should study their business thoroughly; work carefully, accurately, and industriously, and save their money. As for opportunities, there are ten to-day for every one there was sixty years ago." It is true that the mill will never be run by the water that has passed over the dam—but the stream is still running and, too, a new dam can be built below the old one.

IT CERTAINLY DOES!

The following is worth passing along: "It is not easy to apologize; to begin over; to admit error; to be unselfish; to take advice; to be charitable; to be considerate; to endure success; to keep on trying; to avoid mistakes; to forgive and forget; to keep out of the rut; to make the most of a little; to maintain a high standard; to recognize the silver lining; to shoulder a deserved blame—BUT IT ALWAYS PAYS." It certainnly does.

"THERE ARE NO ALPS."

At the recent commencement of Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas, a diploma conferring the degree of Bachelor of Arts was awarded to Mrs. Clemence M. Simpson. There is nothing especially significant in this simple statement of fact; but when we learn the history of her achievement we realize that something out of the ordinary has occurred. Mrs. Simpson is the widowed mother of eight children; a grandmother; an active teacher in one of the Dallas public schools; and at the same time that she received her degree at Southern Methodist University, one of her sons received his degree in engineering at the Texas A. and M. It took Mrs. Simpson eight years to get her diploma, as she was able at first to spend only a few hours in study after she had finished her daily duties as a teacher, and her first courses were taken during the summer sessions; with the establishment of evening extension courses, however, she took work throughout the year. In speaking of those who say they are "unable" to get a college education, Mrs. Simpson said: "Any one who wants a college education badly enough can have one. One must give up some pleasures, forego some social diversions; but it can be done, and the compensation far outweighs the sacrifices."

We hope this incident will be read by many of our young people who really want a college education, but who are discouraged from unndertaking to secure one by the unmistakable difficulties in the way. Hard?—yes, but it can be done.

FUNDAMENTALS OF METHODISM: ARTICLE I.

The Apostles' Creed and the Twenty-Five Articles.

By Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

In certain quarters so much is being said nowadays about "fundamentals" that it seems necessary for some one to call our Methodist people away from emphasis upon things contrary to the spirit and genius of Methodism to an understanding of what the fundamentals of Methodism really are. For it would be nothing short of disastrous—indeed, it would be to turn the clock of spiritual progress back nearly two hundred years and to undo the work of the great Wesleyan revival—if certain alien principles, now being clamorously proclaimed by the literalists, should gain the ascendancy and be mistaken for the sum and substance of Methodism.

What I mean to say is this: Fundamentalism is the religion of the letter; Methodism is the religion of the Spirit. Fundamentalism lays stress on doctrine; Methodism exalts the Living Christ. Fundamentalism insists on acceptance of a Calvinistic creed; Methodism calls men to a happy experience of salvation and a holy life.

As showing this Methodist emphasis, I set down here certain words from the pen of John Wesley: "There may be some well meaning persons who aver that if they have not clear views of those capital doctrines—the fall of man, justification by faith, and the atonement made by the death of Christ and his righteousness transferred to them—they can have no benefit from his death. I dare in no wise affirm this. Indeed I do not believe it. I believe the merciful God regards the lives of men more than their ideas. I believe he respects the goodness of the heart rather than the clearness of the head; and that if the heart of man be filled (by grace of God and the power of his Spirit) with the humble, gentle, patient love of God and man, God will not cast him into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels, because his ideas are not clear, or his conceptions are confused." And if this is not plain enough, take another quotation from Wesley: "A string of opinions is no more Christian faith than a string of beads is Christian holiness. We do not lay the main stress of our religion on any opinions, right or wrong; neither do we begin, nor willingly join in any dispute concerning them. The weight of all religion rests on holiness of heart and life."

Now it is one thing to be liberal in reference to theological opinions, and it is another and a different thing to be lax. Laxness grows out of indifference or ignorance; liberality shows depth of soul and springs from a genuine experience of vital godliness. Wesley had opinions of his own; there was nothing nebulous and uncertain about his theological beliefs. Everybody knew where he stood on all the great truths of the Christian faith. But Wesley had had a transforming experience of the grace of God, and he knew that this was the one thing to be sought above all else. Before his "conversion" he had been thoroughly orthodox—just as orthodox as he was after his conversion. But his orthodoxy did not save him. What made a new man of Wesley was the experience he had in Aldersgate Street, at that memorable prayer meeting, when he "felt his heart strangely warmed." Wesley knew what was of first importance to him; and what was of first importance to him he believed to be of first importance to all men. And this is precisely why we Methodists have always allowed others large liberty in thinking. With us, conversion and a Christ-like life are the things that really matter. But this does not mean that we Methodists do not hold strongly to very definite views touching Christian belief and Christian life. There are certain very important Methodist fundamentals, and about these I propose saying some things in language which all can understand.

In a word, then, Methodism comes to the world with three great documents in her hand and with a glorious experience in her heart. It would be more logical, and more in keeping with the genesis of Methodism, if I should speak first of this glorious experience. But for the sake of emphasis, I shall leave this till I have spoken of the three great documents which Methodism holds in her possession. These documents are the APOSTLES' CREED, the TWENTY-FIVE ARTICLES OF RELIGION, and the GENERAL RULES OF THE UNITED SOCIETIES. The Apostles' Creed shows our connection with the church of the early centuries; the Twenty-five Articles of Religion show our connection with the great Protestant Reformation in England; while the General Rules, which came from the hand of Wesley himself, keep ever before us the type of piety which is the standard and ideal for all who seek to live the life of the people called Methodists. To repeat, here are the fundamentals of Methodism: The Apostles' Creed, the twenty-five Articles, the General Rules, and a Glorious Experience of Religion. I shall discuss these fundamentals briefly in the order given. I had hoped to be able to set down in one communication all that I have in my heart to say at this time touching these "Fundamentals of Methodism"; but I find that I must at this time confine myself to the consideration of the first two documents, the Apostles' Creed and the Twenty-five Articles, reserving for later discussion the General Rules and the Glorious Experience of Religion out of which came the Methodist presentation of the essential doctrines of Christian experience, a complement of doctrines distinctive of Methodism and peculiarly our own.

1. The Apostles' Creed. As it stands in our Book of Discipline this historic creed reads as follows:

"I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth; and in Jesus Christ His only Son our Lord; who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried; the third day he rose again from the dead, he ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead. I believe in the Holy Ghost; the holy catholic church; the communion of saints; the forgiveness of sins; the resurrection of the body; and the life everlasting. Amen."

This brief and simple statement of the fundamental facts and doctrines of the Christian religion is an inheritance from the early centuries of the Christian church. It was of gradual growth and traces far back into the earliest period of Christian history. With us Methodists, it is used as a baptismal confession of faith, and is recited every Sunday as the united confession of the faith of the worshiping congregation. This is the one and only creed which we Methodists require for admission into our communion. In this, we are in perfect harmony with the early church. This Apostolic confession we do require, but we require nothing more whatsoever in the way of creed from those who seek our fellowship in working out their salvation. Thus Methodism builds where the Apostolic Church built. One may hold any view whatsoever touching historical, scientific, and literary matters which do not contradict or deny the facts and doctrines herein set forth, and be a true Methodist. Furthermore, one may hold to doctrines not in harmony with the scheme of Wesleyan Arminian theology preached by Methodism, and still be a member of the Methodist Church. For we steadfastly hold with John Wesley that we have no more right to object to a man for holding different opinions from ours than we have a right to object to his wearing a wig while we wear our own hair. But as Wesley said, "when he takes off his wig and begins to shake the powder in my eyes then I do have a right to object." And this is precisely what I am objecting to in the things I have said about my friends, the Fundamentalists—they insist on carrying their wigs in their hands and shaking their dusty powder in my eyes.

I rejoice that we of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in particular, are true to the early Apostolic tradition and to early Methodist practice in requiring for church membership no further creed. It should be clearly understood that we do not require those who seek to become members of our church to subscribe to the Twenty-five Articles of Religion. For clearly that would shut most people out of the church entirely. What I mean to say is this: The language of some of the Twenty-five Articles is highly metaphysical and theological, and the majority of people are not theologians and metaphysicians. To require our children to affirm that they believe them would be to make belief mean nothing having any relation to the understanding and the life; and to call upon the busy man from the farm and the office and the store to affirm his belief in difficult theological terminology, would be to shut out a very large number of honest and useful Christian men. Not theology, but faith in Christ makes a man a Christian. And this faith in Christ that makes a man a Christian is very simple and not the complex and involved affair which we are told we must believe or be cast into outer darkness. It would be a tragedy to see our Methodism, with her glorious record of catholicity, tied up in a theological straight-jacket. But even so, Methodism could not long be held in bondage; for when once more the power of the Spirit came upon her, she would break her bonds and assert her God-given freedom.

2. The Twenty-five Articles of Religion.

The Twenty-five Articles of Religion are one of the doctrinal standards of Methodism. According to the general scheme of religion as set forth in this historic document, all Methodist preachers are under solemn obligation to teach and preach. These Articles constitute one of the most important and significant "fundamentals" of Methodism. And as has already been suggested, these Articles of Religion show our connection with the great Protestant Reformation, especially in England. Methodism, indeed, brought forward and completed the English Protestant Reformation. One always has the feeling that the Church of England stopped half-way between Roman Catholicism and Protestantism, in spite of the fact that she began so nobly with the statement of evangelical faith in her Edwardine and Elizabethan Articles.

The beginning of the Methodist Revival was under the leadership of clergymen of the Church of England and laymen whose early lives had been spent under the influence of that great church. When the Methodist Episcopal Church in America was organized at the Christmas Conference in Baltimore in 1784, John Wesley, Thomas Coke, Francis Asbury, and the others did not suppose that there would ever be organized in America another and a second Protestant Episcopal Church. For it needs to be remembered that the Protestant Episcopal Church was not organized until something more than two years later and by special act of the English Parliament. Meantime, the Methodist Episcopal Church, which had served itself heir to the noble Protestant inheritance of the Church of England and the priceless spiritual riches which came from God through Wesley and those associated with him, had entered upon her glorious career as the great Episcopal Church of America. These facts need to be stated and to be understood. For in the light of our historic connection with the Reformation in England must the Twenty-five Articles be read and interpreted.

The Twenty-five Articles, then, are taken from the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England. When Wesley sent over Thomas Coke with authority to organize the American Methodists into a church, he placed in his hand for the Methodists of America these Articles as we now have them, with the exception, of course, of the Twenty-third. He had left out certain Articles and had altered certain others, thus reducing the number. Concerning our Articles of Religion as they have come to us from the Church of England through the hands of our spiritual father, John Wesley, there are several things to be said:

(1). There are Articles here which are common to universal Christendom, such as Articles I to IV —"Of faith in the Holy Trinity," "Of the Word, or Son of God, who was made Very Man," "Of the Resurrection of Christ," and "Of the Holy Ghost." As there is nothing peculiar or distinctive about these great articles, nothing further need be said about them at this time.

(2) The changes which John Wesley made in the Articles as sent over to America are quite significant. It is evident that he was determined to rid Methodism of Calvininsm. For instance, he left out entirely Articles XVII, "Of Predestination and Election." And he left out Article XIII in which it is declared that good works done before justification "are not pleasant to God," but "have the nature of sin." And to take only one other illustration, from the Article on "Original or Birth Sin" he cut away half in his effort to get the Calvinism out of it, in particular eliding that part which declares that "in every person born into this world, it (Original Sin) deserveth God's wrath and condemnation."

Methodism and Calvinism do not agree the one with another. One may, indeed, be a Calvinist and a good member of the Methodist Church—for we welcome all who love and serve Christ, no matter what their theology may be. But Methodism cannot tolerate the teaching and preaching of Calvinism. It would be a singular and a sad thing if Methodism, having in the beginning spewed Calvinism out of her mouth, should now at this late hour go to sleep and permit the Fundamentalists to make her swallow the worst form of Calvinism that the world has ever known. For the Fundamentalist's whole conception of religion—of God, of Christ, of Salvation—is distinctly an exaggerated form of Calvinism. We are not willing for Calvinism, having been driven out of the front door, to come bursting in at the back.

(3) But the most significant thing about our Articles of Religion remains to be said. They are overwhelmingly Protestant. That is to say, they were written when the protest against Roman Catholicism was at its height, and they were written by Cranmer, who, it will be remembered, was burned at the stake because of his Protestant faith. Methodism finds herself in this holy, Apostolic succession. More than half of all our articles are in protest against the errors of Rome. Methodism, that is to say, is overwhelmingly Protestant.

We have not time in this discussion to go into details. However, I will indicate a few things of special importance.

Articles V and VI—"Of the Sufficiency of Holy Scripture for Salvation," and "Of the Old Testament" are Protestant Articles, written to meet and overturn the Roman Catholic view of the Bible. Let it be noted, in passing, that not one word is said about "the verbal dictation" theory of inspiration. That is not a Protestant doctrine. And note also that concerning the Old Testament two important things are said: "The Old Testament is not contrary to the New; for in both everlasting life is offered to mankind by Christ." That is the first thing of importance. To discount and to neglect the Old Testament is to suffer great spiritual loss. But also another thing is said: In the Old Testament there are certain "Ceremonies and rites" which "do not bind Christians"; notwithstanding, no Christian whatsoever is free from the obedience to the commandments which are called moral." That is to say, according to our Methodist Article, it is the moral and spiritual message of the Old Testament which has significance and eternal worth.

We need to keep in mind the essential difference between the Roman Catholic and the Protestant conception of the Holy Scripture. According to Roman Catholicism, "the Bible was a sort of spiritual law-book, a storehouse of divinely communicated knowledge, of doctrinal truths, and rules for moral conduct, and nothing more." The Roman Catholic theologians were utterly lacking in the historical sense. To them one part of the Bible was as of much value as another—if they could only find out what that part of the Bible meant. So, in order to make the Bible mean what they wanted it to mean, the Church of Rome resorted to its fourfold sense—literal, moral, allegorical, and anagogic. Now, as no layman could possibly understand such a Bible, the Church of Rome took the Bible out of his hands and declared that he had no right to try to understand it. Rome alone could tell him what it meant.

Now behold, in our Protstant churches, Roman Catholicism risen from the dead! Several sects arise in America whose very existence is based upon a Roman Catholic view of the Bible. The "Christian Scientists" have their infallible authority in "Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures"—and the Bible becomes a curious thing in their hands. The followers of "Pastor" Russell have their carefully prepared literature, and to study that literature is of more importance than to study the Bible. And the Fundamentalists, with their Roman Catholic view of the Bible, have their "Bible Schools" and their "Correspondence Courses," and when they are done with you, you will be able to read their scheme of ultra-Calvinism on every page of the Word of God. And when we do not agree with them, we are denounced as heretics.

Now, how far is all this removed from the true position of Protestant Christianity? "It is the unanimous declaration of the Reformers that Scripture is Scripture because it gives us that knowledge of God and of his will which is necessary for salvation; because it presents to the eye of faith God Himself personally manifesting Himself in Christ. It is this presentation of God Himself and of His will for our salvation which is infallible and authoritative. But this manifestation of God Himself is something spiritual, and is to be apprehended by the spiritual faculty which is faith; and the Reformers and the Confessions of the Reformation do not recognize any infallibility or divine authority which is otherwise apprehended than by faith. With the mediaeval theologian infallibility was something which guaranteed the perfect correctness of abstract propositions; with some modern Protestants it consists in the conception that the record contains not even the smallest error in word or description of fact—in its inerrancy. But neither inerrancy nor the correctness of abstract propositions is apprehended by faith in the Reformer's sense of that word; they are matters of fact, to be accepted or rejected by the ordinary faculties of man. The infallibility and authority which need faith to perceive them are, and must be, something very different; they produce the conviction that in the manifestation of God in his word there lies infallible power to save." (For an adequate discussion of this important subject, the reader is referred to Lindsay's History of the Reformation, Vol. I, pp. 453-467, from which the above quotation is taken. Lindsay's monumental work is, by appointment of our College of Bishops, in the course of study for the proper instruction of our young preachers.)

Articles IX, X, XI and XII, are all Protestant Articles, setting forth the New Testament doctrine of Salvation through Faith, and through Faith alone. And barely to mention in passing such important Protestant Articles as "Of the Church," "Of Purgatory," "Of Speaking in the Congregation in such a Tongue as the People Understand," "Of the Marriage of Ministers," and "Of the Rites and Ceremonies of Churches," I call attention a little more carefully to the Articles "Of Baptism," "Of the Lord's Supper," "Of Both Kinds," and "Of the One Oblation of Christ Finished upon the Cross," as giving the Protestant doctrine touching the Sacraments of the Church.

Roman Catholicism had built up a wall between man and God. The only way to come to God was by means of some mysterious "sacrament"; and the key to this door was in the hands of the church. In addition to such institutions as Christ had ordained, Rome had added many others. And so Rome stood with her doctrine that "grace," with its saving power, flows down through the sacraments of Baptism, Confirmation, the Eucharist, Penance, and Extreme Unction, in a mysterious and magical way. Thus through Baptism came salvation; through Confirmation, the Holy Ghost is given; in the Eucharist, the soul is fed; by Penance, sins are forgiven; in Extreme Unction, all sin is cleansed away and the soul is made fit for Heaven. This unscriptural doctrine put enormous power in the hands of the priesthood, and put the priest directly between man and God. All this Protestantism brushed aside. For when Martin Luther went directly to God in Christ, the whole Roman system collapsed. This is the great glad news of the gospel of Jesus Christ which Methodism sounds out to all the world—the fact that every man may come directly to Christ for salvation—the proclamation of the priesthood of all believers. And when a man has thus come to Christ and found salvation in Him alone, he is filled with a sense of certainty and confidence which enables him to sing with the great Reformer:

"Though the whole world with devils swarmed,
And threatened us to swallow;
We will not fear for we are armed
And victory will follow."

This then is the sum of the things which I have written. The one creed which Methodism requires of those who seek the fellowship of our communion, is that ancient creed known as the Apostles' Creed, the creed of Christendom. It matters not what else a man may believe or may not believe, if he heartily accepts the brief statements set forth in this ancient symbol, then he may become a Methodist. Besides this baptismal confession, we have (in the Twenty-five Articles of Religion) an important historical document connecting Methodism directly with the Protestant Reformation; and this Protestant document is a standard of doctrine for all our teachers and preachers. In harmony with the Protestant interpretation of Christianity, we must preach and teach. If it be asked: Has there not been in recent years a great apostasy from these doctrinal standards? I answer without a moment's hesitation: Among Methodists I do not believe that there has been. There is, indeed, some considerable stir among the Calvininstic churches of the country, but that is largely because they are discarding their Calvinism. And our Fundamentalist brethren, who believe that a "great apostasy" must occur before Christ comes again, are loudly declaring that such an "apostasy" has now arrived. But I, for one, am sure that my good friends are mistaken. It is to be hoped that the reading of this paper has led more than a few to come to a better understanding of Methodism and to join with the writer in saying

"Faith of our fathers! we will love
Both friend and foe in all our strife;
And preach thee too, as love knows how,
By kindly words and virtuous life.
Faith of our fathers! Holy faith!
We will be true to thee till death."

NEWS FROM THE DISTRICTS.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Notes from the Aberdeen District.

The Aberdeen District Conference has just been held, and a good conference it was. Two young men, R. T. Carter and H. C. Davis, were licensed to preach, and four were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial, as follows: J. E. Lawhorn, W. C. Mattox, W. C. Newman, and A. M. West. The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: W. T. Reems, S. C. Lensey, R. H. Furr, C. A. Lamb, Dr. C. B. Baker, Mrs. Jeff Wilson, P. W. Shell, E. C. Driskell.

R. H. Furr was elected District Lay Leader. W. L. Elkin and S. C. Lensey were elected Associate District Lay Leaders.

The preaching was well done by D. H. Crowson, W. N. Dodd, and G. C. Gregory.

The hospitality of Verona was all that could be asked.

* * *

Bishop Murrah preached in Aberdeen on Sunday, June 24, and dedicated the beautiful church. We were not honored with the privilege of hearing the Bishop, but have heard that the service was most inspiring.

* * *

A revival meetng is in progress in Amory at this time. The pastor, Rev. J. T. McCafferty, is being assisted by Evangelist Wiegle, of Florida. We have had favorable reports from the meeting.

* * *

Bob Jones will begin a county-wide meeting at Houston on the 1st of July, all pastors co-operating. It is hoped that a great victory will be won.

* * *

The outlook in this District encourages us. We have recentnly had good quarterly conferences with the following pastors: Cunningham, at Aberdeen; McCafferty, at Amory; Mounger, at Pontotoc; McKeithen, at Houston; Cunningham, at Okolona; Collins, at Shannon and Netfleton; Evans, at Verona; Gregory, at Nettleton circuit; Driskell, at Buena Vista; Johnson, at Woodland circuit.

* * *

Bishop Ainsworth has appointed Rev. C. C. Alexander, of Tennessee, who has just finished his work in Princeton, to fill the vacancy at Tupelo created by the death of Brother J. A. Hall, the most beloved pastor.

* * *

The pastors and laymen of the Aberdeen District will "pull together" to do the whole task for this year.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Ruston District Notes.

Bishop W. F. McMurry preached the commencement sermon for the Louisiana Polytechnic Institute at Ruston. Hih subject was appropriate, and was delivered well to the satisfaction and edification of all.

In the afternoon of the same day he preached and dedicated the Dubach church. Brother J. W. Faulk and the good people of that charge had planned the service for the occasion, so that the sermon, music, and the entire service were impressive.

* * *

The building committee at the Orphanage has let the contract for two cottages. These have been much needed for some time, and we are glad that they are able to start.

* * *

Elmore circuit is planning to remodel their parsonage and make it into a beautiful bungalow. Brother Smart has held one or two of his meetings. He reports that Brother D. C. Barr, who assisted him at Elmore, did some fine preaching. The meeting was good. The third quarterly conference was held on the 27th of June at Longstraw. At this church they have one of the best rural Sunday schools I have ever seen. Brother Hartwell Riser is superintendent.

* * *

A revival meeting started at Springhill on June 24. Brother T. W. St. John has to assist him Rev. R. W. Tucker, our pastor at Homer, to do the preaching, and Rev. J. H. Williams, our pastor at Farmerville, is doing the singing. The outlook is good for a great meeting.

* * *

The pastor and people of Jonesboro are engaged in a meeting. Rev. L. I. McCain, of Lafayette, is doing the preaching, and Rev. C. K. Smith is leading the singing. Good interest is manifest.

* * *

Notwithstanding the rain and unfavorable crop conditions, the pastors and people are optimistic and heroic in their efforts to make this a great year in each charge.

* * *

I had the privilege of attending the Divinity School at Biloxi. I had not been there in quite a while, and things had changed very much. I heard two or three of Bishop Candler's lectures. The Bishop's theme was well selected, and he presented it in his characteristic, forceful manner. I wish they could be delivered in every charge.

* * *

We are talking the Advocate in every quarterly conference, and some of the committees on Christian Literature are making good reports.

K. W. DODSON, P. E.

Shreveport District Notes.

What has been known for a number of years as the Bayou La Chute charge was in the succession of the historic Red River circuit, including a group of churches on opposite sides of Red River, and composed for the most part of well-to-do planters and their families. The work is now a half-station, the Taylortown and Atkins churches having united at Elm Grove. The entire membership of the charge is small, but maintains a high standard of benevolence. The institutions of the church owe a debt of gratitude to the Hutchinsons, Robinsons, McDades, Mercers. Professor D. B. Raulins, of Centenary College, is the very highly esteemed pastor.

* * *

Rev. W. E. Thomas, after assisting in successful revival services at Cedar Grove and Texas Avenue churches, assisted Brother Parker in a successful tabernacle meeting in Bossier City. The meeting was preceded by a survey taken under the direction of Mr. S. S. Thomas.

A special quarterly conference was held recently in Bossier City by the presiding elder for tho purpose of carrying out the new provisions of Discipline for the management of the Sunday school.

* * *

Rev. B. C. Taylor, a graduate of Centenary College and a one-year theological student in Southern Methodist University, has entered upon the work of the Grand Cane charge with enthusiasm, and has been given a cordial welcome. The reports made at quarterly conference show that his predecessor left the work in a well organized condition, and that there is every prospect of healthy advance.

* * *

Rev. D. L. Griffin assisted the pastor, Brother Akin, in a meeting at Hosston beginning June 8, and Rev. T. W. St. John will assist him at Ida, July 8-15. Considerable improvements have recently been made in the parsonage at Ida.

* * *

The State Epworth League Assembly in Mansfield was a success from every standpoint. Bishop H. M. DuBose each day at 11 o'clock delivered a series of exceedingly timely and profitable messages to the young people on "Our Articles of Religion," and, in addition, delivered great spiritual messages at the evening hours. A detailed account of the Assembly will no doubt appear in the League column of the Advocate.

* * *

The newly elected President of Mansfield College, Professor W. M. Bratton, has entered upon his work with consercrated purpose and energy. The Shreveport District should be largely represented in the student body when the new session opens. Increased endowment must be secured for Mansfield College, and more money must be raised for building. The citizens of Mansfield must take the lead and the friends of Christian Education and the Methodist Church throughout the State must follow. The Baptists are planning to establish a Woman's College in Shreveport. We already have a Woman's College ideally located, with splendid atmosphere and traditons. The Louisiana Conference is under a debt, which it cannot repay, to the common sense, the administrative ability and the consecration of R. E. Bobbitt.

* * *

At the time of writing, Brother W. E. Thomas is assisting Brother Reames in a successful revival service in Mooringsport. This is the fourth metting he has held in the bounds of the Shreveport District, and the writer commends him without reserve to others who need revival help.

* * *

Quarterly conferences have recently been held in Oil City and Vivian, in both of which places there have been great revivals, one with the assistance of Evangelist Earl B. Moll, and the other of Rev. L. I. McCain. Brother Bozeman reported 47 accessions and Brother Ware reported 116. In each place the good work goes on. At Vivian there has been a complete organization of the Board of Lay Activities, and the various committees are at work. Mr. S. P. Peters is the efficient Lay Leader. As Associate Lay Leader he will be glad to assist in organizing any charge north of Shreveport, where his assistance is desired.

* * *

Rev. S. J. Davies will supply the Lake End church during the remainder of the year and, during the summer, will also supply the Trees City church.

* * *

Dr. George S. Sexton is now engaged in raising $100,000 for the new building that is absolutely necessary on account of the extraordinary expansion of Centenary College. The effort will succeed. Two million-dollar plants, hotel and office building, are now in process of erection, in addition to very many other enterprises. What a pity that so small a number of men who have fortunes to invest can see the great value of investment in Christian Education! Through the confidence that the community has in Dr. Sexton, Centenary College is completely "sold to" Shreveport, but many men of wealth will have to experience a miracle of grace before they will part with their money for any other purpose than a material investment.

PORT GIBSON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The graduating exercises were held Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock in the college auditorium The program was as follows: Prayer, by Rev. W. B. Ainsworth, of Utica; piano solo, Fourth Barcarolle (Goddard), by Miss Quenie Pearson; a short talk by Dr. L. A. Smith, president of the Board of Trustees; talk by Mr. M. M. Satterfield, in which he appealed to the people for co-operation in the work of tho college. The Baccalaureate address was delivered by Rev. Robert Selby. of the Crawford Street Church of Vicksburg. His subject was, "The Phases of True Education," and was one of the best ever delivered in Port Gibson, and made a profound impression upon his audience, and was greatly enjoyed by those fortunate enough to hear it.

The scholarship medal was won by Miss Katherine Carmichael; Senior Bible medal, Miss Katherine Carmichael; Junior Bible medal, Miss Marjorie Allen; and the School of Expression medal, J. C. Satterfield.

President Hogg delivered the diplomas to the four graduates, Misses Katherine Carmichael, Minnie Lee Jones, Grace Wilkinson, and Minnie Price. There were also delivered to the same graduates the two-year teachers' certificates which are granted to those who finish the course in Education and make the required grades.

Religious Life Stressed.

The Port Gibson Female College, one of the oldest, if not the oldest girls' colleges in the State, is the pride of the town of Port Gibson, and its alumnae are scattered over the world, several of whom are missionaries in the East. While its Collegiate Department does the A Grado college work and its graduates in the school of education receive the two-year teachers' license to teach, one of its strongest departments is the Biblical department, as is evidenced by the interest taken therein by the students of the college and by the fact that one-half of the gold medals given are given to encourage the study of the Bible, which is taught in this institution to be true from the beginning to the end as written therein. No evolutionary or materialistic theories are allowed to be taught there, and will not be as long as it is under the control of the present trustees.

Every boarding pupil of the session just closed was a member of some church. This is one of the schools that are endeavoring to develop in the pupil the Christian life along with the educational, and one of its advertisements last year, "No Flappers Wanted," brought inquiries from several States. The prospects for next session are encouraging to the officers of the college.

The seventy-fifth commencement of the Port Gibson Female College was completed by the graduating exercises Tuesday morning, held in the college auditorium. This is the seventy-fifth commencement of which record has been kept, but the college was in existence for some time before the first commencement of which there is any record.

The commencement program was begun by the commencement sermon, preached by Rev. C. C. Evans, of Natchez, Sunday night, May 27.

A meeting was held in the college parlors Monday evening at 4 o'clock. A large reunion was held, and many members of former graduating classes were present. The meeting was opened by a prayer delivered by Rev. W. H. Huntley, D.D., pastor of the Methodist church here, and the Memorial Roll was read by Mrs. Maggie Musgrove. This included Mrs. Sarah Jeffries Buck, of Baltimore, Md., who was buried in the Greenwood cemetery here this past spring. She was a member of the class of '63; Mrs. Ethel Mounger Stevens, wife of Dr. Stevens, of Hattiesburg, a member of the class of 1890; Mrs. Mollie Kaufman Meyer, of Waynesboro, La., also a member of the class of 1890, and Mrs. (Dr.) R. H. Winters, of Jackson, Miss., who was a member of the class of 1848. Messages from the absent alumnae were read by Miss Katie Drake, president of the association. This was one of the most interesting events of the meeting, as messages, both telegraphic and by mail, were received from seven States, wishing success to the Alma Mater and telling of the blessings received while in the school, and especially of the great work done by Miss Armenta Kennard, who has been there thirty years.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Mrs. M. J. Spencer, president; Mrs. C. D. Humphreys, vice-president; and Mrs. J. T. Drake, secretary and treasurer. At the close of the meeting a charming reception was given to the class of 1923 on the college lawn.

Class Night Observed.

Monday night was celebrated as Class Night, but the seniors' play was also given. The program was divided into three parts: the reading of the class selections, declamation contest between Mrs. Hogg's pupils, and the senior play. The Class Will was read by Miss Minnie Lee Jones; Class History, Miss Grace Wilkinson; Class Poem, Miss Minnie Price. The declamation contest was as follows: "The Vagabond," Mrs. J. C. Satterfield; "The Highwayman," Miss Frances Little; "The Littlest Rebel," Miss Bettie Chapman, and "That Hat in the Pit," by Miss Caroline Allen. The Senior Play, "Not a Man in the House," was, for the audience, a chorus of merriment and laughter from start to finish.—Jackson (Miss.) Daily News.

MUSINGS OF A MENTAL RUMINANT.

By Arthur Madison Shaw.

The intellectual need of the church to-day is neither an irresponsible liberalism nor a hidebound orthodoxy; but an open, inquiring mind, a spiritual faith, a vital experience, a courteous candor, and a charitable patience. If it is a wise and Christian policy to make no excuses for faults in ourselves, but large allowances for human frailties in others, it accords no less with wisdom and the Christian spirit to make no allowance for faulty thinking in ourselves, but be very charitable in dealing with the erroneous opinions of others, "considering thyself," lest thine opinion should turn out more erroneous than the other fellow's!

* * *

The rank and file of the ministry and laity are growing weary of several things. A "Big Drive" is about as popular now as an epidemic of measles. If we adopt a few more special "Days," we shall soon have to add a few weeks to the calendar. We have a great many general secretaries, field secretaries, and financial agents, to keep us reminded of our duties; and their tribe tends steadily to increase. It would be a great saving, in several kinds of values, if we could get some one man to send out all the literature, telling the pastor that he is the "key-man" in all the campaigns and multifarious activities of a much-besecretaried church. Doubtless all these extra men are needed—they may be worth thousands to the church—but it is safe to say that nobody would give a nickel for another one! And, in addition, the tendency to push assessments higher and ever higher is choking out the spirit of voluntary benevolence, and straining loyalty well nigh to the breaking point.

* * *

The writer recently addressed the student body of Hendrix College, Conway, Ark., and enjoyed pleasant conferences with the president and several members of the faculty. He found it here, as elsewhere among our schools: notwithstanding much ill-advised and hurtful criticism of these institutions, they represent higher intellectual standards than most secular schools, saner theology than the average pulpit, and more genuine piety than the general run of Sunday schools. Whatever defects may exist, your boy or girl is safer in the small denominational college than anywhere else in this restless world.

* * *

What is the matter with the world? Sin!—that's all; just what has been the matter throughout the ages. Sin is no worse than it has always been—and there is no more of it. People have merely learned to sin in different ways; and even the ways are but superficially different. The picture show, the automobile, the moonlight swimming party, the Sunday joy ride, and the possibility of popularizing the air-plane, all reveal a sinful world in such rapid motion as to make us dizzy, and cause faint-hearted saints to fear the collapse of all religion and morals, and the downright failure of the purposes of God. But light travels faster than the auto, angels can outfly the swiftest plane, the Cross outshines the brilliance of the screen, and love has greater drawing power than swimming pool or Sunday picnic! If the times are sick, the church knows the remedy. Prayer still moves the arm that moves the world; and the Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation. "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? Or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in Sheol, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me."

If the Psalmist is right, then the church has only to furnish the Holy Spirit instruments through which to work, and men will not outdistance Him in automobiles and flying machines!

TO THE PASTOR AND HIS PEOPLE.

Dear Co-workers: In a few days some of your fellow-citizens will want you to send them to the Legislature to make and unmake Louisiana laws. Please be sure to send only such as want to see the Hood Law remain on the statute books. To repeal the Hood Law will be to tie the hands of every sheriff, district attorney, and judge in the State and leave only a few Federal prohibition agents to enforce the Prohibition Law in all of Louisiana.

Ask your candidates for the Legislature, including State Senators, to pledge themselves to vote against any attempt to modify or repeal the Hood Law. I hope the good women, as well as the men, will make themselves heard in this matter. Drop me a card and tell me how you are getting along with this good work.

"IF GOD WILLS."

By George E. Bass.

A prominent scientist recently declared that he would live to be 120 years old. He based this prediction on the average age at which his relatives had died. Of course, members of a long-lived family are apt to live longer than those of a short-lived family. However, the Scripture well says, "Boast not thyself of to-morrow; for thou knowest not what a day will bring forth." How long a man will live is with God to determine. If any man wants to live a long life, let him keep all of God's laws, and there is a possibility that he will reach a ripe old age. If any man does not care to live long, let him break God's laws—particularly those that have to do with the physical health—and he will pay the penalty in suffering and very probably in premature death. The future is unknown to man except to the extent that light is shed upon it by the Bible. Only God can speak concerning it with knowledge.

It does not show any wisdom on his part for a scientist to declare how long he will live. There are thousands of things that can happen to a man to bring about his physical death. Whenever a person is tempted to make a declaration like this scientist's, let him remember to consider God. He alone rules the world, and he guides our destinies. How fitting it is that he should do this on account of his great wisdom! He is directing affairs intelligently—not blindly as human beings would have to do if they had no loving Father to plan wisely for them. What this man ought to have said is, "I shall live to be 120 years old if God will permit my doing so." There is but one safe course for a man to pursue in this life. It is found in this verse: "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." Let the Lord decide what things are best for us in this life and give us those things. We are not able to choose safely for ourselves.

The Call of the Conference Claimants

EDITED BY LUTHER E. TODD, SECRETARY

Board of Finance, M. E. Church, South.

THE 1923 DISTRIBUTION TO CLAIMANTS.

On July 1 the Board of Finance will mail the checks going to the claimants for the 1923 distribution. The total amount distributed by the Board on July 1, 1922, was $36,273.23 The Board will distribute on July 1, 1923, $41,375.23, an increase of $5,102 over the distribution of 1922. The amount distributed per year of service in 1922 to superannuates was .779 and to widows .532. The amount to be distributed per year of service for 1923 to superannuates is ,885 and to widows .589. The number of superannuates a year ago was 907, while the number at the present time is 908, an increase of one. The number of widows a year ago was 1,349, while the number at the present time is 1,422, an increase of .73. The total number of both superannuates and widows a year ago was 2,256, while the total number at the present time is 2,330, an increase of 74. Considering the fact that the number of claimants has increased 74 in one year, the Board is showing splendid progress when it is able, notwithstanding this increase, to pay to superannuates about ten cents per year of service more this year than last and to widows about six cents per year of service more this year than last. In the distribution to the claimants a year ago all the checks sent to the claimants have been returned to the bank for payment except nine. One check for that distribution, payable to Mrs. R. A. Giddens, Holston Conference, has not been mailed for the reason that the office does not have her address.

CARE OF AGED IS TEST OF CIVILIZATION.

A very prominent bishop of a denomination other than that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has recently appeared in the secular press with certain statements on this caption that should cause all of us to do some serious thinking. He says:

"We have very little place in our modern civilization for the poor who are old. They do not arouse that pity that the little child does. There is no place for them in your homes any more. You haven't room for them. The time was in the family associations when there was always a place near the hearthstone for the old father or the grandfather. But there is not much left for a great many of the old folks to-day, except to get out into the night and die. Our commercial life has little use for them unless they have money, and in that event they will be well treated in proportion to the amount they have, no more. Our civilization does not permit the majority to accumulate, and our methods of living make it impossible for the average worker to take care of himself and wife when they have reached that stage where they are no longer able to work. There is nothing left them but the poorhouse, and even that is badly kept.

"Many of our social service promoters seem pretty certain that the old folks ought to die and get out of the way. They forget that these old people have souls. I tell you the test of civilization and of culture is not how you care for the young but how you take care of the old folks. In the brute creation the young are cared for by their parents. Tigers and lions fight to the death for their young. That instinct of theirs goes out to the young; but as for the old, they may go off and die. Not one of them bothers where the old ones die or how they die. They fall, and where they fall there let them lie. Our civilization, so far as we have any, is an advance over the brute creation; but how far have we advanced? If we do no more than take care of the young and let the old die, we have not progressed very far beyond the lions and tigers."

THE CHURCH IS NOW BEING TESTED.

We all admit that a clean-cut Christian civilization should be the supreme goal of our aims. If it be true, as stated in the foregoing paragraph, that the care of the old is a test of civilization, it should not be a difficult matter for us to apply the test in our thinking to discover how civilized we are. If these thought processes cause us to wince in our thinking of society in general, what will happen if we turn them on ourselves as a Church? Can it be be true also that one test of a church is the care of her aged and used-up servants? I believe this is true; and if we are failing at this point, we are likely to fail at every point. If we as a Church disregard our obligations to those veteran servants who have made us what we are, we can hardly expect to have sufficient moral stamina properly to regard anything that is worth while. To-day men everywhere in all callings of life are turning their attention to what is due the aged, the sick, the poor, the distressed. The Church of Jesus Christ cannot fail to keep step with this mighty tendency now setting in and hope to maintain herself in the estimation of people who think and plan in this direction. The test of the Church is the care she gives to those who have consumed themselves in her behalf.

THEY ARE TALKING ABOUT US.

It is gratifying to know that the "forgotten man" is now receiving attention not only in the Church press, but the great secular newspapers as well are publishing strong editorials in his behalf. The following words are extracts from an editorial appearing in the Charlotte Observer, Charlotte, N. C., Sunday, May 27, 1923:

"The whole religious world will be animated with the broader thought of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in connection with the future care of the superannuated preachers. But the Board of Finance has been authorized to create a fund of $10,000,000, the income from which will be applied to making the evening of the superannuated minister and his family one of greater peace and comfort. The superannuated preacher is one who has served the ministry to the point when the infirmities of age have imposed a burden on his activities or his frame has been shattered by the encroachments of poor health. He is transferred from the vineyard to the pasture, and there he too often finds the grazing but scant. Sometimes it has appeared that the Church has forgotten him, but who has ever heard of the superannuate complaining of his lot? Hardships but cement his spirit of devotion and strengthen his faith. He accepts privations with the resignation of the martyr, but there is none who has seen martyrdom in his experience.

"In this movement for relief of the superannuated preachers we may be sure the Methodist world will be united in cordial and generous support. The Southern Methodists are determined on removal of the one source of neglect which may have been lodged against their Church in times past, and the new prospect ahead for the laid-aside ministers is occasion for such discussion in the religious papers and to some extent in the secular journals. The proposition meets with an approval that is impressive in its enthusiasm. One writer in the Christian Advocate has sensed the situation with an unusual degree of intelligence. Speaking from observation, he declares that every preacher stands at the bar of the Conference with all personal preferences and selfish interests surrendered, willing to go anywhere. He surrenders the right to select his field, name his salary, or decide upon the house in which he shall live. He goes where he is sent and lives in the parsonage designated. His good and heroic wife adjusts her furniture, arranges her rugs, and hangs the pictures according to the house. The pastor plans his hours according to the work, and they arrange to live on the salary provided, however small. The preacher and his wife surrender the joy of owning a home, planting a bit of shrubbery, constructing the outside or the inside of the building to their taste, and repeating to themselves the exquisite and comforting sentence: 'This is our very own.' They spend their lives in another's house, live in constant expectation of a move, and must be ready to pack up and obey orders at the end of every Conference year.

"In continuation of his experience: After forty years more or less of this moving, mending furniture, adjusting things and selves to new surroundings, taking what is offered and bearing what is imposed, surrendering their personal choice and executing the will of others, going forth in winter and summer, in clear and cloudy weather, then what? When the preacher is old and feeble and can go no more to his work, when he and his heroic wife come up to the Conference to acknowledge that their work is done, what then? Put them on the superannuate list. No work, no salary, no home, no provision for a living—where will they go, and what will they live on? 'Can the Methodist Church in the face of the altruism of the age longer practice this criminal injustice to the heroes of the cross?' asks the writer in the Advocate, immediately adding: 'This is the horrible, inhuman, and non-Christian part of our great system. It must be changed.'"

HAPPINESS.

Half the happiness of living
Comes from willing-hearted giving;
Comes from sharing all our pleasures,
From dividing all our treasures.
And the other half is loving
First the Lord, then all things living.
So, each mortal should be sowing
Love seeds while his life is growing,
For all happiness in living
Comes from loving and from giving.

THE DISCONTENTED LITTLE SPRUCE TREE.

(A Danish Legend.)

Once a discontented little spruce tree lived in a wood. The reason the little spruce tree was discontented was that it was covered from top to bottom with short, stiff little needles, though all the other trees in the wood were covered with leaves that fluttered in the wind and were never stiff and straight.

"All the other trees in the wood have pretty leaves. I have only prickles. Nobody touches me. I wish I might have leaves like the others, only much prettier. I wish I might have leaves of shining gold."

When the spruce tree awoke in the morning, it was covered with leaves of gold that shone in the sunlight and brightened all the wood.

The little tree was so proud all that day that it wouldn't look at the trees with common green leaves. "No other tree has leaves like mine, and I am now the most important tree in the forest," it said in its heart. But that evening an old miser came with a huge empty sack and stole every gold leaf. Then he went away with his huge sack full of leaves and left the poor little tree naked and shivering in the moonlight.

"O," it said, "I wish I might have leaves of glass!"

The next morning when the little tree awoke it was covered with sparkling leaves of glass that shone like diamonds in the sun; and when the gentle winds came singing through the wood, the glass leaves made tinkling music. The little tree was then prouder than ever until a wild storm came and broke the leaves into tiny bits that soon covered the ground below.

The poor little naked tree wailed with grief. "Ah me," it said, "now I wish I had asked for common green leaves!"

When the little tree awoke the next morning, it was covered with the prettiest, softest green leaves that had ever been seen in the wood; but an old goat came along and ate every one of them, and the little tree was left bare again.

"O!" cried the little tree. "Why did I ask for gold or glass or green leaves? If only I had my old prickles back again, I should be so happy."

The next morning when the little tree awoke it was glad to find that the prickles had come back. All the dear little old straight prickles once more covered it from top to bottom. It had not realized before how comfortable the little prickles could be or how pretty they looked. But ever after that the little tree was contented with its prickles, no matter how straight and stiff they were. From that day to this no little spruce tree has ever been known to ask to have its leaves changed.—Frances Margaret Fox, in Youth's Companion.

ANIMALS AND STORMS.

I have heard a story of a young artist who, after painting a picture of a horse facing a storm, was not satisfied with it, and, feeling that something was wrong, asked Landseer to look at it. Instantly the great artist said to him, "Turn the horse around."

The cow turns her head to the storm, the horse turns his tail. Why this difference? Because each adopts the plan best suited to its needs and its anatomy. How much better suited is the broad, square head of the cow, with its heavy coating of hair and its ridge of bone that supports its horns, to face the storm than the smooth, more nervous and sensitive head of the horse! What a contrast between their noses and their mode of grazing! The cow has no upper front teeth; she reaps the grass with the scythe of her tongue, while the horse bites it off and loves to bite the turf with it. The lip of the horse is mobile and sensitive. Then the bovine animals fight with their heads, and the equine with their heels. The horse is a hard and high kicker, the cow a feeble one in comparison. The horse will kick with both hind feet, the cow with only one. In fact, there is not much "kick" in her kind. The tail of the cow is less protection to her than is that of the horse to him. Her great need of it is to fight flies, and, if attacked in the rear, it furnishes a good hold for her enemies. Then her bony stern, with its ridges and depression and thin flanks, is less fit in any encounter with storm or with beast than is her head. On the other hand, the round, smooth, solid buttock of the horse, with their huge masses of muscles, his smooth flanks, and his tail—an apron of long, straight, strong, black hair—are well designed to resist storm and cold. What animal is it in Job whose neck is clothed with thunder? With the horse, it is the hips that are so clothed. His tremendous drive is in his hips.—John Burroughs, in Harper's Magazine.

THE BIRD THAT TOLD.

Jay had been sent on an errand to Mrs. Green's, and when he got there Mrs. Green was not at home. A young lady asked him to wait in the living room while she emptied his basket; so Jay amused himself while she was gone by teasing a big, handsome parrot in a brass cage. Jay had never seen the parrot before, but it was such fun to hold a peanut near the bars and then when Polly reached a big claw for it to draw it back and eat it himself.

"Squawk!" Polly ruffled her feathers and made a plunge at the little boy, but of course the bars held her back.

"Pretty Polly!" said Jay with a grin. "I played a trick on you, didn't I?"

Presently the young lady came back and Jay took his basket and went home, forgetting all about Polly until several weeks later when his mother took him along to call on Mrs. Green.

"O, I'm so glad you brought Jay," said Mrs. Green when she saw him. "I have been wishing he would come over and see Aunt Emily's beautiful parrot. She is going home to-morrow, and this will be the last chance. Polly is so fond of children."

But when Polly saw Jay, she ruffled her feathers and gave a loud squawk instead of saying what Mrs. Green coaxed her to do. All in vain the cracker and the bit of meat she loved were given her. All she would do was to sulk.

"This certainly is very strange," said the lady who owned Polly. "She sometimes acts this way when children have teased her, but Polly never saw this little boy before. I am so ashamed of her bad manners." Then she turned to Jay and said: "Will you please excuse my naughty bird? She certainnly must mistake you for some rude, bad boy."

For answer Jay ran to put his head in his mother's lap and sobbed out the story. "I was the rude, bad boy," he said. "I'm sorry."

Of course, the lady forgave Jay when he said he was sorry; and though Polly could not be coaxed to say anything to him, the little boy went home forgiven and very much relieved. On the was he said: "Mamma, Johnny Snow is always talking about a little bird that tells on bad boys. Is Polly that bird?"

"Well," said his mother, "I don't know whether Johnny Snow ever saw Polly, but I do know that this particular bird told on one small boy."—Exchange.

TIME OUT.

It was Sunday evening. The minister had arrived at "thirdly," and the hour was nine. Suddenly he noticed a man sleeping—and in the front pew. "Will you please wake up that brother next to you?" he said in a low tone to a man sitting beside the sleeper. The latter replied loudly: "Wake him yourself. You put him to sleep."—The Methodist Times, (London.)

Editorial

THE NEW EDITOR OF THE GENERAL ORGAN.

We learn from the Arkansas Methodist that at a special meeting of the Book Committee, held at Nashville, Tenn., June 27, Dr. A. F. Smith was elected editor of the Christian Advocate to succeed the late Dr. T. N. Ivey.

Dr. Smith is a member of the St. Louis Conference, and a graduate of Central College. He has held some of the leading appointments of the church, Galloway Memorial, Jackson, Miss., being among them. For three years he was editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, resigning that position to become chaplain of Barnes Hospital, St. Louis. Dr. Smith is fifty-four years of age, and is splendidly qualified in every way for the high position to which he has been called. We predict for him a brilliant career as editor of the General Organ, and we congratulate the Book Committee upon its choice of so competent, gifted and sweet-spirited man for this important position.

WHY IGNORE THE SOUTH AND WEST?

President Harding has announced his list of appointments of ten delegates from the United States to the International Congress Against Alcoholism, meeting in Copenhagen in August.

It is a surprising fact that not one of the ten delegates is from the territory south of the Potomac, and only one—Ex-Congressman Volstead—from the territory west of the Mississippi. The entire delegation, with that one exception, is from the territory which, taken as a whole, is the wettest section of the United States. It would seem that the solidly Prohibition section of the nation would contain some persons qualified to represent the United States at such a Congress. It would seem that two of the greatest Protestant denominations of our country—the Southern Baptist and the Southern Methodist—both aggressively Prohibition bodies, should have furnished at least one or two representatives for such a Congress. It is the most sectional list of appointments which has ever been made to a Conference of that kind.

SADDLEBAGS WANTED.

Representatives of the Louisiana Conference will present a pageant at Lake Junaluska, N. C., this summer, "The Spirit of the Gray Moss," written by Dr. R. H. Harper, pastor of the First Methodist Church, New Orleans. Several circuit riders will appear in the pageant, and saddlebags are needed for their proper equipment. So far, the saddlebags are not available, and Miss Caroline Hess, Elementary Superintendent of the Louisiana Conference Sunday School Board, under whose direction the pageant will be given, is asking for the loan of them by any who may have them. They will be taken care of properly and will be returned to the owners. To be of service, they must be in her hands by July 15. Her address is 911 Guaranty Bank Building, Alexandria, La. We trust there will be an immediate response to this request.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Epworth League Assembly at Lake Junaluska, N. C., will be held Aug. 16-26.

Rev. J. W. Lee, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Monday of this week.

Good reports come to us of the work of Rev. W. B. Baker, our pastor at Maben, Miss. He is greatly liked on the charge, and the work prospers under his leadership.

The Methodist church at Holly Springs, Miss., is having the church building overhauled. The walls and furnishings, inside as well as outside, are being made more attractive.

Pilgrim's Progress has been translated into 107 languages and dialects—more than any other book ever written except the Bible, which has been translated, in whole or in part, into 770 languages and dialects.

Rev. A. Brulet, our pastor at Gonzales, La., requests us to say that he would like to rent a good-sized tent for a meeting in August. Let anybody who has such a tent communicate with Brother Brulet at the address given.

A conference on "The Social Task of the Church" is being held this week at Lake Junaluska, N. C., under the direction of the Commission on Temperance and Social Service, Bishop James Cannon, Jr., president.

Because of the service he has rendered in promoting the educational interests of Japan, the Japanese Empire has conferred the Blue Ribbon Medal upon Dr. J. C. C. Newton, who has recently retired from active missionary work.

Rev. W. D. Bennett, our pastor at Moorhead, Miss., writes that everything goes well with him. The Sunday School Day services were well attended, the pageant being given, and the Epworth League is doing good work during the summer.

Beginning on the first Sunday in July and ending with the last Sunday in August, all the Protestant churches of Greenville, Miss., will hold union services at the evening hour. The first service was conducted by Rev. E. Nash Broyles, pastor of the Methodist church.

Rev. James M. Lewis, pastor of the Hawkins Memorial Methodist Church, Meridian, Miss., is meeting with fine success in his work. He has recently held a successful revival at the Thirty-fourth Avenue Church, which he has organized in connection with his other work.

We learn with sorrow that Rev. L. L. Roberts, our pastor at Columbia, Miss., was stricken with an attack of appendicitis recently, and that he had to undergo an immediate operation. We are glad to know, however, that the operation was successful. At last accounts, he was doing well.

Rev. J. C. Ellis, Jr., writes as follows: "Being unable to get the course in the summer school of Millsaps College that I had planned for, I find that I shall be able to give almost the entire summer to holding revivals. If any pastor has a church where he can not get a more experienced minister to go, or has been disappointed in his help and can not get any one else, and is willing for one who is hungry to preach to hold his meeting, then write James C. Ellis, Jr., Cottage No. 1, Millsaps College, Jackson, Miss. Money is no consideration."

Rev. W. R. Goudelock writes that he has just closed a great meeting at Noxapater, Miss., where he was assisted by Rev. W. A. Wilson, Conference evangelist. He speaks very highly of the services rendered by Brother Wilson. There were 11 additions to the membership of the church.

We are especially grateful to Mrs. Margaret Tarpley, of Vicksburg, Miss., who has just sent us a list of nine subscriptions to the Advocate—eight new and one renewal. The summer season is the dull season in the business office, and both renewal and new subscriptions are gratefully received.

We are glad to learn that Bishop W. N. Ainsworth has practically recovered from the painful injury he suffered some time ago, in which several of his ribs were fractured, and that he is now able to resume his schedule of speaking. Bishop Ainsworth is one of our most vigorous and aggressive leaders.

Miss Clara Chalmers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles O. Chalmers, who has been teaching at the Irene Toland School, Matanzas, Cuba, for two years, has been transferred to the Colegio Buenavista, Havana, where she will take up her duties on Sept. 1. Miss Chalmers will spend the month of August visiting her parents and friends in New Orleans and Biloxi.

Dr. W. G. Henry, formerly pastor of the Galloway Memorial Church, Jackson, Miss., but for the past three years pastor of the Eleventh Avenue Methodist Church, Birmingham, Ala., has been elected professor of Sociology at Emory University. Dr. Henry is one of the most accomplished scholars in the church, and Emory is to be congratulated upon securing his services.

Bishop W. F. McMurry has come into possession of a table used by Francis Ashury and William McKendree at Kennerly's Chapel, Kentucky, in 1814. The table was presented to the Bishop by the pastor and congregation at Lewisburg, Ky., the church there being the direct successor of Kennerly Chapel. The table will be preserved in the Board of Church Extension Building, Louisville, Ky.

The Publishing Agents will soon put on a campaign to increase the circulation of the Home Quarterly Magazine, which is the official organ of the Family Worship League. This publication has outgrown its mission simply as a lesson periodical for those who could not attend Sunday school, and it now has departments that make it especially valuable in developing and maintaining the habit of family devotions.

Bishop W. N. Ainsworth authorizes us to announce that he has appointed Rev. C. C. Alexander to supply the church at Tupelo, Miss., until the session of the Annual Conference. Brother Alexander was reared in Tennessee, graduated at Trinity College and Princeton University, and expects to join one of our Conferences next fall. He has a wife and one child, and is represented as being a young man of very fine capacity and equipment.

The laymen's groups of the Holly Springs Church, North Mississippi Conference, are holding services in the churches on the Red Banks, Waterford, and Lamar circuits. They have a schedule of going out two Sundays, then skipping one Sunday. S. W. Mullins, L. G. Fant, and C. H. Curd are the three laymen who lead the several groups. Much good is being done both for the church in Holly Springs and the membership of the rural chuches. The Bible Students' Class at Holly Springs is taught by Judge C. L. Bates. This class is composed of mature men and women who enjoy studying the Bible." Judge Bates has been lecturing now for nearly three years on the Gospel of Matthew, being now at the twentieth chapter. The class continues to grow in numbers.

Rev. Nolan B. Harmon, Jr., of the Baltimore Conference, was united in marriage, on June 20, to Miss Rebecca Barry Lamar, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Holt Lamar, in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Rockville, Md., of which he is pastor. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Nolan B. Harmon, of Newton, Miss., father of the groom. The Advocate extends hearty good wishes to this fine young couple and prays the blessings of God upon them.

Rev. H. D. Suydam, pastor of the Boyle circuit, North Mississippi Conference, requests prayers in behalf of the revival meetings to be held on his charge as follows: New Salem, July 8, Rev. John W. Robertson and Rev. Earl Dunbar assisting; two weeks later, at Skene, with the same brethren assisting; at Shipman Chapel, Aug. 9, Rev. G. S. Harmon and Rev. O. C. Seevers assisting; at Dockery, Aug. 26, Rev. Del Longgrear assisting; at Poplar Grove, early in September, Rev. E. M. Shaw assisting. These are among the oldest communities in the Greenville District, and many of the older preachers of the Conference will remember them as the scene of their early labors, and they will be glad, we are sure, to join their prayers with others that a great work of grace may be wrought in these meetings.

On Wednesday, June 27, the editor of the Advocate had the very great pleasure of speaking on the occasion of breaking ground for the erection of a new church at Franklinton, La., Rev. L. W. Cain, pastor. The old church has been demolished, and a large audience assembled in the Courthouse for the service. In addition to the remarks by the editor, appropriate addresses were also made by Senator Delos Johnson, of Franklinton, and Rev. Elmer C. Gunn, of Bogalusa. The new church will be a beautiful and commodious structure of stucco, containing an auditorium that will seat about 350 people, and about 18 Sunday school class rooms. The first shovel full of dirt was lifted by Brother Cain, upon whose face the light of a hope realized was shining. The editor greatly enjoyed being with this splendid people, and he greatly appreciated the many courtesies extended him by the pastor and his family and other friends.

HOW THE CONFERENCE ASSESSMENTS WERE PAID ON JUNE 1, 1923.

Dear Dr. Carley: In complying with your request of a few days ago, relative to stating through the Advocate how we secured the total amount of our Conference assessments for the West Monroe Methodist Church, I take great pleasure in giving you the following facts:

At the Monroe District Conference a resolution was adopted to the effect that each charge in the district put forth an effort to collect the assessments during the month of May. Now, I did not have any more judgment than to believe that we meant what we said, so on the first Sunday night in May I told our people what the district conference had done, and also told them that we wanted West Monroe to be the first to pay out; and, in turn, our people did not have any better judgment than to believe that we meant business. So, in about fifteen minutes, we secured the entire assessment, which was $800, and not $752, as was reported some time ago. After these pledges were made, we set the first of June as the time to have the money in the hands of the Conference Treasurer; and, bless your heart, it was done.

HOW WAS IT DONE? By prayer, by presenting the matter to the people, and by having a spirit of willingness to do, throughout the church. But I hear some brother say, "You can take up a collection like that when you do not use the Budget System—but I cannot, because my church uses the budget system." I am glad you made that statement, because I wanted to tell that we use the same system, and this is how we worked it. We told the people that we wanted them to pay in advance in order to take care of the Conference assessments.

COME ON, FOLKS!

J. L. EVANS, Pastor.

LAYMEN'S CONFERENCE.

Lake Junaluska, N. C., August 10-15.

Perhaps the most constructive and far-reaching legislation of the last General Conference was that which had to do with the creation of the Board of Lay Activities. This organization comprises the General Board, the Conference Board, the District Board, the Charge Board, and the Church Board, and has for its object the utilization of all the forces of our church for Christian service.

A careful survey of the field discloses the fact that only about ten per cent of the members of our church are really active, that approximately twenty-five per cent make any worth while contribution of money, and that only about forty per cent attend the regular worship services of the church. The plan and purpose of the Board of Lay Activities is to help create the necessary interest, enthusiasm, and consecration that will enable the local church, under the leadership of the pastor, to make use of these unused assets, and build our churches into mighty barriers against the forces of evil, and present to the world a constructive program of a positive Christianity.

The General Board has been working earnestly to this end, and in order to enable the various lay leaders, chairmen of committees, and other influential and leading laymen to become better acquainted with the plan and purpose of the new organization, it has made provision for holding a great Laymen's Conference at Lake Junaluska, N. C., Aug. 10-15. This conference will follow immediately after the meeting of the Board on the 9th.

A program of unusual interest dealing with the broad phases of the work of the church as it relates more specifically to the laymen has been arranged. The specific and practical problems that have to do with the organization of the various boards and committees, and the duties of the various Lay Leaders will also be discussed, and there will be an exchange of helpful experiences.

The subjects discussed will cover the following general fields:

Evangelism and Missions, with particular reference to enlisting the lay membership in personal evangelistic effort, especially through the Sunday school and special revival campaigns, and also the broader phases of the opportunity and responsibility of our church for missions to the entire world.

Social Service, with all its implication of the relation of the church to such questions as: The home, marriage and divorce, the motion picture, industrial relations, race relations, law observance and law enforcement, community health programs, etc.

Christian Education, as it relates to the home, the school, the Sunday school, the Week Day Religious School, the Vacation Bible School, and our own Christian colleges and universities.

Christian Stewardship, in its recognition of God's authorship and ownership, and man's trusteeship of time, talent, and money.

The Rural Church, and how the laymen can help maintain these churches so as to help build constructively in the rural districts and continue to provide the leadership which comes from the country.

Christianity in International Relations. If we are ever to have peace in a distracted and distraught world, it will come only as the Christian church seeks to develop the spirit of good will among the nations of the world.

Bible Study. Last but by no means least, Bible Study is fundamental to all Christian thinking and living.

Speakers. The messages on these topics will be brought by Bishop W. B. Beauchamp; Bishop E. D. Mouzon; Judge John H. Clarke, former Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States; Dr. J. Stitt Wilson, of Berkeley, Cal.; Dr. C. M. McConnell, of the Commission of Life Service, Methodist Episcopal Church, Chicago, Ill.; Dr. Henry Nelson Snyder, President Wofford College; Dr. Ernest C. Webb, Wesley Bible Chair, University of Texas, and others.

Open Forum. In addition the above, an hour will be given each day to the discussion of such practical questions as: How to Organize Lay Boards; How to organize the Committees and Get Them to Function; the Value of the Church Conference; the Laymen in Their Relation to the Collection of the Benevolences; the Collection of the Centenary and Christian Education Pledges; the Laymen and the Special Effort for Superannuate Endowment; an Adequate Financial System for the Local Church; the Use of Lay Speakers, etc. These discussions will be led by our own laymen.

Who Should Attend. Conference, District, Associate District, Charge and Church Lay Leaders; chairmen of Lay Committees; superintendents of Sunday schools; presidents of Boards of Stewards; presiding elders; pastors.

This is by far the most important Conference for laymen that will be held in the entire church this year. It is also equally important for those presiding elders and pastors who earnestly desire to see the lay forces of their districts and churches fully utilized. Not only is a cordial invitation extended to them to come, but they are urged to use every possible means to help secure the attendance of at least one layman from every charge.

Full information with reference to railroad rates, enrollment cards, hotel accommodations at Lake Junaluska, and a complete outline of the program can be had by applying to the Board of Lay Activities, Lambuth Building, Nashville, Tenn.

BELIEFS ABOUT BABIES.

In Holland, bread, steak, garlic, and salt are put into the cradle of a new baby to insure its always getting enough to eat.

In Greece, the mother, before placing her child in its cradle, turns it three times around before the fire, singing to it the while, to ward off evil spirits.

In Sweden, a book is placed under the head of a baby to make it quick at learning to read, and money is put into its first bath that it may be rich.

In Wales, a knife or a pair of tongs is put into the baby's bed to keep danger away.

In Spain, the little one's face is lightly brushed into the branch of a fir tree "for luck."—Presbyterian Witness.

WILLIAMS PIANO & ORGAN CO. 1256 Fullerton Ave., Chicago

So, on the morning of the holy Sabbath, "as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week," the spirit of MRS. HATTIE L. SHERRARD, after occupying its "tenement of clay" the allotted "threescore years and ten," save one, took its flight to that strange beyond to which her husband and three children had preceded her. Two sons, H. J. and W. M. Sherrard, her four daughters. Mrs. J. E. Ormond, Mrs. W. W. Nicholson, Mrs. Edward Rogers, Mrs. Eugene Richardson, and two orphaned grandchildren whom she had reared as her own, Grady Hines, and Mrs. W. H. Franks, of Alexandria, in whose home she was visiting when she became ill, were with her when the summons came to "Come up higher."

She was the daughter of W. D. and Ann McDonald. Her father was prominent in financial and political circles in his parish and State during the reconstruction period after the Civil War. She was born at Monroe, in Ouachita Parish, Sept. 29, 1854, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ed. Rogers, of Ruston, April 29, 1923. She was married to Mr. A. J. Sherrard, of Jackson Parish, at the home of her aunt, Mrs. H. W. Sherrard, of Vernon, La., Dec. 25, 1872.

She was converted under the ministry of Rev. Mr. McKey, more than forty years ago, and lived a consecrated Christian life as a member of the Methodist church from the time of her conversion till her translation.

"I never stand beside the bier and see
The seal of death upon some well loved face,
But that I say, one more to welcome me
When I have crossed the intervening space
'Twixt this good land and that one over there,
One more to make the strange beyond seem fair."

Mrs. Sherrard, though quiet and unassuming, made many friends, who will sadly miss her, "weeping with those who weep" because she is not. May her bereaved loved ones follow so closely her example that they will not miss the way of life eternal.

"I believe I'll meet my loved ones,
On that far off mystic shore.
And I'll know them when I see them
By our heart-throbs as of yore.
When soul speaks to soul of loved one,
With no thought of worldly care,
Not a trace of sin or sorrow—
Oh, I'm sure I'll know them there.
Where there shall be no more curse,
And sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

MRS. A. C. McKINNEY.

I SHALL KNOW HIM.

(My first thought on awakening at midnight.)

By F. H. Murphy.

When his face shall shine upon me,
I shall know him, I shall know him;
And my soul shall praise his glory
With the praise I justly owe him.

Then my fear shall flee away,
And my joy increased shall be,
When with God my spirit is one,
And the Christ shall dwell in me.

Though with the cares of life encumbered
While I tread the path he trod,
Yet, within, his peace shall dwell,
And swell my heart with praise to God.

O what glory there shall be,
When on me his face shall shine,
And by wisdom I shall know him!
Then my heart no more shall pine.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

DRAW ME CLOSER.

By J. P. Nash.

In a sin-cursed world below,
May we in Thy likeness grow,
Let a trembling soul find shelter, peace and rest.
Oh, that I could seek Thy face,
Have a deeper work of grace,
And be drawn up closer to the Saviour's gentle breast.

While in sin, I saw no peace—
Only Jesus gives release;
So I sought the One a sinner should caress;
Oh, what joy came to my soul,
Under His divine control,
As I fell in weakness on His gentle breast.

I'm a sinner saved by grace,
Since I sought the Saviour's face,
And, while pressing on, there's nothing to molest;
I am happy day by day,
As I seek the Bible way;
Still, the soul cries, "closer to your gentle breast."

While eternal ages roll,
There is still a pleading soul;
Draw me closer to your gentle breast;
Oh, Thou Magnet Head above,
Draw me closer to your love,
On Thy bosom let me linger, finding rest.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The business meetings, held each day during the recent Assembly, presided over by the president, Rev. Leland Clegg, were very beneficial to all the delegates. It would be impossible to print reports from all the Leagues or even Districts, but some very splendid reports were given, showing that the work is progressing.

There were about nine 100% chapters, three in the Shreveport District, one in the Alexandria District, four in the New Orleans District.

Louisiana and its Leaguers are very proud of the fact that the first Master Epworthian Degree was awarded to Miss Laura Edwards, of the McDonoghville League. Miss Edwards is the only one in Southern Methodism who holds this degree. The second Efficient Epworthian Degree was also issued at the Assembly to Miss Thelma Cayard, of the Algiers League. Miss Edwards was the first to receive this degree and Miss Cayard second.

There were also 11 Christian Culture Diplomas issued at the Assembly, making a total of 62 for the State, and it is believed that this is the largest number of diplomas issued in any State.

Rev. James B. Grambling, President.

Mr. Edgar Cayard, Vice-President.

Miss Thelma Cayard, Secretary.

Miss Grace Cook, Treasurer.

Mr. Charles White, Era Agent.

Mr. George Kern, First Department Superintendent.

Miss Laura Edwards, Second Department Superintendent.

Miss Ruth Bryan, Third Department Superintendent.

Miss Julia Reid, Fourth Department Superintendent.

Mrs. Phillip Munch, Junior League Superintendent.

Mrs. R. H. Wynn, Life Service Superintendent.

Miss Consuelo Martinez, Advocate Reporter.

HEEDING THE GREAT HEAD OF THE CHURCH.

By Rev. Lee R. Sparks.

It would seem from certain discussions and articles occurring here and there, that in this day when so many winds of doctrine are blowing, we cannnot heed too earnestly the teachings of the Great Head of the church.

Some time ago I heard some of our preachers discussing certain "destructive critics" in a manner which, to me, seemed unbecoming for brethren in the ministry. For while all true ministers, as well as all true Christians, regret that there are harmful influences existing in this respect, isn't there a right and a wrong way to deal with them?

And may not earnest, well-meaning brethren, in aiming to do good, go about it in a way that may do harm? I fear all do not earnestly pray for the careful direction and help of him who said, "Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves."

Our bishops have spoken wisely and timely on this subject and their article is self-interpreting.

While adverse criticisms are coming from many sources, may it not profit us all to heed again such words as the following from "The Training of the Twelve," by Professor Bruce?

"Heavy as was the load of responsibility laid upon this disciple at this time, it did not amount to anything so formidable as that involved in being a visible Christ, so to speak, to the whole church. Neither Peter nor any other man is able to bear that burden, and happily only one is required to do so. The responsibility of even the highest in the church is restricted within comparatively narrow limits. The main business, even of the chief under-shepherds, is not to MAKE (capitals are mine) others follow Christ, but to follow him themselves.

"* * * Christians of active, energetic, and earnest natures are very apt to have very exaggerated ideas of their responsibilities, and to take on themselves the care of the whole world, and impose on themselves the duty of remedying every evil that is done under the sun.

"They would be defenders-general of the faith wherever assailed, redressers-general of all wrongs, curates-general of all souls. There is something noble as well as quixotic in this temper; and it were not the best sign of a man's moral earnestness if he had not at some time of his life known somewhat of this fussy, over-zealous spirit. Still it should be understood that the Head of the church imposes on no man such unlimited responsiblity, and that, when self-imposed, it does not conduce to a man's real usefulness. No one man can do all other men's work, and no one man is responsible for all other men's errors and failures; and each man contributes most effectively and surely to the good of the whole by conducting his own life on godly principles. The world is full of evils—skepticism, superstition, ignorance, immorality, on every side—a sight saddening to the extreme. What then am I to do? This one thing above all: Follow thou Christ * * * Let thy religion be reasonable, let those who will pin their faith to a fallible human authority, and place their religion in fantastic ritualisms and gross idolatries."

TO EXPECTANT MOTHERS

A Letter from Mrs. Ward Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her

Springfield, Ohio.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound proved a splendid medicine for me before my fourth child was born. With the first three I had been sick and weak, and had sick headaches twice a week. I couldn't keep enough food down to do me any good, and my work was left undone many a time. My sister-in-law told me to take the Vegetable Compound when I began to have the same old dreadful sickness and headaches and was so worn out. Since then I have only had two headaches, had a good appetite and scarcely lost a meal. I have a fine, healthy baby girl who has never had a sick day. The nicest part is that I am healthy, too. It did me a lot of good, and if I should ever have another baby I will take your medicine at once."—Mrs. BESSIE WARD, 1027 Park Avenue, Springfield, Ohio.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent medicine for expectant mothers, and should be taken during the entire period. It has a general effect to strengthen and tone up the entire system, so that it may work in every respect effectually as nature intends.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Sunday we were present at the fourth Circuit-wide Institute of the Bayou Pierre circuit. It met at Pleasant Valley Church. It was a fine meeting. The reports of the schools were good and the goals set were good; a Cradle Roll in each church; a Home Department in each church; the building and stove put in condition for winter by the next meeting; a committee to look after enlisting the adults in the Sunday schools. The program was unusually attractive and, all told, it was a very fine meeting.

The Jackson District Institute was fine. The District Conference got more information before the conference than any other district conference I ever attended. There were 22 preachers, 31 reports read, and 96 persons present at the District Institute. The work showed much progress. Out of 65 Sunday schools, 31 showed a net gain in Cradle Rolls, Home Department, and enrollment. If the rest of the schools report as they did last year, the Jackson District will show a very remarkable gain in its Sunday school work.

Seashore District Institute met at Wiggins, Thursday and Friday. This was a small meeting. The officers were elected and very fine goals set for the coming year:

Every Sunday school represented at the next meeting; a Program of Work in each school; Sunday School Day observed by each school; Clean-Up, Fix-Up Day observed by each school; Promotion Day observed by each school; to request each pastor to take one unit of Leadership Training.

This is a great program.

Pray for the work and the workers.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

MARVELOUS ACHIEVEMENT.

I speak of the erection of the new parsonage of LaBranch Street Church, McComb, Miss. For several years now the old parsonage of said church has been a real "sore" in the community and in McComb Methodism, but thanks to God, Rev. A. S. Oliver came along and began to pray, as is his custom, and there stands to-day, hard by LaBranch Street Church, the most commodious, handy, and up-to-date parsonage it was ever my privilege to see. I doubt there being in the Mississippi Conference a more convenient, useful, and comfortable parsonage. And it stands amid the beautiful, majestic oaks, and graces South McComb and McComb Methodism as a monument to the fervent prayers, indefatigable labors, apostolic faith, undaunted courage, and "dogged determination" of the present pastor of LaBranch Street Church. It would take the architect or the mistress of this parsonage to give a detailed description of the building, but when I went to see it neither was there, and I can give only a partial description of it.

It has a large porch in front, and on the side a large living room, with an eight-foot French door between this room and dining-room, a breakfast room, a kitchen, with a buffet in the dining-room, breakfast room, and kitchen, seven closets (two in the kitchen, for country produce, as Brother Oliver said), two screened porches, hot water connection, three bedrooms (one for the guest chamber), all in the midst of the most beautiful oak grove you ever saw. And there will be no heavy debt hanging over the church by Conference, as Oliver "tackles" most everybody and "extracts" the "long green" most every time.

Yes, the erection of this extraordinary parsonage is a marvelous achievement. May the Lord greatly bless the builder, the faithful ones who stood by him in the "heat of the day," and give the church the greatest year it has ever had!

We have closed at Pearl River Avenue the nearest a revival of the old type I have been in in years, led by Evangelist Earl B. Moll, of Meridian, with his singer, Prof. J. T. Vaughan. We closed on the night of the 24th, with the altar lined mostly with men. Will (D. V.) say more about it later. Want to wait for the aftermath.

Greatly encouraged,

J. A. WELLS.

GLINTS OF TRUTH.

By Rev. Lyman Carley.

"The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork." This being true of those things so far away from us, is it not also true of those things that are close at hand—the earth with its minerals and metals, its caves and mountains, its volcanoes and geysers, its earthquakes and cyclones, its rivers and oceans, its rain, snow and hail, its myriad forms of animal and vegetable life? When the Psalmist wrote the 148th Psalm he was seeing God in everything. Read what he wrote:

"Praise ye Jehovah, Praise ye Jehovah from the heavens: praise him in the heights. Praise ye him, all his angels: praise ye him, all his host. Praise ye him, sun and moon: praise him, all ye stars of light. Praise him, ye heavens of heavens, and ye waters that are above the heavens. Let them praise the name of Jehovah; for he commanded, and they were created. He hath also established them forever and ever: he hath made a decree that shall not pass away. Praise Jehovah from the earth, ye sea-monsters, and all deeps; fire and hail, snow and vapor; stormy wind, fulfilling his word; mountains and all hills; fruitful trees and all cedars; beasts and all cattle; creeping things and flying birds; kings of the earth and all peoples; princes and all judges of the earth; both young men and virgins; old men and children: let them praise the name of Jehovah; for his name alone is exalted; his glory is above the earth and the heavens. And he hath lifted up the horn of his people, the praise of all his saints; even of the children of Israel, a people near unto him. Praise ye Jehovah."

* * *

There are some kinds of vegetation that seem to be intended merely to produce humus and thereby give fertility to the soil. Some are to be ornamental, and some are to bear fruit for the use of man and beast. The Bible uses the picture of the fruit-bearing tree and vine to symbolize the altruistic Christian. The Teacher said: "I am the vine, ye are the branches." "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh it away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he cleanseth it, that it may bear more fruit." The condition of fruitfulness in Christian life is vital union with Christ. "Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; so neither can ye, except ye abide in me."

* * *

There are four seasons in the year—spring, summer, autumn and winter. These follow each other in regular sequence; yet the weather is such that rarely ever, if ever, can we name the day, without consulting the almanac, when one season ends and another begins. So it is in human life. Infancy, childhood, youth, maturity, etc., follow in regular order; yet no one can tell when one period ends and another begins. Does not this illustrate the usual experience of conversion, growth in grace, etc.? Are we not first babes in Christ before we become strong in the Lord and in the power of his might? "The earth beareth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear."

* * *

Menial service from others is needed at times by every human being, and he who is not willing to render this service does not have "the mind that was in Christ." He is lacking in one of the essential elements of true greatness. "Not so shall it be among you: but whosoever would become great among you shall be your minister (servant); and whosoever would be first among you shall be your servant (bondservant): even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many."

* * *

Three things at least are essential qualifications for personal evangelistic service. The first is knowledge—knowledge of the sinner's ruined condition and how it may be remedied. The second is the experience of having been lost as a sinner and then found by the Savior. The third is a heart for this kind of work. That is a heart of sympathy and love. The extent to which these characteristics dominate our lives will determine our interest, maybe our success, in evangelistic endeavors.

GREAT REVIVAL AT LEESVILLE, LA.

Haynes and Sewell, general evangelists of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have just closed one of the greatest revivals Leesville, La., has ever witnessed. These meetings were held under a large tent, with Rev. Lastie N. Hoffpauir, pastor, Methodist church, all denominations cooperating. There were more than one hundred conversions and reclamations. Old feuds were settled, married men and women made acknowledgments, confessing their sins, and were restored to the different churches, young men and young women gave up dancing, card playing, public bathing, and other sins, and begged the prayers of the church.

REPORTER.

A REVIVAL AT LAKE, MISS.

One of the most successful revivals ever held at Lake was begun here on June 3, and continued eleven days. Rev. W. A. Wilson, one of the North Mississippi Conference evangelists, known as "Swede Wilson," a converted engineer, did the preaching.

Brother Wilson runs a revival meeting somewhat, I imagine, as he used to run a locomotive—he believes in things moving, and he leads the way. He is not afraid to condemn sin in high and low places, but he does this in the spirit of the Master, and it does not fail to bring many hard sinners to repentance. I think it can be truthfully said of Brother Wilson, he is one who goes about doing good.

Our revival resulted in several conversions and reclamations. Fifteen united with the church, and at least twenty-five family altars were erected.

Our Sunday school has taken on new life, having doubled in attendance, and the roll has increased fifty per cent.

There have been organized three weekly prayer meetings, making in all five weekly prayer meetings for the community.

Our folks have begun to put things in order at the parsonage, having recently put down a deep well, and are planning to do other repairs. This shows our people have a mind to work, which, too, is one of the good fruits of a revival.

We can say, in the language of the Psalmist, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

S. N. YOUNG, Pastor.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

Missionary Conference.

The Woman's Missionary Conference for the Sardis District was held at Coldwater last Thursday and Friday. Too much cannot be said of the cordiality and hospitality of the people of that place, for they left nothing undone for the comfort and pleasure of the guests. The fact that Mrs. R. M. Sbort had accepted the position of District Secretary and was once more at the head of affairs, in itself assured a successful meeting. The program was well gotten up and splendidly carried out. Two Conference officers graced the occasion, Mrs. T. W. Clarke, of Tupelo, President; and Mrs. R. P. Neblett, of Durant, Superintendent of Juvenile Work. The latter had charge of the children's program on Thursday morning, and made a fine talk in the interest of this department of the organization. The children's part in the program could not have been improved upon.

Mrs. Clarke brought the Council message, and delivered it impressively on Thursday evening. The Pageant given by the Senatobia Juniors on the same occasion deserves especial mention; also the Quiet Hour talks by Miss Weissinger, Mmes. L. C. Short and R. P. Neblett, and Revs. T. H. Lewis and B. G. Whitehurst. Miss Brand, the Conference Rural Secretary, who is doing fine work on the circuit, was present and made several helpful talks.

Two invitatios were extended for next year's meeting, one from Charleston and one from Byhalia, the former place receiving a majority of the votes.

The entire conference was most inspiring and uplifting, and Sardis District owes a debt of gratitude to those who helped make it so.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

My Dear Mrs. Snelling: May I tell your of our program last night? Wo held our quarterly opening of our mite boxes for the Junior Missionary Society of Carrollton Avenue Church. With it we gave a splendid program. Several members of the Sunday school who were not members of our Juniors assisted us, and everybody pronounced it quite good.

The program was as follows:

Scripture lesson, Matt. 21:1-10, and prayer by Rev. Ellis Smith; solo, "The Children's Hosanna," Miss Doris Martinez; recitation, "This Night is Ours," Miss Julia Martinez; recitation, "So Will I," Masters Robert Crichlow and Hubert Ashman; song, "Somebody," Juniors; recitation, "Keep Looking for the Sunshine," Miss Charlotte Barker; recitation, "Hilda in Holland," Miss Roberta Melissa Jamison; story of Florence MacEacben, Mrs. Jacob Cohen, president Adult Auxillary; recitation, "The Little Shout," Master Robert Crichlow; play, "Miss America's Money," Juniors, assisted by members of the Sunday school; play, "Fishing in Mite Box Pond," Juniors and members of tbe Sunday school; song, "Child's Consecration Hymn," congregation; benediction, Rev. Ellis Smith.

The fish caugbt with mite box bait were made of gold paper, and each bore on reverse side a message from the Bible. Older folks and children alike thoroughly enjoyed the evening.

We have only eleven members of the Juniors, but all are good working members, and we have enjoyed the meetings each month. A party usually follows the lesson of the day, and a short program is always well rendered. Wish you could have been with us last night.

AUGUSTA DAVIS CRICHLOW,
Superintendent of Juniors.

NEWS FROM FRENCH WORK.

Each year all the young people and children of this section look forward to the "House parties" that are held at the MacDonell Wesley House duringn the summer months. These have meant a great deal in the training of leadership and in the development of Christian character, as well as in the sum total of fun to be had in Methodist circles here. It was a disapppointment to many to learn early in the spring that there would be no house parties this year. However, we soon began to hear rumors of a Daily Vacation Bible School, and much fun and study connected therewith, and we took heart and decided to "wait and see."

The Bible School is on. Tho first week has come and gone. You are eagar to hear all about it, and so I am writing this. The school is held in the new building of the MacDonell French Mission School, the opening and closing exercises in the chapel and the classes in the class rooms.

At 8:45 a. m. the cbildren march in and the opening exercises are conducted by Miss Hooper. The habit talks are given by Brother McCoy, and then comes the music period, conducted by Mrs. Thatcher and Miss Fauver. The classes then separate and file out to their class rooms, and after an hour of Bible study and correlated handwork they again assemble in the auditorium for the closing exercises, The Adult Bible class is taught by Mrs. L. M. White, the young people by Mr. Adrien Serax, the Juniors by Miss Dora Hooper, Primary by Miss Odessa Babin, and the kindergarten by Miss Gardie Kirkman, of Lake Charles.

The afternoons are given to recreation, but it has rained so steadily and the ground is so soaked that we have not had any games yet, but we hope for better success soon. A picnic and a Sunday school pageant have also been planned. Last week we met at the Episcopal church for a community sing, and one evening of this week will be devoted to a study of hymns, with picture slides illustrating them.

The attendance is good, the enrollment is now seventy-two, and we expect many new ones this week. Altogether, our Bible school has been very successful, and we feel sure that when it is closed many great things will have been accomplished for our Master.

ELSIE CANTRELLE,
Assistant Kindergartner.

FINE MEETING AT POLLOCK, LA.

With pleasure I will send some news of interest concerning our church work. For ten days, beginning June 5, Rev. W. W. Perry, P. C., conducted a meeting here, which resulted in re-establishing our cburch membership from 26 to 37—mostly reinstated. Pollock church has had since 1902 an enrollment of 122. Like the two other churches here, it was very promising during the saw mill's existence, but when the mill closed it became more of a missionary field. Brother Perry is a very earnest, energetic and consecrated minister, and he accomplished much by personal work.

We have the best Sunday school in town and tbe best and most comfortable building to worship in. We are looking forward to a great increase of population soon, as the oil enterprise is creating quite an excitement. The geologist has located here, and reports boring will commence first about eight miles northeast of here, near Little River, at an early date. We are also expecting same here on the old mill site.

Sunday night, 17th inst., I had the pleasure of worshiping with the Methodists in their beautiful church in Winnfield, Rev. W. H. Jordan, P. C. I consider they have some of the most prominent people of Winnfield as members. After services, came quarterly conference, with Rev. K. W. Dodson, presiding elder, in the chair. After the close of tbe business of the conference, Brother Dodson called for an open discussion of the comparison of the support and spiritual conditions of the churches of years gone by and of to-day. It was a good discussion, as all of us appreciated the fact that our methods to-day are more stable and reliable. I believe it was generally conceded that in years gone by the work was executed a good deal on the line of emotionalism—nowadays, educationalism. I believe it would be the most satisfactory and inviting to a sinner to mix emotionalism with educationalism, as Dr. H. C. Morrison believes in Amens outspoken and shouts occasionally.

A TESTIMONY.

The following letter was received by Rev. Charles Assaf, Syrian missionary employed by the Board of Missions of the Mississippi Conference. It bears testimony to the saving grace of God, and shows how God is using this man in the salvation of sinners:

"Dear Brother Assaf: Strange things happen in the working of Christ. He goes to the plains of Texas and picks up my brother and sends him to a far-off land, among strange tongues, to save the Christians from death at the hands of their enemies; and then sends a man from that same far-off land, speaking with a strange tongue, with a messsge from Christ to me, a sinner, that I might be saved.

"I received the message spiritually, but did not understand it until this man appeared and began to talk. I started to ask, 'Who sent you?' but looking into his face I read the message—Christ.

"I have been a silent partner with the devil so long I am afraid he will be very angry when he finds out that I have jumped the job, so I want to ask for help in time. I ask the prayers of all Christians for now and all time to come; also your prayers for my sick wife, a Christian and a Methodist.

NEWS FROM THE FRENCH MISSION.

Dear Brethren: I began a revival on June 17 and closed it on June 24. Thanks be to God, our Father, it was a successful one.

Sixteen years ago Rev. Martin Hebert dropped into this French section. All we French fellow-citizens were like the poor fellow in the parable of the Good Samaritan—we were robbed of our best and highest Christian privileges. But, thank God, some had come to our help. Our Christian citizens had not done as the priest and the Levite. They had come to our help.

In my revival, eleven who had been robbed of their highest privilege joined the church. Rev. Martin Hebert and Rev. Adrien Serix were there to help me; Rev. J. A. Knight preached two sermons; Rev. A. D. Martin preached also one afternoon—three joined under his sermon; Rev. R. E. Martin also gave us an ideal sermon; and I preached Sunday morning. But best of all, God was in our midst. We haven't had a revival like that one for a long time. When we had the Lord's Sacrament, eighty partook of it.

We want your co-operation in prayer and help.

Fraternally yours,

REV. G. A. LA GRANGE.

Houma, La.

A STORY.

Mother sent her boy—her only one—out into the world, to make his way. He must get an education. He must find his place as his father before him had done.

Mother's sacrifice was imperatively necessary. The slender family resources, with father gone to his rest, were all needed to care for two little girls.

And among mother's few admonitions was this one: "Joe, I don't ask you not to drink; but you must give me one promise. You must let your mother and your little sisters pay the cash for every drop of liquor that passes your lips. Don't let anybody else treat you. If you want a drink, just wire mother and I'll send the money even if we have to pawn our shoes and stockings."

Joe promised. He is now forty years old. He has never yet wired to that wise fond mother to sell her shoes to buy whisky for him.

Joe has boys of his own. And when he tells them this story, he adds: "You see, that was mother's shrewd way of bringing home the truth. With the average working man, it was whisky for himself or shoes for the family—but not both." — Christian Statesman.

Inventive Genius Makes Calomel Delightful

Most Valuable of Drugs, Now Purified and Refined From Its Nausea and Danger—"Calotabs" the Name.

The medicinal virtues of calomel are in no way connected with its nauseating and dangerous qualities, as is proven by the fact that the perfected calomel tablet, called Calotabs, is free from objectionable effects yet retains all of the liver-cleansing and system-purifying qualities of the old-style calomel. For biliousness, constipation and indigestion, the new de-nauseated calomel tablet is a practically perfect remedy.

To inspire public confidence in their discovery the manufacturers have authorized druggists everywhere to refund the price if the customer is not "perfectly delighted" with Calotabs. Sold only in trade-marked packages. Prices ten cents and thirty-five cents. One tablet at bedtime, with a swallow of water, that's all. No taste, no nausea, no griping, no salts. You wake up in the morning with a clean liver, feeling fine, and a hearty appetite. Eat what you please,—no danger.—(Adv.)

WONDERS OF LIFE.

By Margaret E. Sangster, in the Christian Herald.

The beauty of the evening sky,
The faint green of a tree,
The petals of a flower flung
Where passers-by may see . . .
These are the wonder things of life
That thrill the soul of me.

The splendor of a mother's eyes,
When gazing on her child,
The gesture of her gentle hand,
So graceful, slim and mild,
These are the things that linger when
Life's storm is keen and wild!

The early flowers of the spring,
The late ones of the fall;
The symmetry of slender spires
That seem supremely tall,
These are the gifts of One Who loves
And watches over all.

The haunting beauty of the glow,
That lies across the sea;
The veil of twilight, vaguely sad
With tender mystery . . .
These are the precious things of life
That thrill the soul of me!

CHRISTIAN OPTIMISM.

It is the existence of sin in the world, of course, that makes the realization of the Kingdom of God difficult. He is blind indeed who is not able to see sin and all the evils it produces in human life. It is the pessimist, though, who sees sin and not much else besides. The optimist sees sin as clearly as the pessimist; but he sees that where sin does abound, grace does much more abound, and he bends himself to the task of overcoming sin in the joyous assurance that he is able to accomplish the task through Him who is able to do all things. If Christians are engaged in a losing fight, they might as well put up their Bibles, close their churches, raze their educational institutions, stop their printing presses, write "Ichabod" above the door of their hopes, and surrender the world to the devil without more ado.

We cannot share the feelings of those whose jeremiads are filling the land to-day. We believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth; and in Jesus Christ his only Son our Lord; who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried; the third day he rose again from the dead, he ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead; we believe in the Holy Ghost; the holy catholic church; the communion of saints; the resurrection of the body; and the life everlasting. Holding this faith, we unreservedly, unequivocally, and invincibly believe that God is still the regnant power in the universe, that the Son of God still performs all his functions, that the Holy Spirit still moves in the world, that the church of God rests upon an everlasting foundation and that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. We were born of Christian parents, dedicated to God in infancy, reared in a Christian home, called to the ministry of the Son of God, educated and trained under the influence and by the example of godly men; we have experienced the sorrow of sin, the joy of sins forgiven, the blessedness of salvation, and have tasted of the peace which passeth all understanding. With this heritage, this faith, and this experience, we are unafraid.

The history of the church is such as to inspire faith and kindle courage. The enemies of Christ himself apparently prevailed, sending him to the cross and the grave; but he could not be bolden of death, and his resurrection marked his triumph over all his enemies. The Roman Empire persecuted the early Christians with all the ferocity of incensed paganism; but Christianity became the religion of the emperors themselves. The Gnostic and later heresies seemed for awhile to have split the church into irreconcilable fragments; but the heresies lost their hold and the Faith emerged sound and triumphant. In later days, religion seemed to have lost its purity and power, and the cold formalism of an ecclesiastical system mocked men's hunger and thirst after righteousness; but the Reformation brought again the joy of a vital faith. The corruption of a still later day seemed to have sapped the life of the church and to have made Christianity little more than a byword; but the Wesleyan movement revitalized it and made it the dominant force in society. From the beginning until the present, there have been forces operating against Christianity, and at times they have seemed to be in the ascendant; but always and inevitably these forces have been vanquished and truth has been established. The whole history of the Christian church teaches and enforces a lesson that we do well to remember to-day: TRUTH CAN NOT BE VANQUISHED. If Christ be the Son of God—and he is—all we have to do is to follow him as our leader and fear no evil.

  Of old that went and came?
But, Lord, thy church is praying yet,
  A thousand years the same.

We mark her goodly battlements,
  And her foundations strong;
We hear within the solemn voice
  Of her unending song.

For not like kingdoms of the world
  Thy holy church, O God!
Though earthquake shocks are threatening her,
  And tempests are abroad;

Unshaken as eternal hills,
  Immovable she stands,
A mountain that shall fill the earth,
  A house not made with hands.

MORAL AND SPIRITUAL VALUES.

In an address delivered by Hon. William G. McAdoo at the fortieth annual commencement of the University of Southern California, on June 21, we find the following significant statements:

"The fundemental problem of democracy is, therefore, the individual citizen. Success of democratic institutions must proceed from the individual. The continuous problem is the development of individual character and intelligence. Success in any democratic undertaking is possible only when the process of perfecting the individual is constantly pursued. We must create in every citizen that essential self-respect and self-restraint which, in a democracy, are the substitute for the external restraint imposed upon the citizen by the will of the autocrat under arbitrary forms of government. The development of the individual in a democracy is obtained mainly through the processes of common living, and in those processes there must be a constant cultivation of the highest moral standard and spiritual qualities, because those are the indispensable guarantees of Christian conduct and democratic citizenship. The struggle for citizenship is in itself the struggle for democracy, and the success of the struggle for citizenship means the success of the struggle for democracy. It is, primarily, the task of the church, because it is through the teachings of Christ as expounded by the church that the spiritual and moral forces of humanity and that quality of citizenship which is the secure foundation of democracy, can be produced. It is, secondly, the task of the schools and colleges, because it is through the diffusion of knowledge and the cultivation of the human mind that the citizenship of a democracy can be bulwarked against ignorance and intolerance.

"There has been a pronounced tendency within recent years to rely upon legislation as the cure for every evil and as the remedy for every problem. This ignores the fact that legislation has decided limitations and that the settlement of many of our most difficult problems rests, in the final analysis, upon the character and quality of the electorate, and that the character and quality of the electorate rest in turn upon religion and education. The great Washington said: 'It is impossible rightly to govern the world without God and the Bible.' The modern tendency is to lean more on legislation than on religion and education. Legislation represents all the frailties, imperfections, and expediencies of human nature. Too frequently remedial legislation, even where properly directed and well advised, falls into unfriendly hands, and a law, good in itself, is transformed into an evil agency through maladministration by unworthy and incompetent individuals. We cannot, therefore, pin our faith too strongly to legislation. We need less the creation of more laws than to change the hearts and conscience of men.

"Good citizenship begins with moral character, and the church is the great teacher. The religion of Christ and the Ten Commandments are the very foundation of Christian character and the very Gibraltar of democracy and democratic citizenship. In no field would the Ten Commandments work such a wholesome transformation as in the political life of the nation. * * *

"What a marvelous example this would set, and what a righteous citizenship would develop in this great democracy! And what would prove a more effective moral and political solvent than the universal observance of the Ten Commandments? There would be no wars if this great moral code were put into practice between individuals and nations. The unbearable burdens of armaments on land and sea, the crimes and wholesale

A GOOD SIGN IN MISSISSIPPI.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

A press dispatch reports a good sign of the times in Mississippi. It comes from Jackson, the capital of the State. It is as follows:

"Mississippi's five candidates for Governor are being seriously handicapped by the numerous revivals and camp meetings in progress throughout the State.

"On several occasions during the past week candidates have found revivals under way where they were booked to speak, and, in deference to these events, they promptly cancelled their engagements.

"Mississippi is having more revivals this year than ever before in her history, and the minds of the people seem to be fastened on things spiritual rather than matters political.

"As a result of this unusual condition of affairs, the five candidates have requested their campaign managers to make diligent efforts to compile a list of cities and towns where religious meetings are under way, and avoid booking these places."

It is certainly well for the State of Mississippi when the people manifest more interest in matters religious than in personal politics. That great commonwealth, in common with many of its sister States, has not been benefited in recent years by political campaigns and rancorous campaigners. On the contrary, from them has been gathered a bad harvest of bitter contentions between candidates, hurtful strife in communities, injurious agitations, and harmful legislation.

But religion is fundamental to public morality and general prosperity.

The skeptical Jean Jacques Rousseau, notwithstanding his skepticism and his anti-Christian sentiments said, "Never was a State founded that did not have religion as its basis." To the same purpose spoke Edmund Burke when he declared, "We know that religion is the basis of civil society and the fruitful source of all blessing and comfort in human intercourse."

The American nation is the confirmation and exemplification of these obvious and fundamental principles. That acute observer of American institutions, M. de Tocqueville, affirmed without qualification, that "religion gave birth to Anglo-American society."

Our great Republic was founded by faith, and more than once it has been saved by faith.

That notable movement known to history as "The Great Awakening," which began in the rural parish of Jonathan Edwards at Northampton, December, 1734, and which under the ministrations of George Whitefield was carried throughout all the original thirteen colonies, prepared the way for the Federal Union. It may be doubted that the Union would have been possible without it.

Dr. Leonard Woolsey Bacon, in his interesting "History of American Christianity," says: "In the glow of the revival the Continent awoke to the consciousness of a common spiritual life. Ranging the continent literally from Georgia to Maine, with all his weaknesses and indiscretions, and with his incomparable eloquence, welcomed by every sect yet refusing an exclusive allegiance to any, Whitefield exercises a true apostolate, bearing daily the care of all the churches, and becoming a messenger of mutual fellowship, not only betwen the ends of the continent, but between the Christians of two hemispheres. Remote churches exchanged offices of service. Tennent came from New Jersey to labor in New England; Dickenson and Burr and Edwards were the gift of the northern colonies to the college at Princeton. The quickened sense of a common religious life and duty and destiny was no small part of the preparation for the birth of the future nation."

Princeton College (now Princeton University) was one of the results of "The Great Awakening"; and there James Madison, "the father of the Federal Constitution," was educated. Other educational institutions were later fruits of the great revival, notably Dartmouth College, where Daniel Webster was educated.

Again, "The Great Revival of 1800" saved the American Union from the centrifugal tendencies which threatened it with dismemberment in the days of Aaron Burr.

"The Revival of 1858" reduced the shock of the war between the States, and made the work of reunion and restoration less difficult than otherwise it might have been. And "The Revival in the days of Moody and Sankey" did much to soothe the sorrows and soften the asperities of the people in the period following that ditressful era.

To such a source of help our people should now look in these days of disquietude and disorder which have succeeded the world war.

Religion—the revival of evangelical Christianity—is the only force adequate for the tranquilization of the restless world of to-day. Its restoration to peace and prosperity can come from no other power.

Everything else has been tried without availing anything equal to the dire needs of the hour.

The greatest statesmen of the world met at Versailles after the war, and in long continued conferences sought to find a remedy for the sad conditions which confronted them. After months of labor and study they brought forth the "Peace Treaty" and the "League of Nations." But partisan politics have marred the work of their hands, and poverty, pestilence, wars and rumors of war continue to disquiet a forlorn and war-worn world.

Meanwhile, our ears are tortured by the vague and vain declamations of social and political mechanics who cry for "the reconstruction of the world."

But it is regeneration, not reconstruction, which the world needs; and regenerative power cannot be found outside Christianity and apart from Christ, the Redeemer.

Statecraft has failed. The politicians are incapable of doing anything much beyond securing the office they hold, and talking endlessly of what they are going to do, but which they have never done and never will do.

The people of Mississippi, if we may trust the press dispatches, are acting with wisdom in turning away from the politicians and seeking God. The people of other States should follow the same wise course.

If another great revival such as "The Great Awakening" and "The Revival of 1800" should come to our country, it would solve more problems for our own and all other lands than anything else possible. It would set righteousness in the earth; and the area of peace in the world can never be wider than that of righteousness. The subjection of mankind to unrighteousness would be a state more dreadful than that of war. It is worse than idle to cry "Peace! Peace!" while arrogant and aggressive wrong seeks to dethrone God and oppress mankind.

There can be no real and enduring peace except under the reign of the Prince of Peace, who is also the King of Righteousness.

The only moral system which is suitable for the entire human race is that which Jesus taught, and men will not conform to that until they are filled with the heavenly life which He alone can impart to their souls. Obedience to the Sermon on the Mount is impossible without the indwelling spirit of the Savior who proclaimed that royal law of life and liberty.

A great, divine Redeemer is required for the salvation of our high-powered world, which is running to ruin from its excessive power and deficient purity. One who is "Mighty to Save" must be proclaimed to the nations and accepted by them, if its downward course is to be arrested.

The people of Mississippi do well in turning away from the politicians who have neither the ability nor the disposition to serve the country. They will do well to turn away also from the preachers (so-called) who seek in their petty pulpiteering to reduce the stature of Christ Jesus our Lord. Such men are worse than useless at a time like the present.

Let the Christ be magnified, not minified; and let people "crown Him Lord of all."

PAUL MARVIN BROWN.

By Rev. R. H. Wynn, D.D.

Paul Marvin Brown was born in Woodville, Miss., Aug. 26, 1870, the name which was given him by his parents suggesting the Christian atmosphere and Methodist traditions of the home. He was a son of the parsonage. His father was Rev. Thomas W. Brown, a well known member of the Mississippi Conference, and his mother, Mary P. Smith, of Cazenovia, N. Y.

The name of the father appears in the graduating class of Centenary College in the year 1850. He lived to old age, was a man of exalted mental and spiritual attainments, being, as the writer remembers, a sprightly conversationalist and specially gifted in public prayer.

There were five sons and seven daughters in this parsonage home, only two of whom are now living, Rev. J. Wilson Brown, of Baton Rouge, and Mrs. Horace Kellogg, of Boyle, Miss.

Paul received his preparatory education in various schools in Mississippi, a part of the time being under the direct tuition of his parents, who taught in them. He took his four years' college course in Centenary College, Jackson, La., receiving his degree in June, 1890.

In a revival service conducted by the students, he had a bright experience of conversion. The writer was present and distinctly remembers his joyous confession, followed by successful efforts to lead other boys to Christ. The writer well remembers hearing Paul's father tell of college revivals in his boyhood days, and, if I mistake not, father and son were both converted on the old Centenary campus.

Aug. 26, 1891, Paul was married to Miss Mary Alice Perry, of Jackson, La., a cultured young woman whose family connections had also been closely identified with Centenary College.

He had recently responded to the call to preach, and in December, 1891, he joined the Mississippi Conference, and the happy young couple began their itinerant ministry at Amite City, La., where they remained three years.

In 1894 the General Conference changed the boundary lines of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences so as to conform to State lines. At this time Brother Brown was transferred to the Louisiana Conference and was appointed to the historic Caddo circuit, with his home at Keatchie, where he served four years, 1895-98. During the first half of 1899 he served the Coushatta charge, accepting the presidency of the Johnson Collegiate Institute, Greensburg, La., in the middle of the year, and being officially appointed to this school during 1900-1901. This was one of the many heroic ventures of our church in the field of Christian Education.

He served the Bunkle charge during 1900-1904. During 1905 he was again engaged in school work, accepting a position at Milburn and serving in connection therewith the White's Chapel charge, returning for the year 1906 to Bunkie charge. During 1907-8 he served the Trout and Jena charge, at the expiration of which time he began a five years' period of service as presiding elder, three years of the Alexandria District (1909-11) and two years of the Shreveport District (1912-13). His appointment as presiding elder was much appreciated by the Conference, and these years of service were of great value to the church. In the year 1910 he served as a member of the General Conference which met in Asheville, N. C.

During the year 1914 he served as Secretary of Education, making a heroic effort to finance adequately Centenary College in Shreveport at a critical time in its history.

In 1915-16 he served as pastor in Natchitoches. In 1917-19 he was pastor in De Ridder, where he established a permanent home and resided up to the time of his death in Mineral Wells, Tex., June 13, 1923.

The period of the De Ridder pastorate was during the strenuous closing years of the world war. All the children of the home, three valiant sons, who were just completing their education in Centenary College, as had father and grandfather before them, were enlisted in service. There was tense anxiety in the heart of father and mother. The father consecrated himself to patriotic duties, and though he could not join his sons, determined to have full fellowship with them in "keeping the home fires burning." He was Parish Chairman of the Council of Defense, and labored incessantly by night and day, no doubt overtaxing his strength and laying the foundation for insidious disease. The youngest son, Ellis H. Brown, honor graduate from Centenary, splendidly furnished, died in Camp Colt, Pa. Another son was severely wounded at the front. Sorrow pierced his heart, but did not diminish his labors. During 1920 Brother Brown held the supernumerary relation on account of poor health, but, nevertheless, with his determination to preach, served as pastor in adjacent towns. In 1921-22 he served as pastor of Ludington circuit, and at the close of 1922 was again granted supernumerary relation.

His character and labors made a most profound impression on the community where he spent his last years. A handsome silver loving cup had been presented to him by the American Legion a few weeks before his death, and at the funeral service in De Ridder there were remarkable tokens of the great appreciation in which he was held as a public-spirited citizen.

Brother Brown had pulpit ability of a very high order, and, like his father, had much power in public prayer. He was a successful winner of souls. He was well-informed in world affairs, a careful student of Scripture, versed in theology and church history. His life as a Christian was a shining mark of fidelity. His deep sincerity was never questioned. He was unselfish and self-sacrificing, never "seeking his own," but always "the things of others." He was naturally sympathetic, drawing and holding his many friends with bonds of love. He had an undaunted faith that made him face impending death with perfect composure. He has heard the words, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

He is survived by Sister Brown, his companion during a ministry of 32 years, two sons, Major S. Perry Brown, of Beaumont, Tex., and Mr. Paul M. Brown, Jr., of Shreveport, an active official in the Noel Memorial Church.

HOLD THE LINE.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

I have just re-read the account of the great battle of Antietam, or Sharpsburg, by General John B. Gordon in his "Reminiscences of the Civil War." Who that heard him deliver his great lecture on the "Last Days of the Confederacy" can forget the thrill of his description! How his men held the front line in the most advanced position of Lee's army; how anxious Lee and Hill looked when they rode to that point, and saw the slender string of tattered Confederates facing McClellan's vast host; how he spoke aloud to be heard by his men lying silent in the grass, and said: "General Lee, we'll stay here till you tell us to leave"; how wave after wave of the bravest of the brave Northern soldiers marched up to that line as if on dress parade, staggered, and rolled back in defeat before the deadly fire of the Southern rifles. The sun went down on one of the bloodiest battles of that awful war; but its setting rays glanced on the hot rifles of Gordon's men still holding the line. Their fidelity was matched by equal courage on other parts of the field, and McClellan had enough. Lee's army was saved.

There are some who would shorten the theological line. Frightened by the formidable front of the foe, the flaunting banners, the braying trumpets, the audacious advance, they would compromise with infidelity, make terms with rationalism, and surrender doctrines that are cardinal in Christianity. And all who do not agree with them are "narrow," "reactionary," "opposed to progress," "sticklers for obsolete dogmas," and so on. In the Pentecostal Herald of June 27, Dr. H. P. Sloan gives an exposure of the radical changes in Methodist doctrine adopted by the Northern Methodist Church in the course of study for young preachers—the surest way to spread these new-fangled errors. Whoever would know what they mean by "shortening the line" should read Dr. Sloan's article. He summarizes, under sixteen heads, the changes officially approved and adopted in advanced Methodist theology. I don't profess to be a Solomon, neither am I a fool, and I say deliberately that if all of that is to be thrown overboard, what is left isn't worth having. Christianity becomes only one of a score of ethical codes, some of which may vie with it in excellence, and, perhaps, even surpass it in satisfying our human wants. I have studied these sixteen points in the new theology of our Northern brethren, as put forth in their course of study and summarized by Dr. Sloan, and they are all heads of the hydra of Rationalism. You remember the story of the Hydra; and since the Bible is mythology according to this "new religious (?) thinking," its stories are no better than these old classic myths. The Hydra was a huge water serpent that ravaged the country of Argos. His den was in swamp near the well of Amyone, where the people congregated. As often as they came to get the refreshing water, this huge snake, with nine gleaming heads, devoured them. After he had killed that old Nemean lion, Hercules undertook to destroy this formidable snake. He took his station at the well with his club, and when the monster appeared he beat off one of his nine heads; but instantly two shot up in its place. The snake was getting the best of it. But Hercules had no idea of "shortening the line." That snake had to go and stop destroying people who wanted water. So he sent for his nephew Iolaus. Iolaus heated irons in a fire, handed them to his uncle, and as fast as he smashed a head, he clapped a hot iron on the place, and burned out the germ. The middle head was immortal. The snake was killed, but Hercules made the mistake of burying that middle head. It has been coming back to life ever since in Rationalism, and the slimy and hideous creature, with its multiform heads, each hissing and threatening, lurks about the well of Salvation and destroys the souls of those who come to drink of its living water.

One thing is certain: if this new theology is true, the old was false. It is impossible to harmonize them. Those sixteen points in Dr. Sloan's summary contradict the faith of our fathers in its most fundamental teaching. Now the old theology created Christendom, built its cathedrals, churches, schools, colleges, universities, hospitals, orphanages, and all the benevolent institutions that have lifted the western races out of barbarism. The old theology filled this land with Christian homes, and from these homes there came a generation of the highest type of humanity the world has seen, giving us men like Washington, and Davis, and Lee, and Longfellow, and Lowell, and a thousand more. So if the old theology was false, all of this is the fruit of a lie. There is no use to wiggle, you can't get away from that conclusion. How absurdly inconsistent many of these present-day prophets are! They praise this time as the high water age of the Christian era; boast of our achievements; extol our superiority over former times; and then in the same breath tell us that the system of belief that created the things they praise was a falsehood! Do, pray, hand us the smelling bottle. Such absurdities make one sick. Open the window and let us have fresh air.

And what do they offer us in the place of the discarded faith of our fathers? Nothing under heaven but a rehash of Pagan speculations. Read Lecky's "History of European Morals," or any history of Rationalism, and you will find it all. Not a single new fact in any department of knowledge, history, philology, archaeology. This last, archaeology, confirms the old faith and gives no support to the new interpretation of the Bible.

Protestantism cannot survive the dissolution of the faith of our fathers. Modernism means the triumph of Roman Catholicism. The Roman Catholic Church holds the apostolic faith firmly. There is no quiver of uncertainty in her communion. We Protestants believe that in many ways she has corrupted the faith, and added to it; but she holds with unfaltering fidelity to the traditional faith. I have recently been reading some books by Catholic authors bearing on present day controversies, such, for instance, as "Evolution and Social Progress, by Joseph Husslein, S.J., Ph.D." and the impression produced on my mind, an impression that lies quietly folded away in the cerebral cellars, is that if Rationalism prevails in our Protestant churches, the truth is safe in the Roman Catholic Church. No, I am not going to turn Catholic. "I'm Methodist born, and Methodist bred; I'll be a Methodist when I'm dead"; but multitudes will become Catholics, because there is nothing to the negative Christianity of Modernism. Let us stop this dallying with a mortal foe. "If Jehovah be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him"; and as of old, "the God that answers by fire, let him be God"! The God of the traditional faith has always answered by fire, and is answering still. Let us preach the old faith with a new resolve that it shall not perish. Let us preach it not in an apologetic tone, but with the apostolic certainty of its everlasting truth. It may be such a fight as Gordon's thin gray line put up on the hills at Sharpsburg; but, like those invincible Confederates, let us stay by it till the Lord of life bids us leave.

Mansfield, La.

OUR HEROES.

Here's a hand to the boy who has courage
To do what he knows to be right.
When he falls in the way of temptation,
He has a hard battle to fight.
Who strives against self and his comrades
Will find a most powerful foe;
All honor to him if he conquers,
A cheer for the boy who says "No"

There's many a battle fought daily
The world knows nothing about;
There's many a brave little soldier
Whose strength puts a legion to rout.
And he who fights single-handed
Is more of a hero, I say,
Than he who leads soldiers to battle
And conquers arms in the fray.

Be steadfast, my boy, when you're tempted
To do what you know is not right;
Stand firm by the colors of manhood,
And you'll overcome in the fight.
"The right" be your battle cry ever
In waging the warfare of life;
And God, who knows who are the heroes,
Will give you the strength for the strife.

—Eben E. Rexford.

NEWS FROM THE DISTRICTS.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Meridian District Notes.

Many of our pastors are now busy in revival work, either on their own charges, or assisting other brethren. The outlook for revivals is encouraging.

* * *

The District Epworth League work is in a prosperous condition. A new Senior League was recently organized at Bucatunna, and plans are on foot for new organizations at other points.

* * *

Brother Oakley, of the Porterville circuit, is opening work at Narkeeta, a small saw-mill town on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. The mill management is assisting largely in the erection of a house of worship, which will soon be ready for occupancy.

* * *

Since our last report, an excellent meeting was held at Crandall, on the De Soto charge. Brother Dan Kelly did the preaching, and the results were very gratifying. There were fifty accessions to the church. The most of these were on profession of faith.

* * *

The Gipsy Smith union meeting was a great blessing to Meridian and surrounding territory. Many were converted, reclaimed, or otherwise spiritually helped. A considerable number were added to the various co-operating churches on profession of faith. Methodism shares largely in the fruits of this revival.

* * *

Sunday school work is making progress in the district. Sunday School Day is being generally observed. New schools have been organized at the following places: McKinnon school house, on the Pachuta circuit; Pleasant Grove, on the Waynesboro circuit, and Oakland Heights, Meridian. The latter is in connection with the Fifth Street charge.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Baton Rouge District Notes.

In spite of floods and rain, swollen streams and fearful roads, the work of the church within the Baton Rouge District moves forward in a most satisfactory way. The preachers are all faithfully at work in spite of these discouraging obstacles, and the good people are responding most commendably.

* * *

The pastors on and along the Illinois Central Railroad are planning for a standard teachers' training school, to be held at Hammond as soon as all arrangements for same are perfected. Great enthusiasm is shown by the pastors, leaders and teachers in Sunday schools in the several towns in reach of the site of the school, and the prospects are bright for a splendid institute.

* * *

Our last quarterly conference at Tickfaw showed that Murphy and his good people are pushing ahead in spite of a greatly scattered work and distances of churches, with too much rain, and roads that are incomparably rougher than the famous "rocky road to Dublin." Rough or smooth, good or bad, the indomitable Murphy gets there with fodder and grain for the sheep.

* * *

Several of the preachers of this district took in the Seashore Divinity School at Biloxi—Drs. Crisler and Miller as instructors, and Waltman, Newsom, and Watson as students. Brother Selfe drove over for a stay of a week or so, but was called home after a day's attendance. All reported that the school and the lectures were never better.

* * *

Rev. A. J. Coburn and his noble flock at Kentwood are moving ahead in all departments of church activity and the church and Sunday school there are in fine condition. This pastor and his good people entertained our recent district conference, and it was most admirably done. Their generous hospitality and Christian fellowship are thankfully remembered and warmly praised throughout the entire district. We had a great district conference this year, made such by the splendid attendance and interest of both preachers and laymen.

* * *

A. D. Brulet is making good on the Gonzales mission. It is a most difficult field of labor, but Brulet is equal to the task. He and his good people will soon build a new church at New River, where at present they have none.

* * *

We recently held a splendid quarterly conference at Alford's Chapel, on the Denham Springs work, where A. L. McQueen is pastor. In spite of rain and mud and the day being Saturday, there were over a hundred present. The reports were very encouraging, showing unusual interest in the work of the Kingdom. McQueen, with the help of a few, has overhauled and repaired the parsonage, putting it in habitable shape. A most sumptuous dinner was served on the grounds at this quarterly conference.

* * *

B. W. Waltman, on the Natalbany and Pine Grove charge, is happy in his work with those splendid Methodists in Tangipahoa and St. Helena Parishes. He held his third quarterly conference at Montpelier, Sunday, June 24, at 11 a. m., and preached to a large congregation, though it rained all day and the people had to come over almost impassible roads and through a steady downpour of rain. We had a good conference and dinner on the grounds (in the church), and it was an elaborate spread, too, that was a happy commentary on the culinary skill of the good ladies of that little town. Ye elder felt abundantly compensated for a drive of seventy-five miles through rain and mud as he ate of this great dinner, and enjoyed the good fellowship of those splendid folk.

* * *

Last Sunday, July 1, we were with Brother Gunn in the progressive little city of Bogalusa, preaching in the morning to a large congregation and enjoying a fine music service at the evening hour, the occasion being the installation of the fine new pipe organ donated to the church by Mrs. Charles W. Goodyear, of New York City, as a memorial to her late friend, Mrs. Elizabeth Sullivan. This writer is no judge of music or musical instruments, but this fine organ has all the appearance and sound of an exceptionally great instrument, and it will doubtless prove a great blessing to the church at Bogalusa. The church at Bogalusa is wide awake to all the interests of the Kingdom, and is right to the front in everything that appertains to the upbuilding of the church. This is a splendid station, and Gunn appreciates it and is showing himself a competent leader of this progressive and rapidly growing church.

* * *

I could make happy mention of the work and zeal of the rest of the faithful pastors and people if this district if I had the space, but I have already claimed more space than is due me, so more anon.

J. W. LEE, P. E.

Alexandria District Notes.

Rev. H. B. Thomason, of the Colfax circuit, was assisted at Tioga in a revival meeting by Rev. C. K. Smith, of Pineville. Brother Smith led in the singing and also did the preaching. A number united with the church and much good was done.

Brother Thomason was called away from the meeting to Mrs. Thomason, who sustained severe injuries from a fall.

* * *

The work of the Boyce charge moves along well under the leadership of Brother E. L. Cargill. He reports good interest in the Boyce Sunday school, with Brother J. A. Ingram as superintendent.

* * *

At Pineville, Mr. T. F. Glaze is superintendent of the Sunday school. This school has been reorganized, and is going forward in a commendable way.

* * *

Rev. H. B. Hines is diligent in labors on his difficult charge. He is in the midst of Romanism, where religious standards are difficult to maintain, as we understand them. The salary of preacher and presiding elder is well up on this charge.

* * *

Mrs. A. D. George, wife of our pastor at Bunkie, has been in the Baptist Hospital here for three weeks and more, from injuries sustained in an automobile accident. She has been operated upon and a part of the bone in her shoulder removed. At this writing she is doing nicely.

Rev. J. H. French, of the Marksville charge, who was in the same car with Mrs. George when she was injured, also had a rib broken. He is recovering.

The work of the Marksville charge is making substantial progress under the leadership of Brother French. He is in favor with his people.

* * *

Rev. D. B. Boddie, of Glenmora, has been away for a vacation of several weeks. Brother Boddie has been in poor health for some weeks, but is now recovering. He has been passing through great trials recently. In the early part of May he lost his father. Then in the early part of June his father-in-law passed away. In the midst of these great sorrows he has been in sickness himself. The people of his church are very sympathetic, and are endeavoring in every way to assist him in his work.

At the Glenmora quarterly conference, on the evening of June 24, Clarence White, president of the Epworth League at that place, was recommended for license to preach.

* * *

Mr. T. W. Holloman, superintendent of the Alexandria Sunday school, has been recently engaged in teaching a course on Sunday School Administration in the Monroe District Standard Training School at Winnsboro.

* * *

Mr. H. P. Miller, of Alexandria, has been filling the pulpits of some of the brethren when they have been absent recently. He has done this most acceptably.

W. L. DOSS, JR., P. E.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Notes from Columbus District.

We are well into the third round of quarterly conferences, and find things moving along fairly well at every point. The continued rains have caused some of our people to get just a bit "blue," but with the clearing away of the clouds we hope to find a better spirit among our people.

* * *

We are nearing the revival season for most of our churches, and are glad to report that the preachers have all made arrangements for their meetings. We are going to try out a new plan in our revival work at several points this year. We have planned, on some of the large circuits, to hold several meetings at the same time. We realize that we will lose something by not having the pastor present all the time, but we hope this campaign for the entire charge, all planned and carried out the same time, will more than offset the absence of the pastor. The pastor, of course, is to move from one meeting to the other, putting his time where it is most needed. Another departure from the old plan, for the large circuits, we are planning to group several churches and hold a two weeks' meeting. We have arranged for four such group meetings in the District. We have planned group meetings for the following charges: Mashulaville and Chester, Rev. W. M. Campbell to do the preaching for both meetings; High Point, Rev. W. L. Storment to do the preaching, and McCool, Rev. S. H. Caffey to do the preaching

We ask the prayers of all the brethren for the success of these meetings.

* * *

Revivals have recently been held at Artesia and Noxapater. Brother W. A. Wilson did the preaching at Noxapater, and Brother V. C. Curtis at Artesia. The writer had the pleasure of attending a few services at both places, and we are glad to say we found that the strong gospel messages were being well received. No doubt the pastors will make a separate report of these meetings. Brother J. R. James announces that the Baptists and Methodists will hold a union meeting at Mayhew, beginning the third Sunday in July, Brother T. H. Lipscomb to do the preaching. Brother Dorman announces that the churches of Louisville have arranged for a union meeting to begin some time during July. A Presbyterian evangelist is to do the preaching.

* * *

We are putting special emphasis this quarter on revivals and evangelism, but are glad to report that the brethren are also looking after the finances. The reports this quarter thus far have been fairly good at most places. Flower Ridge, Noxapater charge, takes off the blue ribbon by reporting everything, pastor's salary and Conference collections, in full at the third quarterly conference. When a steward from one of the other churches asked how this was done, a Flower Ridge steward replied, "Just get your people to be honest with God and pay him the tithe." In addition to paying all their assessments in full, these good people pay to all the calls of the church. They are planning to build Sunday school rooms to their church right away. This church has been getting one afternoon appointment each month for a long time. Since they began tithing and found out what they can do, there is talk of asking for half time next year. This but illustrates what could be done in our churches if more of our people would adopt God's plan for the support of his Kingdom.

* * *

Work is now under way on the interior of First Church, Columbus. This work, when completed, will cost about $5,000. The preacher and his family at Shuqualak will soon be installed in the handsome bungalow parsonage now being built.

We hope to give reports from the rest of the Sunday schools next month.

A. T. McILWAIN, P. E.

JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Jackson District Conference of the Mississippi Annual Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was held at Bolton, Miss., June 25-27, 1923. Rev. E. K. Means, pastor of Galloway Memorial Church, Jackson, Miss., preached the opening sermon, Monday evening, June 25, at the close of which Rev. M. L. Burton, presiding elder, called the conference to order. The roll was called, a secretary elected, and chairmen of certain committees announced. The work of the conference was very much simplified and greatly expedited by means of a set of questionnaires which the presiding elder had prepared and previously sent out to all the pastors. These questionnaires were assigned to appropriate committees, and by means of the several committee reports the conference was able to get a broad and comprehensive view of the work of the church in the entire district. The report showed the Sunday school work to be prosperous. There are 68 church buildings and 65 Sunday schools in the district. Harrisville circuit reported a church membership of 310, and a Sunday school membership of 320; Millsaps Memorial, a church membership of 62, and a Sunday school membership of 79. Vaughan circuit has three churches and four Sunday schools. The report of the committee on the state of the church showed that 72% of the membership attended preaching services. There were reported 138 additions to the church on profession of faith, and 189 by certificate. According to Government statistics, there are over 10,000 white people above 12 years of age out of the church in the territory of the Jackson District. This is the church's challenge for greater evangelistic effort.

The financial report indicated clearly that we are too prone to put off until the end of the year what we could easily and well do in the early part of the year, or proportionately through the year. Eight charges reported nothing paid on the Conference collections; however, some of these reported the benevolences provided for. One charge reported 50% paid, another 45.5% paid, and one, a four-point country circuit, 60.5% paid on the collections. Five charges reported as not having made assessments for their pastors. A total of 20% paid on the Conference collections and $15,344.70 on the pastors' salaries shows our financial standing at this time. As compared with other figures, this shows advancement.

Dr. G. L. Morelock, General Secretary of the Board of Lay Activities, was present and brought us a great message, at 11 o'clock on Tuesday, on the laymen's work. It was informing, inspiring, thrilling, and delivered in a most forceful manner. The Committee on Lay Activities brought in a very comprehensive report on the work of the laymen as gathered from the pastors' reports. They made seven recommendations for the specific use of the laymen in the work of the church: 1. To increase attendance at Sunday school and all church services; 2. To get information to our people so as to promote the Centenary and Christian Education movements; 3. To enthuse the 10% of our members who work, and increase the number of workers; 4. To increase the number who give from the present average of 25% of our members to a much more creditable number, and that a campaign of tithing be carried on; 5. To hold services in the absence of the pastors, and thus develop the leadership of the laymen; 6. To earnestly and systematically evangelize our children in the Sunday school and our people in every walk of life; 7. To put through a religious survey of our people who are not affiliated with any Methodist church, and those who are not members of our church, but who should join us.

The report of the Committee on Education showed that 13 sermons had been preached on "the call to preach"; that 106 students were in college from the district last session; 13 pastors reported that the public school teachers in the bounds of their charges were Christian, and a majority reported that they helped in church work; 18 pastors said that they visited and read the Bible in the public schools. Thirty-one Epworth Leagues were reported in the district. The interest in the Epworth League is increasing.

The Committee on Missions reported 32 Woman's Missionary Auxiliaries, and 257 copies of the Missionary Voice, 331 copies of the Conference organ, and 128 copies of the General organ taken. The pastors are doing all they can to supply the unoccupied places near their charges with preaching. The committtee recommend that the stronger, well organized churches take Home Mission specials in mission charges nearby, that they may act as helpers to their weaker brethren; also, that the station pastors endeavor to spend two or more weeks a year on the country circuits, thus giving us the benefit of their larger experience.

The Rev. Charles Assaf, a Syrian, but a local preacher in our church, employed by the Board of Missions, is doing a splendid work, not only among his own people, but among us wherever he has a hearing. We commend him to our pastors and people everywhere.

The attendance was good, there being 114 recorded as present. The entertainment and hospitality given the conference by all the people of Bolton were everything that could have been wished for. Every visitor had the best home in town. Rev. H. M. Johnson, the pastor, made an ideal host. Brother Burton, our very efficient presiding elder, kept the business of the conference steadily moving until the end was reached. There was not an idle or a dull moment during the entire sesion of the conference. No interest of the church was neglected or overlooked.

The conference was held in the new and beautiful brick church just completed. This church was made possible through the gift of Brother and Sister J. L. Gaddis, who took this method of building a memorial to their son, who met his death by accident a few years ago. The church will be known as "Jack Gaddis Memorial."

Two splendid young men were licensed to preach, Isaac Hunter Hollingsworth, of Yazoo City, and Martin Ross Frazier, from Benton. Both of them were recommended for admission on trial into the Annual Conference. O. H. Wingfield was elected District Lay Leader, and J. A. Lindsey, and C. S. Bennett were elected Associate District Lay Leaders.

The delegates elected to the Annual Conference were: J. T. B. Berry, W. H. Bradley, J. A. Lindsey, Carley Hilton, I. O. Brown, W. M. Lofton, Sam Newman, and G. P. Cook. The alternate delegates elected were: H. L. Clark, J. R. Bane, and Mrs. J. C. Wood. J. L. Ferguson was elected assistant secretary. Camden was chosen as the next place for the meeting of the district conference.

The preaching was done by Dr. E. K. Means, and Prof. C. A. Bowen, of the Chair of Religious Education, Millsaps College. Both preached splendid sermons. The work of the conference being finished, the minutes were read and approved, and the conference adjourned with the benediction by the presiding elder.

RECOMPENSE.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Under the sward in Flanders field,
Field sodden, scarred and torn,
Red ruin of war such harvest yield,
Harvest of sons to mothers born,
Tears and heartbreak for these,
Neath red poppies and trees,
Fanned by scented breeze,
Rest, soldier, rest.

Oh waste of life so young and strong!
The grizly grist of war ground out.
Oh mournful note of saddest song!
Cans't never heal or bring about
Balm sweet enough for such loss.
Though poppies blow above the cross
That mark the place
In narrow space
There lies the best.

Though throstles pipe from ruined wall
And larks sing free in joyous strain,
And o'er these graves the glad notes fall,
Yet none can hush the sad refrain
That moves in heart of mine,
A deep low note of love divine,
A symphony so true
As Heaven's blue,
Soldier, peace be thine!

Oh, lonely heart, abide your time,
In patience calmly wait the day.
Sometimes in joy love will entwine,
In other land not far away,
About the form, now gone
From sight, to far beyond
The poppies reddened glow;
There we shall know.
Soldier, Life divine!

EDITED BY LUTHER E. TODD, SECRETARY

Board of Finance, M. E. Church, South.

INTERESTING FACTS CONCERNING THE "FORGOTTEN MAN."

ESTATE OF MRS. MOSES U. PAYNE.

On May 25, 1923, I received a letter from Dr. S. P. Cresap, a member of the Board of Finance, stating that the will of Mrs. Moses U. Payne, lately deceased, contained a paragraph wherein she left to the Board of Finance of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, $1,000 for the Superannuate Endowment Fund. The will was dated March 15, 1923, and probated June 20, 1923. Dr. Cresap and his brother-in-law, M. M. Payne, are the executors of the will. This bequest will in all probability be paid at an early date. The good woman who so thoughtfully remembered the "forgotten man" in the manner stated was the wife of Moses U. Payne, whose liberal contributions to the Church throughout his life were such as greatly to hearten those of us who have in hand the work of our great denomination. It would not be possible to write the history of Southern Methodism in the State of Missouri without repeatedly referring to the benefactions of this princely layman. His name and the names of the members of his family will never perish from the earth, for they are indelibly inscribed in the construction of many prominent church buildings and on the records of various Boards to which have been committed the stewardship of beneficent enterprises.

ESTATE OF MRS. ALICE J. WILSON.

On May 15, 1923, a letter was received from Mr. J. F. Moore, cashier of the Bank of Davie, Mocksville, N. C., in which he stated that the will of the late Alice J. Wilson provided that the executors of her estate, after paying all other bequests of the will, should pay any excess of the estate to the Board of Finance of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at 510-513 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo., to be placed by them in the Superannuate Endowment Fund for the benefit of the "forgotten man." This fund was bequeathed by Mrs. Alice J. Wilson in memory of her husband, Rev. W. C. Wilson, deceased. Mrs. Wilson died in February, 1923. The letter from Mr. Moore also stated that the estate would probably be settled in twelve months and that the amount coming to the Board of Finance would depend on the sale of certain real estate. It is thought that the "forgotten man" will realize from this bequest about $5,000. What a joy it is to know that the people are beginning to consider the needs of the "forgotten man" when they write their wills! May this splendid example be followed by many others who have reached a period in their lives when they must give an account of their stewardship!

ESTATE OF MRS. LOUISIANA PERKINSON.

On May 16 a check for $142.50 was received from Charles H. Gerbig, Secretary and Treasurer of the Colonial Trust Company, Baltimore, Md., the same representing payment in full of $150 bequeathed to the Superannuate Endowment Fund by the late Mrs. Louisiana Perkinson less $7.50 collateral inheritance tax. Here is another evidence of the fact that Southern Methodist people generally are giving attention to the needs of the "forgotten man" when they write their wills. There should be such a passion for this cause in the hearts of all our preachers as would move them to be constantly on the alert looking to have it represented in the scores of wills that are being written daily. Why should it not be so? Can one think of any beneficent cause before the Church that has a better right to be remembered? Its appeal is one that grips the heart and soul as well as the judgment of those benevolently inclined. Also money given to the Superannuate Endowment Fund is never spent as to principal. The income from it is annually distributed among the claimants on the fund. The principal stands intact forever, and thus it becomes an everlasting memorial to those who give it. What sort of monument could be placed at the head of anyone's grave that could better perpetuate in the thinking of succeeding generations anyone's life and character than a bequest to the Superannuate Endowment Fund?

HE IS NO LONGER A "FORGOTTEN MAN."

On May 22, 1923, there was received from Mrs. Lydia H. Roper, of Norfolk, Va., bonds in the amount of $5,000, six per cent, payable semi-annually, which were sent as a gift to the Superannuate Endowment Fund on the annuity plan. It was the desire of the donor that an annuity bond be issued to Rev. W. F. Hayes, superannuate, and his wife, the semi-annual annuity to be the amount of income received by the Board from the bonds. This annuity will amount to $300 a year, and it is to be paid to Brother Hayes or his wife as long as either of them lives. When they are both deceased, the $5,000 will automatically pass to the General Superannuate Endowment Fund. Mrs. Roper further stipulated that this beautiful thing that she has done for these worthy claimants is not in any sense to be considered by the Church as a reason for reducing the Church's regular annual allowance to these claimants from other sources. She very positively states that she desires the annuity going to them from the bonds to be an amount in addition to what they have a right to receive from the Church.

This is one of the most beautiful acts that has come under by observation. I have repeatedly called attention to this method of making provision for our claimants. There are thousands of people in Southern Methodism each of whom is able to do a similar thing for some superannuate and his wife. Surely it will be a happy day to Brother Hayes when this annuity bond made possible by Mrs. Roper is placed in his hands. The annuity which he will receive semi-annually, together with the amount going to him as a claimant in regular channels from the Church, should make him and his wife very comfortable until God shall say: "It is enough, come up higher."

SOMETHING THAT STIRS MY BLOOD.

It is very heartening to have so many evidences of the fact that the lay members of the Church are squaring themselves to do their best in the special effort for superannuate endowment. I receive letters daily from prominent laymen that encourage me to believe that they will apply themselves enthusiastically to the task of raising the ten million dollars for this cause. May I quote for the benefit of my readers an extract from a letter now before me from W. H. Wiseman, District Lay Leader of the Dickson District, Tennessee Conference, as follows: "The superannuated preacher should no longer be called the 'forgotten man.' He is not forgotten but has been neglected and should be called the 'neglected man.' The cause of this man is uppermost in the minds of most laymen. We have long sought an opportunity to do something really worth while for these men. God speed the day when we will do no less for him who paved the way for our great Church than is being done by the 'heartless corporation' for its aged. You can depend on the laymen to enter heartily into this movement. We can, and we will."

A THOUGHT FOR EVERY DAY.

The preachers of the Church who are now active in her pulpits should keep themselves constantly reminded of this burning truth: "Every active preacher of whatever age is a 'forgotten man' in the making."

THREE KINDS OF GIVERS.

Some witty person once said: "There are three kinds of givers—the flint, the sponge, and the honeycomb."

To get anything out of a flint, you must hammer it, and then you can only get chips and sparks.

To get water out of a sponge, you must squeeze it; and the more you squeeze, the more you will get.

Some people are stingy and hard. They give nothing away if they can held it. Others are good-natured. They yield to pressure; and the more they are pressed, the more they will give. A few delight in giving without being asked at all. Of these the Bible says: "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."—The Christian.

In true worship, the soul of man can have but one attitude toward material things, and that an unselfish and beneficent one growing out of a desire to gather up those material things in one grand, supreme oblation to God in worship.—Henry Lowndes Drew.

SLIGHTLY MUDDLED.

'Twas midnight on the ocean,
  Not a street car was in sight;
The sun was shining brightly,
  And it rained all day that night.

'Twas evening and the setting sun
  Was rising in the west;
The little fishes in the trees
  Were huddling in their nests.

'Twas a summer day in winter,
  The snow was raining fast;
A barefoot boy with shoes on
  Stood sitting on the grass.

While the organ peeled potatoes
  Lard was rendered by the choir,
While the sexton rang the dishrag
  Some one set the church on fire.

"Holy smoke!" the preacher shouted;
Now his head resembled heaven,
  For there is no parting there.

INTERCESSION.

When the Bible-study class dispersed after its morning session, Margaret Ryder sought out her room-mate and suggested a walk round the campus. Evelyn Dodge glanced at her watch.

"Little juniors must be indulgently treated, I suppose," she replied, whimsically, "and I have twenty whole minutes to spare before the history lecture. How many times round, Margie?"

"O, two or three, please! I'm troubled about something. I need you to help me think."

"It was our topic in class this morning—intercessory prayer. Dr. Lawson spoke of it as if it were an essential part of the Christian life, and the class seemed to take the same attitude. But I don't believe in it. Do you, Evelyn?"

The older girl picked up a fallen leaf and studied its rich coloring before she answered: "Yes, under certain conditions. Why not?"

"It isn't reasonable!" protested Margaret. "If the relation between God and ourselves is really personal, like that of father and child, as Christ taught that it is, then why should any one need another to pray for him?"

"I felt that way about it until a year ago," she answered, slowly. "And then, during those months when I was so desperately sick and the odds seemed all against me, I had a strange experience. I think I had always had a strong personal faith since childhood, and believed that nothing could rob me of it. But when the pain and fatigue of those long months had weakened and unnerved me, I little by little lost all my desire to live—all my interest in life. I am sure that I still believed passively that there is a God, and that he is an all-wise and loving God; but I seemed to have lost all sense of personal communion with him—all real consciousness of his presence."

She paused, looking out toward the lake that sparkled in the October morning sunlight, and Margaret waited in silence.

"Then one day Dr. Stanley called at the hospital to see me. He had always appealed to me as a college pastor, although I had never known him very well as a friend. I was too weak to say much, but he somehow grasped the fact that I was being swallowed up by the darkness; and before he left he knelt at my bedside without permission or apology and offered up a prayer that I shall never forget; it was so simple and fervent, so intimate—so powerful. As I lay there wonderingly—just listening—tears crept down my face, and that little sick room suddenly became a shrine. At least one of the meanings of intercession became very clear to me. I was all out of tune with God and with life. He was in close communion with God and in ardent touch with life. So ever since that hour I have thought of earthly intercessors as tuners, whose sensitiveness to God's voice and contact with human hearts enables them to bring the two into harmony. I know it is not by any means a full answer to your question, but it satisfied me."

Margaret pressed her friend's hand affectionately. "It satisfies me, too," she said, gratefully. "You are always such a first aid to doubters, Evelyn!"—Youth's Companion.

WHAT MAKES A MAN?

Denny curled one of his little legs underneath his small body and dropped his rosy cheek into his hand.

"'Course," he said, "there's the old box to fill. Always is an old wood-box to fill when Saturday comes. If ma only thought so, she could fill it herself and let me do something that'll make a man. Ben Lee says it's doing stunts and going fishin', and like that, makes you a man."

Then suddenly Denny straightened his shoulders. "I'm going to do something toward being a man," he said. "I'd like to ask pa the best thing to do, 'cause he'd know. I s'pose I might's well go fill that old box."

When he reached the kitchen, he found his mother and Aunt Sue there. The very first words that his mother said were: "Denny, I wish you'd hurry with that wood, and then Aunt Sue wants some peas. You'll have to get them for her, dear."

So, when the wood-box was full, Denny gathered the peas and started back to the house. Aunt Sue started to meet him and smiled, as she said: "Mother's half-sick, Denny boy. Try to help her as much as you can to-day."

Denny looked this way and that. Across the field the boys were doing stunts. Beyond the hill Ben and the other boys were fishing. Then he swallowed twice very hard. But, of course, if she is sick—then he marched up the path to the house.

After the peas were shelled there was a stack of baking-dishes to be wiped. He noticed how white his mother was, and he said: "I can wash those dishes as well as wipe 'em, if I am a boy. You go and lie down. I'll stay around and answer the door."

When he caught sight of the look that came into her eyes, it seemed at once as if he was at least two inches taller. The dishes done, he wandered into the garden and weeded awhile. "Might as well," he said, "as long as I've got to stay around; then I won't have it to do to-night."

Before he knew it he was whistling: It seemed to him that he never felt so good. He had no idea it was 5 o'clock until he heard some one say, "Mother's been telling me our boy is the best thing ever." Looking up, he saw his father holding out his hand. "Denny," said he, and something in his voice made Denny wink very fast, "here's my hand to the lad who is on the straight, sure road to becoming a man."—Child's Gem.

"DEXTER."

By Olive Ellen Holbrook.

One day a cousin and his wife started to drive from their house to that of a friend, a distance of four miles. They owned three horses, but took "Dexter," who had saved their lives twice—once by stopping just in time to prevent crashing with an engine, and another time by running into the ditch to avoid an automobile going at a great speed.

After driving two miles, a storm came up. The lightning was terrific. My cousin's wife was very timid. My cousin saw an empty barn and drove into it. He had no more than done so before Dexter began to paw the ground and then to back. No coaxing or petting could make him stand still. At last he did a thing he had never done before—he kicked. My cousin got into the carriage, undecided what to do. But Dexter knew. He left the barn speedily, and ran to the top of a high hill. Then he acted as he always did—good-natured and ready to do whatever his master wished him to do. Suddenly there came a flash of lightning and a terrific crash. My cousin looked around and saw that the empty barn had been struck by lightning and was burning furiously. From that day Dexter was given the nickname of "The Lifesaver."—Our Dumb Animals.

MORAL AND SPIRITUAL VALUES.

slaughter now justified in the name of war, and the unspeakable woes of humanity which have come from war, would be ended. Even our political campaigns would be devoid of calumny, and great issues would be settled in the light of truth and fair discussion.

"Democracy is the problem of the individual, and to that problem the church and our schools and universities must apply themselves with unabated zeal and vigor if the demoralizing tendencies of modern civilization are to be arrested and a higher and nobler type is to be developed."

We have given so much space to these extracts from the speech of Mr. McAdoo because they seem to us to be unusually significant at this particular time. They are significant, first of all, because of the man who uttered them. Mr. McAdoo is a figure of national prominence, a man who has already served his country in one of the most important and responsible Cabinet positions, and who is widely spoken of as the probable nominee of the Democratic Party for the Presidency. It may be assumed that he spoke only after mature thought, and that the sentiments expressed by him represent his deepest convictions.

They are significant, in the second place, because they make religion the basis upon which the highest type of citizenship is based. When all the implications of citizenship are taken into consideration, it is almost self-evident that the terms, "bad man," and "good citizen," are contradictories. If preachers in the pulpit are under obligation to advocate uprightness, justice, and fair dealing in political affairs, politicians and statesmen are under as heavy obligations to preach morality and religion as the great needs of the individual.

These words are significant, in the third place, because they attribute to the church the supreme place in the development of the spiritual and moral forces of humanity without which the highest civilization cannot be produced. We especially commend this estimate of the church to the attention of those shallow thinkers, both theological and economic, who are forever wearying us with their pessimistic wails that the church has failed in its mission and that it is at best a moribund institution.

These words are significant, in the fourth place, because they assume the practicability of applying the teachings of the Bible, both Old and New Testaments, to national and international relationships as well as to the individual life. Christianity is not simply a spiritual force for personal appropriation; it is not simply a provincial religion that loses its power when it encounters the boundaries of diverse nations. It is a universal, all-embracing system of righteousness that can be adequately expressed only by the term, "the Kingdom of God." This Kingdom is not the impractical dream of a doctrinaire, but the definite program of Omniscience. It is practical, it is world-wide in the extent of its application, and it is to be progressively realized as men everywhere subject themselves to its laws.

THE RELOCATION OF THE TRAINING SCHOOL.

By Bishop W. F. McMurry.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Missions, held in Nashville, Tenn., May 1-4, the question of relocating the Missionary Training School was up for consideration.

This matter came before the Board in the form of, "The Report on the Scarritt Bible and Training School as Adopted by the Council." That report cited the fact that the Council had considered the report "of the Joint Committee on Missionary Training," and also "communications from President Cox, of Emory University, from Rev. C. W. Scarritt, of Kansas City, etc." The report expressed its apppreciation of the communications from President Cox, but set it down that "our plans are so far advanced for the future development of Scarritt as to make it impracticable to accept the invitation."

The report approved "the suggestions made in the report of the Joint Committee that our two schools of theology be so broadened in scope as to provide adequate missionary training for the ministry at home and abroad."

The report recommened, "that Scarritt Bible and Training School be moved to a more central location," and provided that the Board of Managers of the Scarritt Bible and Training School together with the Executive Committee of the Board of Missions and the Eexcutive Committee of the Woman's Missionary Council, "be directed to determine the location and organization of the proposed institution, and to secure a suitable charter for the same." The report further provided that the new institution "be made sufficiently broad and representative of the church as to make practicable the co-operation of all the agencies interested in the training of lay workers." Provision was made for the sale of the property in Kansas City, the safeguarding of the using of the funds in hand, and finally that the Executive Committee of the Board of Missions and the Executive Committee of the Woman's Missionary Council and the Board of Managers of Scarritt Bible and Training School be given authority to locate and organize the proposed institution.

After some discussion, the Board of Missions amended the proposed action by providing "that these committees report their plans for relocation, both as to place and relation to other institutions, to the Board of Missions at its next session for final action."

A majority of the members of tho Board of Missions present did not believe that the location of such an institution as was proposed, should be left for final determination to the Executive Committee of the Board of Missions, necessarily composed largely of citizens of Nashville, and in part intimately related to local institutions.

It is pretty generally understood, I believe, that the location of the school in the minds of the committees that had been working upon it, was already determined, and that pilgrimages have been made by representatives of tho Woman's Missionary Council and others, to the site that has been selected in the city of Nashville.

The principal argument for a new location is, that this new training school must be near a standard institution of learning that it may avail itself of provisions therein existing for the usual and regular branches of an education, thus relieving the training school of the burden of supplying a faculty and other necessary equipment, except in the lines of its specialties.

The location of this school is one of the most important questions before the church. We are proposing to train our youth, men and women, for work at home and abroad in the mission fields.

We have gone to largo expense, and the church is now being called upon for cotnributions, and will be in the future, for the maintenance of two great universities owned and controlled by the church, and having all the departments of learning usually found in such institutions. Why should we turn away from these schools, which are under our supervision, and provide for the perpetual patronage of secular institutions over whose faculties and teachings we have absolutely no control?

The question, in my judgment, is important enough to be determined by the General Conference, as it is one that concerns the whole church. Certainly no less a body than the Board of Missions should be thought of in connection with it, and time should be given to the church to make up its mind upon this subject. There would be nothing amiss in the Annual Conferences having opportunity to speak. We cannot afford to make a mistake.

A RICH MAN'S DREAM.

By Mrs. L. M. Lipscomb.

A rich man once had an awful dream
  As he slept in his easy chair.
He dreamed the judgment day had come,
  And he had no time to prepare.
He thought of his mean and selfish life,
  Of the years to pleasure given,
Of the money lavished on himself,
  And no treasure laid up in heaven.

He saw the thronging multitudes
  Before the great judge stand,
Saints and sinners all were there,
  And, at the Lord's command,
Each gave an account of his work on earth,
  Of the good and bad deeds done,
The kind words said and the hungry fed,
  Of the battles fought and won.

Among the throngs was an aged saint,
  With hair as white as snow;
In a tremling voice he told of his work
  In God's vineyard here below.

The rich man turned as pale as death
  And his heart was filled with woe,
For he recognized in the aged man
  His pastor of the long ago.

He had married him and his fair young bride,
  Had baptized his children three,
He had knelt at the bed of his dying son
  And prayed for him tenderly.
The rich man thought of all these things,
  And of the preacher's meager pay,
Of his struggles with debt and poverty,
  With naught for a rainy day.

He remembered when his pastor's health
  Became so broken down,
That a younger man was sent to serve
  The church in the rich man's town.
When Conference met, this poor old man
  Was placed on the retired roll,
With a pitiful sum, barely enough
  To keep together body and soul.

The rich man was able to give him a home
  And some of his service repay;
But he pulled his purse-strings tighter,
  And to every appeal said "nay."
In his dream he heard the Savior say
  To the aged saint: "Well done;
You have faithfully been through many trials—
  A crown of glory you have won."

The rich man trembled as the Lord,
  In a loud voice, called his name;
And as he told of his selfish life,
  He was filled with regret and shame.
Just then, in a voice like thunder,
  The Lord said: "Depart from me;
Thou canst not enter my mansions—
  They were not prepared for thee."

Trembling with fright, the man awoke
  And found it was all a dream,
His heart still beat, and life was sweet,
  And in his soul came a gleam
Of a joy he had not felt before,
  A longing for a better life.
It was the Sabbath morn, the sun shone bright,
  Hushed was all noise and strife.

He arose at once and wended his way
  To the church he had neglected so long;
As he entered the door, the choir began
  A good old Methodist song.
After the sermon the minister said,
  "Our offering will go to-day
To our aged veterans of the cross,
  Who need help without delay."

  And wrote with a trembling hand
A thousand-dollar check, which he put in the plate,
  And the preacher said, "Let us stand
And 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow,
  Praise him all people here below,
Praise him above ye heavenly host,
  Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost!'"

God grant that to all some vision or dream
  May come, each conscience to awake,
And help us to work, and pray and pay
  For the dear old veterans' sake.
They have worn out their lives for others
  And will soon be gone to rest,
Let us strive to make their last days
  The happiest and the best.

THE WESTERN METHODIST ASSEMBLY AT MOUNT SEQUOYAH.

The Opening, Wednesday, June 20.

The opening of the Western Methodist Assembly at Mount Sequoyah was a great success. The day was fair and bright, and though the temperature throughout the Mississippi Valley reached a high degree, the soft and refreshing breezes that blew over the mountain made the day delightfully pleasant.

The program was opened in the chapel at 10 o'clock a. m. in the presence of an audience that filled to overflowing the building. Many stood round about the open sides of the enclosure. Missouri, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas were represented in the audience. A great company of the citizens and dwellers in nearby towns was present.

After an introductory address by Dr. A. C. Millar, editor of the Arkansas Methodist, the President of the Commission, addresses of welcome and congratulation were made by Mayor Wilson, Dr. J. C. Frutall, President University of Arkansas and representative of local interests and clubs. Governor T. J. McRae made the principal address of the morning, and congratulated the Methodists and the State of Arkansas on the successful beginning of the Assembly.

The Frisco Railroad was represented by Mr. J. R. Koontz, the vice president; Mr. J. R. Cornatzer, passenger traffic manager, and six other departmental and division representatives. Mr. Koontz was very happy in his remarks, and said the Frisco Railroad was one hundred per cent for the Assembly. To this the members of the Executive Committte can testify, and the Secretary, to whom special courtesies of his private car were etxended en route to Fayetteville. Unusual courtesies were extended the Hon. Josephus Daniels, the speaker of the evening, who had to leave immediately after his address to fill an engagement in Kansas.

Bishop James Atkins, in charge of the Arkansas Conference, spoke in the morning and again in the evening, and gave great encouragement by his presence and words. Bishop Atkins is the original promoter of the Assembly at Lake Junaluska, and from the beginning has been the president of the Assembly and chairman of the stock company. His words to the great audience and his counsel with the Executive Committee were with great wisdom and of incalculable value. His praise and commendation of Sequoyah were almost extravagant in the comparison of beauty and the many advantages Sequoyah already has in the beginning. The comparisons of the mountain scenery by other speakers as to the beauty of the wonderful panoramic view extending to every point of the compass from Sequoyah would indicate that the commission has been exceedingly fortunate in the selection. Mr. Daniels delivered a great address in the open air amphitheatre to an audience estimated at 2,500 people. There were at least 500 automobiles in the space set aside for automobiles. The musical programs during the day, under the direction of Prof. Henry D. Tovey, of the University of Arkansas, with a select quartet, pianist and violinist, were meritorious, popular and pleasing. Prof. Tovey will have charge of the Assembly music and present two or three times each week special programs. Every arrangement for the opening of the Assembly had been carefully planned and was carried out in detail.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Though on the 4th day of June, 1923, the spirit of LESLIE INMAN VAUGHAN winged its way into God's eternal heaven, the influence of his noble, sweet life lives on and on. One hath truly said, "We live in deeds, not in years." His life was filled with good deeds. When a boy he joined the Methodist church at Marvin's chapel in Haywood County, Tenn., and thereafter lived an exemplary Christian. In 1917 he met and married Miss Birdie Birdsong, of Bovina, Miss., with whom he lived a most devoted and happy life, she surviving him. He is also survived by a loving mother and four devoted sisters, of Tennessee, his native State. On the day following his death he was laid to rest in the cemetery at Edwards, Miss., in the presence of a large concourse of loved ones and friends, beneath a bank of beautiful flowers, which attested the high esteem in which he was held. His age was 39 years.

On the evening of May 9, 1923, while sitting on his front porch at home after a busy day looking after his farming interests, DAVID L. LEWIS, of Byram, Miss., passed to the spirit world. He had not been feeling well for several weeks, but even his wife was not aware his end was so near. Brother Lewis was born Dec. 17, 1856, having been reared in Hinds County, in the Spring Ridge neighborhood. On Jan. 3, 1877, he was happily married to Miss Mary E. Jones. He became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1891, where he served his church very acceptably in an official capacity for a number of years. As a member of the Board of Supervisors of Hinds County, he served satisfactorily for twenty years. Words fail to tell of his worth as a citizen, his loyalty to a friend, his generosity and kindness to humanity, also his love and devotion to his family. Those who survive are his wife, an only daughter, Mrs. Lamar Hennington, of Hattiesburg Miss., with several grandchildren, also a number of relatives and friends, who miss him and cherish his memory.

CHARLIE DOWNER, Pastor.

SAMUEL P. GRANT was born Jan. 31, 1848, and passed to his reward on Jan. 31, 1923. He was born and reared at Oak Ridge, in Warren County, Miss., and lived there all his life. On March 3, 1880, he was married to Miss Mollie Williams, a daughter of one of our sainted preachers, Rev. F. M. Williams. Three children were born unto them. Brother Grant was converted in early life and united with the Methodist Church, becoming an active member from the beginning of his Christian career. He was one of the oldest members of the Oak Ridge church when he died. He was a man who was very open and frank in his speech. Of course, he blundered and made mistakes, and often he was misunderstood, but when he realized he had blundered and was wrong on any subject, he was ever ready to acknowledge his mistakes and amend his wrong. He was true to his church and faithful to his pastor and family. The writer was his pastor for four years, in the days of his vigor and activity, and always found him at his post of duty, and ever interested in his pastor and his welfare. Nothing was too good for his pastor—if he realized that he was in need, he would divide his last dollar with him. For years he was superintendent of the Sunday school and a steward and trustee of his church, and was faithful in tho duties assigned him. In his declining days he was feeble in mind and body and his sight was dim, but his heart had been washed in the blood of the Lamb and God had spoken peace to his soul, and when the end came he peacefully passed into the beyond to await the final judgment day. He leaves to mourn his departure his wife and three children.

A FORMER PASTOR.

On June 14, 1923, the gentle spirit of our friend and co-worker, MRS. MAUD GOLDEN, was called from earth to Heaven.

Whereas, the Lord who never makes any mistakes and doeth all things well, thought it wise to remove her from this world of pain and sorrow;

Therefore, be it Resolved:

1. That we have suffered the greatets shock and loss we have ever experienced in the death of Sister Golden. To know Miss Maud was to love her, she was so friendly, beautiful, both physically and spiritually. We can never forget the loving smiles and noble deeds of this God-given life. We deeply appreciate the privilege of having known this noble woman. The memory of her devotion to our Savior and his works will inspire us to nobler living and greater serviee for him.

2. That our Sunday school and church have sustained a great loss in the departure of our beloved sister and lovable friend.

3. That we extend to the bereaved husband and two little children our deepest sympathy and commend them to the care of the Great Comforter, for he never forsakes his children.

4. That a page of our Sunday school and Methodist church minute book be dedicated to her memory.

5. That copies of these resolutions be sent to the family, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, Dawn of Light, and Jasper County News for publication.

Miss Lodell Rasberry, Mrs. J. B. Mustin, Mrs. W. J. McFarland, Mrs. Ollie Barnett, Mrs. A. H. Wandrop, committee.

RESOLUTIONS.

The Sulphur Methodist Sunday school suffered an irreparable loss in the going away of our beloved coworker, MRS. ED. BREWER. For years she gave to her Master the first place in her heart, thoughts, service and interest. Her zeal never abated, and her interest was untiring. To her pastor, loved ones and friends she was a great inspiration, and her daily life exemplified the words of Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I havo finished my course; I havo kept the faith."

Therefore, be it Resolved:

1. That we, the members of the Sunday school, extend to her loved ones our love and sympathy, and pray that her mantle may fall upon her little girl, and she may be in the Master's service just what "mother" has been.

2. That her unswerving love, her untiring devotion, and patient submission to God's will be emulated by her co-workers.

3. That while wo shall miss her sorely, we thank God for her life, and the influence she exerted here.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, annother sent the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, also one to the Lake Charles American-Press.

THE WORTH-WHILE FRIEND.

By Cora M. V. Preble, in the Christian Herald.

It's good to have one friend who cares
When trouble comes our way,
And all the summer sky of blue
Has changed to murky gray;
One friend who'll stay beside us then
To whisper words of cheer,
And soothe and comfort us because
We know that he is near.
A thousand friends may ready wait
To share our happiness;
To grasp our hand and laud our name
When we have won success;
But when a fickle fortune fails
To favor with her smile,
The friends who'll stay beside us then—
Ah! he's the friend worth while!

FROM RALEIGH, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We closed yesterday evening one of the best revivals I was ever in. Brother Dan Kelley and his brother, John, were with us from June 20 to June 29. Brother Kelley preached the old-time, Spirit-filled gospel, and the church was revived.

The Holy Spirit came in an unmistakable way on Thursday night, June 28, and many came for prayer; then Christians joined them at the altar. We prayed, penitents cried, then began to break through to Christ. There were fathers and children, wives and husbands, embracing one another, and promising to live for Christ.

On the next day (last day) we opened the doors at morning and evening, and thirty-two came forward and offered for membership, practically all to the Methodist church—about twenty on profession. Before we closed the service, sixteen families promised to have prayers in homes, and a large number volunteered to lead prayer meetings when called upon. It was good to be here.

Why Take Laxatives?

Discovery by Science Has Replaced Them.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

As Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, it cannot gripe and, like pure water, it is harmless and pleasant.

The work as a whole on the charge is in as good shape as at any time during our three years here, and some phases of it are better than ever before. We are happy in the Lord.

WEEK DAY ACTIVITIES FOR JUNIORS AND INTERMEDIATES.

In the winter we wrote to a number of missionaries on the foreign field and asked them if they would like to have some Christmas boxes sent them for their foreign children by our Sunday school children. The following is a part of one reply:

"I am elated over the fact that you are planning to bring the question of Foreign Missions before the Sunday schools in this way. I have thought of it a lot and have written to a few individuals, but with so much on hand I do not get much time for letter-writing.

"Korean children are very much like any others I have seen. They like bright colors and they like playthings, but have very few of them. The little girls are crazy about dolls. But unless any kind of toy is marked 'gift—no commercial value,' or its equivalent, we have to pay very high import duty. Picture cards and books made by the children are very acceptable, and I would like to have about fourteen dozen of them—or more—for my own work; but if you tell them to make just one thing, let that be handkerchiefs, handkerchiefs, handkerchiefs. They are a real luxury here, and you can imagine how they are needed. Have about seven hundred girls in my schools, and would be awfully tickled if we could give them one each next Christmas.

"These children are so very poor, but I believe that by another year they could gather some little mementoes to send to the American children—something representative of their country."

If you are interested in sending gifts to foreign children, write the office of the Secretary of Missions and Sunday School Extension, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn., and ask for definite instructions.

AFTER DEATH—WHAT THEN?

By Rev. S. W. Miller.

The immortality of the soul, and a conscious anxiety regarding the future has been a question of interest to men of all ages. "If a man die, shall he live again?" was asked by Job in the hour of distress and abject adversity; and there are hours in the history of every man's life when he must decide for himself whether he will be true to life or decide against himself in this great issue. God has made us free moral agents and put the responsibility of deciding that which will determine our destiny throughout all eternity.

If he says there is no God, the Bible says he is a fool, and if he says there is no hell, his inner conscience tells him that where God and the redeemed are he cannot dwell in peace.

Just here I want to say that destructive higher criticism, under the guise of science, with ignorant superstition of Catholicism and Jewish antagonism to Christ, and a want of moral courage upon the part of our Protestant ministers, have let down the bars and opened the way for an educative system of robbery, theft, graft and all forms of vice.

God's word says, "Like people, like priest." Hosea 4:9. It is generally quoted, "like priest, like people." "For both prophet priest are profane in my house * * * their ways shall be unto them as slippery ways." Jer. 23:-11-12.

Take the Catholic church with its purgatory, and Russelism with its thousand years to reform in, and destructive criticism, tearing down if possible the very foundation of our Christianity in regard to future reward and punishment; give us a ministry that is more concerned about their popularity and position than about the salvation of souls, who are afraid to come out boldly and to declare their belief in a real hell and that the only safe escape is by repentance and taking refuge in Christ as the only Savior, and you have the secret of our present sad condition, both in church and state. In the present materialistic age, ease, pleasure, and wealth, and the satisfaction of lust are the controlling passions, as seen in bathing pools, picture shows, houses of ill fame, improper dress, graft of every kind to obtain money to carry out evil purposes, which lead to all forms of violations of both civil and moral law.

Anarchy is not confined to the bootlegger, the thug, and the insurrectionist; it may be either in church or State; either against God's law, or the civil law. The minister of the Gospel who promised to drive away all false doctrine and to preach God's Word in his ordination vows, may be seen turning to destructive higher criticism and becoming a moral anarchist against God's moral government. The Governor who, for mercenary purpose or for popularity, sets aside the plain statute of his State or government and winks at the violation of law, is just as guilty as the man who puts an infernal machine under his house; and the lawyer who, for filthy lucre, makes void the execution of law in order to screen a known guilty criminal for the money that is at the end of the case, is he not a legal anarchist? Legal anarchy is found in the legal realm, while moral anarchy is found in the moral realm.

Where is the remedy? If I have rightly diagnosed the case, my candid opinion is that the want of a personal responsibility to God, and disbelief in the idea of a real hell or future rewards and punishment produce all moral biliousness that infests our fair land.

This brings me to assert that hell, a place where the wicked may be separated from the righteous, is a necessity; and while I have given nearly fifty-four years in trying to get men saved, I am glad there is a hell. It was not made for man, but for the devil and his angels, and man is an intruder upon the devil's dominion when he goes there, and go there he must if he rebels against God's moral government.

A sinner all stained with crime would be happier in hell than in heaven with God's children; and I imagine that the teacher who compromises this great question, even if he should get to heaven, will have eternity to regret failing to be true to his calling. I am made to tremble when I hear a talented minister squirm over the idea of hell and future rewards and punishment.

The physician who has the life of his patient in his hand has great responsibility, but a thousand times more is the preacher responsible who has the destiny of souls at stake.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

From July 1 to 4 was spent on the Rocky Springs work. Brother Ezell is in favor with his folks, and the work is growing and responding to his leadership. All the points on the circuit were reached. I visited the old home of Rev. Thomas Owen. It must have been a beautiful old home in its day. It is now fallen in and weather-beaten. The old bed that he used and the one upon which he died is still standing in his room. It must have been a beautiful piece of furniture. The weather has gotten the best of it now. It is a pity that this could not be obtained and either preserved or some useful article made of it. I found a brick in the one remaining chimney with the name and date of the burner of the bricks. The old burying grounds are unkept and make one feel the shortness and vanity of life.

These are a good people on this circuit, and, so far as I can see, the work is in good condition.

Don't forget Sunday School Day.

Pray for the work and the workers.

Yours in Him,

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

CHILDREN'S WEEK—OCT. 14-21.

Children's Week will be observed this year in the month of October, preferably the third week. If this week conflicts with the date for the Annual Conference, or if the local conditions make it unwise to observe it at this time, then another week in October may be selected.

This will be the third observance of Children's Week by the denominations. There is every reason to believe that a great many more churches will observe it this year than heretofore, as the leaders are realizing more than ever the wonderful opportunity during Children's Week of causing the church to realize its responsibility for its own children and to make adequate provision for them.

More than 500 of our churches last year observed the week, and these reported nearly 40,000 parents present at the Parents' Meetings. This meeting, planned specially for the parents and adults of the church, is the most important feature of the week. Its purpose is to deepen the sense of responsibility for their children and to plan to meet their needs. Since more parents will be reached by a meeting in each church, it is not advisable to have joint meetings with other churches.

That the teachers may better understand their pupils by knowing the home environment, and to secure better co-operation of the parents, each teacher is expected to visit in the home of each pupil during the week. During these visits the teachers will explain the object of the Parents' Meeting and give a special invitation to the parents to attend. More than 26,000 homes were visited by these faithful teachers during Children's Week last year.

Two-thirds of the churches that observed the week last year pledged themselves to do one definite thing for the betterment of child life of their local church.

Some of these Forward Steps were creating separate elementary departments, organizing parent-teacher meetings, introducing graded lessons, etc. Twenty-two churches undertook to build new churches with model Sunday school buildings. One church pledged $22,000 for a new building at the Parents' Meeting. This service was held at the regular 11 o'clock hour on Sunday morning.

A number of the denominations are co-operating in observing Children's Week this year. They will each observe it in their local churches, using the leaflets which have been jointly prepared. These may be secured from their denominational headquarters. The following denominations are co-operating: Southern Baptist, Evangelical Church, Reformed, Southern Presbyterian, Presbyterian, U. S. A., Northern Baptist, United Brethren, Evangelical Synod, Disciples, Christian, Methodist Protestant, Methodist Episcopal, South.

Leaflets for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, may be secured by writing to the Elementary Department, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

GROUND BROKEN FOR NEW CHURCH.

An event of vast significance to the town of Franklinton and all of Washington Parish was the ground-breaking for the magnificent Methodist church to be erected in Franklinton, which was held at Franklinton Wednesday morning, June 27. The occasion was featured by the presence of Dr. Henry T. Carley, editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, who delivered the principal address. Addresses were also delivered by Senator Delos R. Johnson, of Franklinton, and by Rev. E. C. Gunn, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Bogalusa, La.

A large and appreciative audience listened to the address of Dr. Carley, who, selecting an appropriate Biblical text, developed with graphic clarity the underlying causes of the church, and told of its tremendous task in the world, and of its importance to society. He declared that back of the church was the individual idea, held by all men of all times, that there should be a church, an organization for the worship of God; that the church is the realization of that idea, is an organization, primarily, but that it is a great deal more—that it is an institution. He differentiated between a mere organization and an institution by saying that organizations are temporary and dispensable things, but that institutions are enduring and are essential for the weal of society.

Dr. Carley emphasized that the church is a divine institution and is a part of the divine plan for the salvation of the world. He established, convincingly, the importance of the church to the community and depicted eloquently the disorder that would inevitably follow its destruction.

Following the addresses, which were delivered in the courthouse, the entire audience repaired to the site of the new building, where Rev. L. W. Cain, pastor, broke the ground upon which soon there will arise a structure which will reflect untold credit upon the entire community and will stand as a monument to the energy and enthusiasm of the pastor, Rev. L. W. Cain, who has labored indefatigably for the consummation of his dream of a new and resplendent house of worship, to stand as a silent but forceful testimonial of the love of his people for the living God.—Bogalusa Enterprise.

"WHICH WAY ARE YOU HEADED."

By Garfield Evans.

A traveler in the State of New York drew up near the barnyard of a farmer about the close of day. Hearing the farmer at work within the barn he inquired, "Is this the road to Chestertown?" Getting no response, he again called, repeating his inquiry. He got the reply, "That road goes to Chestertown, but I don't know which way you are headed."

We have rejoiced over the large response to our efforts in the large number of Life Service Volunteers recruited during the two recent church-wide movements. When we come to analyze the results, it may be seen that our rejoicing needs some modification. It must not be disparaged that there has been a quickening of the conscience of thousands of young people; but in the quoting of large numbers to depict the measure of success, there needs to be some explanation and reflection.

As a result of the Centenary, almost 5,000 declaration cards were reported for cultivation. These cards came from colleges, cities, and country churches. When they were finally investigated, it was observed that less than one-third were really interested in the thing for which they were supposed to sign or knew what they were doing. Of the 5,000 names recruited during the Christian Education Movement, almost 3,000 of these names were dropped recently by the cultivation secretary because of misunderstanding in signing the cards as confessed by many after it was explained, and because of a misunderstanding unexpressed by several thousand more who never replied to any inquiry or correspondence.

You ask what do I mean by this? Do I intend to say that all this recruiting for Life Service was a waste of time and effort as well as a misdirection to the young? No; but what I do say is, that we have not taken time to think through the question of recruiting for Life Service. We have thought it a fine thing to report a large number of volunteers from our church, without seriously considering how serious it was to the young people concerned.

During the sixty years prior to the Centenary, the highest number of missionaries we ever had on the mission field was about 250. Since the beginning of the Centenary we have sent out about 250 new missionaries, making a total of about 500 missionaries, including wives of married missionaries, on all of our foreign fields.

In the ministry of the home field, the several Annual Conference minutes report a total in round numbers of 7,900 traveling preachers. Against the reasonable expectancy of recruits, which is about 10% of the present number needed annually for recruits to take the place of those who withdraw for various reasons and the growth of work, the far greater number of recruits are needed to fill the ranks of the ministry in the home land. This is according to our present standards of maintenance and the reasonable expectancy of growth.

God does not call a man unless he has a task for him. We need to be reasonably sure, from prayer and conversation with young people, before reporting their names as volunteers. God has not called too many volunteers, but there have been too many "man-called" volunteers.

NATURE'S CATHEDRAL.

By Fred Scott Shepard, in the Christian Herald.

Here in the forest-vastness
Where towering pines
As stately sentinels stand guard;
Where shadowy, inviting vistas,
Dim as dark cloister-halls,
Fade in receding distance;
Where light, subdued
As if it fell through
Stained cathedral windows,
Glints downward from High, over-arching boughs;
Where voices of the outside world
Are stilled and silence reigns,
O'er powering to the senses;
Here in the quietude
Of Nature's solemn grandeur
Man stands in reverent awe
And voiceless adoration feels.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

Woman's Missionary Conference Meet.

The forty-fourth session of the district conference, Woman's Missionary Society of the Columbus District, North Mississippi Conference, met with the local Auxiliary of Weir on June 28 and 29.

On the evening of the 28th, at 8 p. m., the devotional was conducted by Mrs. J. C. McElroy. Music was furnished by the local choir. A cordial greeting was given by Mrs. Smith Burt in a few well chosen words, with response by Mrs. Ralph Bryan, of West Point, Miss. The young people of Weir gave a quartet, after which Mrs. T. M. Clark, Conference President, brought us the Council message; this was a wonderful message, one that will live in the hearts and lives of many women.

The conference was called together on Friday morning, at 9 a. m., by Mrs. Kemp Williams as presiding officer, with almost one hundred delegates and visitors present. Devotional was conducted by Rev. W. L. Storment, after which the committees were appointed. Our district secretary then gave a general review of the work for the past year, which was helpful and inspiring; after this most encouraging report, Mrs. Williams called for reports from the different societies throughout the district. The Juniors were called first, and the reports made by the Juniors were wonderful. It was a great inspiration to hear them tell of their work, and to see their great enthusiasm. Then the Young People came with some interesting reports. After these, the reports from the Adults, which were interesting and helpful. Mrs. Susie Thomas gave a report of her work as superintendent of supplies.

The question, "Are Circles in Auxiliaries a Success?" was discussed by Mrs. Maud Duntin; and after hearing her we were made to feel that each society should have circles.

The demonstration of the first missionary society, by Ackerman, was enjoyed by all—it brought just the fun needed after the business hour.

Mrs. T. M. Clark then made a touching and inspiring talk on the Bennett Memorial, or Greater Scarritt. We could only wish that every woman could know what Miss Belle Bennett has meant to missions.

Mrs. Susie Thomas, in her sweet-spirited way, gave a most interesting comment on the twenty-third Psalm during the quiet hour, after which the benediction was pronounced by Rev. J. A. Biffle, of Chester. Dinner was then served in the Sunday school room, this social hour being enjoyed by all.

At 1:30 o'clock the house was calle to order by Mrs. Kemp Williams. Devotional was conducted by Miss Mable Clark, who made a very helpful talk on John 3:16. Miss Clark is one of our life service volunteers.

Ackerman Juniors gave a pageant, "How Aunt Tillie Learned to Tithe." This pageant teaches a great lesson and should inspire each one to do his best.

The importance of Mission and Bible study was discussed, and several interesting and helpful talks were made. Other important subjects were discussed, after which the young people, under the direction of Mrs. Baker, gave a most interesting program. Among the interesting features of this program was a talk on "What Christianity Means in China," by Mr. Chong, a Chinese student of the A. and M. College. The consecration service, led by Mrs. Baker, was uplifting. We felt that the Holy Spirit was with us, and we feel that the Missionary Society and the town of Weir have been greatly blessed by having these consecrated men, women, young people, and juniors with us.

A resolution of thanks was read by Mrs. Ervin, of Columbus, Miss. We one and all invite you to come again.

MRS. J. C. McELROY,
For the Weir Auxiliary.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MacDonell Wesley Community House.

The most interesting thing in Houma just now, at least, to all "Methodist-minded" folk, is the new school building, now complete and awaiting Mrs. McCoy's and the architect's arrival to accept it. And what a joy it will be to see the new furnishings go into it! This building, with its equipment, is a literal answer to prayer, and every time we workers look at it, we lift our hearts to God in thankfulness for all that he has done in this field. By the generous help of the women of the Auxiliaries all over Louisiana, we shall get it all furnished and equipped, ready to open school in September, with a capacity for not less than thirty French girls and boys. Three new workers will be added.

If God so wills, we hope to work out plans for a Daily Vacation Bible School in June and July as the first use to which the MacDonell French Mission School building will be put.

In the field work a new missionary society has been organized, at Labadieville, with six members, all French. They need the prayers of all the older Auxiliaries.

We have received on Furnishing Fund as follows:

Bunkie, $20; Lecompte, $5; Ruston, $20; Pineville, $5; Keithville, $5; Rochelle, $15; Bossier City, $8.50; Homer, $65; Jonesboro, $10.50; Monroe, $65; Rayne, $8; Lake Providence, $10; Gleaners, S., $20; Haughton, $4; Opelousas, $5.15; Gleaners, S., $25; Oakdale, $10; Gleaners, S., $65; Bastrop, $13.50; Coushatta, $5; Mer Rouge, $25; Alexandria, $10; New Iberia, $5; Gueydan, $29; Lafayette, $6; West Monroe, $12.50; Leesville, $39.68; De Ridder, $5. Total, $516.83.

LAURA M. WHITE.

A WORD OF COMMENDATION AND A WORD OF CONDEMNATION.

By George E. Bass.

I wish to speak a good word in behalf of the movement known as Fundamentalism and the poeple called Fundamentalists. They are doing a noble work in the evangelical Christian churches at this time. They are contending mightily for Scriptural Christianity in the face of almost overwhelming odds. They are speaking out in no uncertain tones. Their voices ring true and clear on the issues of the times. They are not shrinking and timid concerning their positions, but are bold, fearless, emphatic, and have the assurance of the Holy Spirit in their hearts that they are right. May the Lord bountifully bless this movement and those who take part in it! They are doing his work and he is back of them.

Also I would speak a word against that movement known as Rationalism and those people called Rationalists who are opposing Fundamentalism. They have no proper regard for the Bible or for the great cardinal doctrines of Christianity that are founded upon it. They have no moral scruples about remaining in a church as preachers and teachers when they are no longer in accord with its doctrines. Rationalism is one of the worst forms of infidelity. May the Lord deal with it according to its deserts!

The time has now come when every Christian man and woman and child should take a stand one way or the other on the question of Fundamentalism or Rationalism. The issue is now squarely drawn. It cannot be dodged or treated indifferently. Every person belongs to one of these camps, and he should take his position without further delay. He should want the world to know where he stands in this fight.

WHAT OF YOUR BOY?

His education and training and the development of his mind, body and character depends on you, his parents. It is a grave responsibility and you should meet the issue squarely.

As every boy looks back over his past training he can point to some one man who largely dominated his formative period and impressed his personality for good upon him.

To thousands of boys Robt. K. Morgan is the dominating personality. He has been training boys twenty-nine years. He knows boys and loves them. He knows their problems and can guide them aright.

He has a strong faculty composed of high class Christian teachers. A postal card to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary, Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., will bring you a catalog and full information about the school.

IN MEMORY OF REV. IRA B. ROBERTSON.

We feel constrained to contribute a few lines to the memory of our beloved friend and former pastor, Rev. Ira B. Robertson. Since learning of his departure we have thought of him so frequently and of his faith, courage, and zeal as he ministered to us in spiritual things when he labored among us. We remember him years ago when he served the East Feliciana circuit, how he traveled over the rough roads in his buggy, going to his appointments and making pastoral visits from house to house, carrying the "light of the gospel" wherever he went, to the homes of many, some of whom were sick and destitute. How we loved to see him! His prayers, his songs, and Scripture reading were uplifting, like the oasis in the desert. On one occasion he said to a lady, "Sister, when you get the blues, sing 'How firm a foundation.' "

While pastor of the circuit above mentioned, he held a revival at a country church (Olive Branch), well worthy of mention. Two very promising young preachers assisted in this meeting, viz., I. D. Wall, of Clinton, La., and John W. Chambers, of Baton Rouge. During this meeting many were awakened, quite a number added to the church, and there were some glorious conversions. Three preachers were added to the Louisiana Conference—R. W. Tucker, I. T. Reames, and J. D. Jackson, the last mentioned being called to his reward while serving the church of Opelousas, after fidelity to the cause of the Master a few short years.

Of late years we have had several visits from Brother Robertson. While in our city visiting other friends we found him unchanged in his abiding faith and abounding love for his Lord. Occasionally we have also had the pleasure of receiving letters from him, and most frequently in conclusion he would add, "I'm happy on the way." We feel that in the end all was well with him and to him will be awarded the welcome plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of the Lord."

Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood. In order to be cured of rheumatism it is necessary to neutralize this acid. RENWAR is a scientific combination of salts prepared to neutralize the uric acid in the blood. There is nothing in Renwar to injure the stomach or affect the heart. It acts solely upon uric acid, completely eliminating it from the blood and thereby relieving your rheumatism. It is harmless but effective. Positively guaranteed by money-back offer. It is a godsend to sufferers from rheumatism. Renwar also corrects constipation. Mr. J. M. Willis of the Nashville Railway and Light Company says, "I must say that Renwar far surpassed my expectations, for it gave me almost immediate relief; too much can not be spoken in behalf of 'Renwar' for rheumatism." Sold by druggists, price 50 cents, or by mail from WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.

Owing to modern methods of living, few woman approach this perfectly natural change without experiencing very annoying and often painful symptoms. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to overcome these abnormal conditions.

"Fisherville, Ky.—"For several months I was under the doctor's care as he said my nervousness, chills, hot flashes and weakness was caused by the Change of Life, but I did not seem to get any better. I was not able to work and spent most of my time in bed. A friend called to see me and asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I cannot tell you how much good the medicine did me, as I had such a hard time before taking it. I can only advise every woman passing through the Change of Life to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it did so much for me."—Mrs. EDWARD B. NEAL, Star Route, Fisherville, Ky.

FUNDAMENTALS OF METHODISM.

ARTICLE II.

The General Rules of the United Societies.

By Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

A false note has been sounded in Methodism—a note which calls attention to things to be believed rather than to a life in Christ to be lived. There have arisen among us some who insist that a correct creed is of more importance than a good life. They seem to take the position that if one's creed is correct, one's life will necessarily be righteous. There is immense peril in this position. For the next step may lead one to conclude that his own life is a Christian life because, henceforth, his creed is in perfect harmony with orthodox standards. Then the further step may be taken which leads the poor, misguided man to the conclusion that his brother is a bad man for the good and sufficient reason that his brother does not agree with him in all his theological tenets.

We Methodists, on the contrary, hold no such view. We believe that a "pure heart" is of even greater importance than a "clear head." For as Jesus said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." We believe that a correct creed is important, but we hold firmly to the view that a Christlike life is the final test of one's religion. Indeed, this is the final test of all religion—the kind of man that it produces. And this is the final test of the value of any creed. Does it make one narrow, and unbrotherly, and critical? Does it take the milk of kindness out of the human breast? Does it fill one with the spirit of the inquisitor and the persecutor? Or does it make one broad, and brotherly, and charitable? Does it fill one with tender sympathy for all who have stumbled in the path or gone out of the way? Does it give one the mind that was in Christ who came to seek and to save that which was lost and whose gracious words to the penitent were, "Go and sin no more"? I repeat, the ultimate test of creed and of religion is the kind of life that they produce.

Throughout his long life, John Wesley continually insisted that the chief thing God had raised up the Methodists to was "To spread Scriptural holiness over these lands." When speaking of this, Wesley sometimes used very strong language. Witness the following: "I find more profit in sermons on either good tempers or good works than what are vulgarly called 'gospel sermons.' That word has now become a mere cant word. I wish none of our society would use it. It has no determinate meaning. Let but a pert, self-sufficient animal that has neither sense nor grace bawl out something about Christ, or his blood, or justification by faith, and his hearers cry out, 'What a fine gospel sermon'." It is quite evident that Wesley had little patience with preaching that did not insist on a pure heart and love to God and man. And it is a most unfortunate thing that nowadays we hear all too little of the fundamental Methodist teaching that Christianity's chief purpose is to make good men and good women.

Let it be said, then, that the General Rules are as truly one of the fundamentals of Methodism as the Apostles' Creed and the Twenty-five Articles of Religion. For Methodist "discipline" is as much a part of Methodism as is Methodist "doctrine." These "General Rules" were drawn up by Wesley himself for the guidance of those earnest Christians who looked to him as their pastor and teacher. And I capitally doubt if a more perfect and complete outline of Christian conduct was ever drawn by the hand of an uninspired man. As a matter of fact, these General Rules are not so much "rules" as "principles." That is to say, they do not attempt to regulate the details of one's life, but rather to furnish, and that largely in the very language of the New Testament, great principles by which one should direct his conduct as a Christian. And attention should be drawn to the fact that they are not many, but few. Indeed, strictly speaking, there are only three General Rules.

According to these Rules, all who desire to continue in fellowship with the Methodists must evidence their desire for salvation—

"First, by doing no harm, by avoiding evil of every kind, especially that which is most generally practiced;

"Secondly, by doing good, by being in every kind merciful after their power, as they have opportunity, doing good of every possible sort, and, as far as possible to all men;

"Thirdly, by attending upon all the ordinances of God."

It will be seen at once that under the first "Rule," we have presented the negative aspect of the Christian life—things that a Christian ought not to do; under the second "Rule" we have the positive aspect of the Christian life—things that a Christian ought to do to help others and to make the world better; while under the third "Rule," we have outlined the "means of grace" which a Christian should use in his own spiritual self-culture—that he may grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

1. Consider, then, the Methodist Rule touching the negative aspect of the Christian life. A Methodist must do no harm; he must avoid evil of every kind.

Methodism was the revival of the best things in Puritanism. It is easy enough to make sport of the Puritans, and it is the fashion nowadays to do so. But our English and American civilization is under everlasting obligation to them. In all our history, no other movement plowed so deep a furrow and sowed so fruitful a harvest of righteousness as did Puritanism. Consider some things that came to us through Puritanism. Our faith in an over-ruling Providence and our belief in the value of the individual to God came through the Puritans. Our reverence for Holy Scripture, our regard for the Christian Sabbath, our hatred for sins of the flesh, and our attitude toward such amusements as "cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus"—all these came to us through the influence of the Puritans. Wesley himself was born in a Puritan home and trained by a Puritan mother. And the best things in Puritanism came to Wesley through his wise mother. As another has said, "The loss of Puritanism is one of the dangers of the present to Methodism." A better rule could not be laid down at the present time than that which Susannah Wesley wrote for the guidance of her son:

> "Would you judge of the lawfulness or unlawfulness of pleasure? Take this rule: Whatever weakens your reason, impairs the tenderness of your conscience, obscures your sense of God, or takes off the relish of spiritual things—in short, whatever increases the authority of your body over your mind, that thing is sin to you, however innocent it may be in itself."

Under this first Rule there follow certain special applications of the principle involved. One or two of these have no great interest for us at the present time, as the evils referred to are not very generally practiced amongst us—for instance, the one forbidding "the buying or selling of goods that have not paid duty." There is one which warns against "the putting on of gold and costly apparel," which was very much called for in Wesley's day when, as another has said, the grand controversy was who could out-eat, out-drink, and out-dress his neighbor. And there can be no doubt that, in this present day of fashion and extravagance, our people do need to be warned that they cannot spend hundreds of dollars on dress and thousands of dollars on gold and diamonds and pearls, and then expect to be accounted members of the kingdom of God.

There is yet another to which I feel constrained to make some definite reference. I refer to that which warns against "taking such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus." Nothing could be finer than that. If one is really in earnest about the Christian life, that will settle for him practically every question touching "worldy amusements." For it is not possible to make out a list, long or short, of amusements that are permissible and amusements that are not permissible. Concerning many things, it cannot be said that they are either right or wrong in themselves; whether they are right or wrong will depend entirely upon the spirit in which one enters into them. If they cannot be done "in the name of the Lord Jesus," that settles it. Saint

MEN WANT SALVATION MORE THAN SOLUTION OF PROBLEMS.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

A fatal defect in liberalistic preaching is that in minimizing sin it depreciates salvation from sin. If the pit into which men have fallen is no more than a shallow hole, nothing more is required to lift them out of it than a short rope and a sharp pull.

But in actual experience men find it not easy to be delivered from sin, and notwithstanding the pleasing palliatives which a gospel of sentimentality supplies to this festering sore of the human race, they at last awake in agony to the consciousness that the painful wound is unhealed by such treatment.

The conscience cannot be drugged into endless slumber and perpetual peace. Nothing less than purging it of the sense of unforgiven guilt can soothe it to rest. A sense of remediless sin is the keenest distress to the human soul, and for this there is no earthly relief. In all the Gilead of the world there is no balm for this painful malady. So we are taught by the great dramatist, Shakespeare:

> Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
> Raze out the written troubles of the brain
> And with some sweet oblivious antidote
> Cleanse the stuffed bosom of that perilous stuff
> Which weighs upon the heart?"

The answer to the heart-piercing question is, "Throw physic to the dogs." The physicians of all the schools can do nothing to cleanse the heart of such an intolarable ill. For its cure one is needed, One who "hath power on earth to forgive sin."

It is just in respect to this matter that the ministry of many present-day preachers is most defective and disappointing. They are passing lightly over the great fact of sin, and offering to sin-sick souls no heavenly healing. In a recent number of a popular periodical this fact is brought out by one who has failed to find in the churches satisfaction for this supreme need.

This correspondent of the Outlook has been making the rounds among many churches to find a preacher who would talk to him of his sins and tell him how to be delivered from them. But he says his search for such a minister of salvation has been in vain. He has heard books reviewed, labor conditions discussed, education defined, psychology expounded, economics explained, and all sorts of "problems" discussed except that most perplexing and painful of all problems—the problem of sin.

Of course, a man in his state of mind could not be helped, let alone be satisfied, by such preachments. He came with his starving soul seeking bread to satisfy his hunger, and they gave him stones that mocked his sore want.

This correspondent, in a form that breathes a sneering resentfulness towards such preachers and preaching, says:

"I have faults, lots of them. Call them sins, just for the sake of argument. I have shopped around in church after church, Sunday after Sunday, without hearing the matter mentioned. Yet it is one of the most important questions in my life—coupled with how to get rid of my faults. It would appear as though we in the pews no longer had sins worth talking about. We have mental complexes, distorted points of view, and all that sort of thing, but as for the Garden of Eden variety of sins, it seems to be as scarce among us as the dodo. Occasionally an evangelist appears amid clouds of sawdust, trumpeting about the sins of the people in yellow journalism. They say some of the so-called Fundamentalists talk about sin, and that among certain other 'schools of thought' long since decadent it is an accepted subject. Perhaps it is, but it's a shame that such an expressive word should be confined to the vocabulary of controversy and not used in the field of practical living. I, for one, yearn to be 'cussed out'; to be drawn over the coals; to hear the sort of direct talk which called forth from one of a Scotch congregation, who was listening to his pastor, the enthusiastic exclamation: 'Haud 'em ower the pit, Meenister; haud 'em ower the pit.' They tell us of lots of things wrong with the social order; but who composes the social order if not a lot of us fellows down in the pews? If the ministers convince enough of us what's wrong with us, and 'sell' us thoroughly on the way to put it right, there will be slight need to worry about social order or disorder.

"But it would be more than presumptuous to try and suggest subject material for the preachers. The important thing is that some of us in the pews are not gripped, stirred, remotivated by what they say. We go to church to get a certain power, and we come away empty-handed. The rapid life of business rushes us along day after day. We have no time for doctrinal decisions. We can't stop to work out all the world's problems. Our lives have certain definite impacts. The message of the church can help us make them right by putting power and spirit into us. This isn't done by a long string of negatives."

In a powerful book recently published, "Christianity and Liberalism," by Dr. J. Gresham Machen, of Princeton University, the devout and scholarly author puts the matter differently, and perhaps in better style. He says:

"Weary with the conflicts of the world, one goes into the church to seek refreshment for the soul. And what does he find? Alas, too often, one finds only the turmoil of the world. The preacher comes forward, not out of the secret place of meditation and power, not with the authority of God's Word permeating his message, not with human wisdom pushed far into the background by the glory of the Cross, but with human opinions about the social problems of the hour or easy solutions of the vast problem of sin. Such is the sermon. And then perhaps the service is closed by one of those hymns breathing out the angry passions of 1861, which are to be found in the back part of the hymnals. Thus the warfare of the world has entered even into the house of God. And sad, indeed, is the heart of man who has come seeking peace."

He continues in this pathetic strain:

"Is there no refuge from strife? Is there no place of refreshing where a man can prepare for the battle of life? Is there no place where two or three can gather in the name of Jesus, to forget for the moment all those things that divide nation from nation and race from race, to forget human pride, to forget the passions of war, to forget the puzzling problems of industrial strife, and to unite overflowing gratitude at the foot of the cross? If there be such a place, then that is the house of God and that the gate of heaven. And from under the threshold of that house will go forth a river that will revive the weary world."

Can we not exclude from our plans of worship the fierce voices of the political arena, the covetous cries of the market-place the harsh utterances of the industrial field, and the pretty prattle of the literary world, and make room for the preaching of heaven-sent prophets who can show us the way out of our sin and lead us to the Saviour?

Shall our sin-saddened world never hear again the celestial message, "Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For to you is born a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord"?

It is not ingenious solutions of problems we sinful men need most. Our most puzzling problem is how to get clear of the guilt and thraldom of sin. This being solved for all men, there would remain no other problem to perplex mankind. All the sores of the world arise from its sin. This is the source of all the distress and disorder in the earth. Who will show us how to cleanse this defiled and defiling spring? Who will show us the Savior? What prophet will effectually turn our erring race to its Redeemer with the joyous evangel, "Behold, the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world"?

Who will give us back a gospel—the gospel—bringing the good news of One "mighty to save"?

Such a prophet, when he arises, will, by the deliverance his gospel brings, cause our poor reformers and problem-solvers, with their strident voices, to seem like the figures moving in a nightmare which one is glad to forget when awakened from troubled dreams.

"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!" Isaiah 52:7.)

FUNDAMENTALISM AND MODERNISM.

By H. Walter Featherstun, D.D.

Why should Southern Methodists divide into opposing parties bearing banners inscribed with one or the other of these strange new party names? Is there any wisdom or righteousness in it? The Fundamentalists claim a monopoly of truth, and the Modernists claim a monopoly of learning. Either boast is false and absurd. In a sense we are all Fundamentalists—we all believe in the fundamental or basic truths of our Christianity; but the "Fundamentalist Movement's" creed contains some things that we cannot believe, because they are not taught in the Bible. The Modernists also falsely name themselves; for there is nothing "modern" in their teaching. Paul and John make it plain in their Epistles, by warnings too clear and definite to be misunderstood, that the contentions of these "Modernists" were met and fought in apostolic days—see Eph. i. 15-21; Phil. ii. 5-11; Col. i. 13-20; I Tim. vi. 20; I John iv. 1-3; 14-15; II John 7. Whatever they may or may not be, they are not "modern."

Bishops Moore and Mouzon have recently attacked this Fundamentalist Movement. They have said some strong and very true things against it. Bishop Mouzon says: "I object to their confusing things good with things bad." We all do so object. Bishop Mouzon is both orthodox and religious. I am sure of this, because I know and love him. But I am sure the "rank and file" of Southern Methodists are just now more concerned about a teaching in some quarters that questions the authenticity of the Pentateuch, Isaiah and Daniel; and denies the Virgin Birth (hence the divinity) and the resurrection of Christ, than they are about the obsolete and outgrown doctrines of Calvin, or the vagaries of a Fundamentalist Movement scarcely four years old. Very few of the two hundred preachers in the Mississippi Conference know or care anything about this baby boaster, "The Fundamentalist Movement." I am very sure none of us sympathize with the "bad" so adroitly "mixed with the good" in the "movement."

A few of us, however, have read Rall's and have found the "fly in the ointment," and some of us have read Dr. Rice's unfortunate book, and are inclined to feel that it would be dangerous, were it not that we think that many who try to read it will not understand it, and those who understand it will not believe it.

Our preachers are absorbed in the business of saving souls; and so are many of our lay members. Our Epworth Leaguers are ablaze with revival fire. Our Sunday schools are growing in grace and in attendance as never before. Our church schools are overflowing and utterly free from tainted teachers, though now and then a tainted text-book slips in, only to be thrown out.

We are moving along joyously.

> "We are traveling home to God
> In the way our fathers trod," believing firmly in "The Fundamentals of Methodism," and not concerned about the new baby called "The Fundamentalist Movement." But we read now and then, in some of our church periodicals, the fervid effusions of some few who have caught the "Modernist" itch, and are striving to show that they are the learned ones of the church, and that the rest of us are pitifully ignorant. We laugh at their attitude, and sigh that some fine fellows are losing precious time while the attack lasts.

I read with interest and approval Bishop Mouzon's quotations from Wesley indicating his splendid catholicity. I read them years ago, and have gloried in them, often citing them. I read from a pastor who told us that he shut the door of the church against an earnest seeker who could not accede to the written creed of Methodism. I would not have shut him out. I should have "labored with him," hoping to save him. A good revival would have wrought wonders for that skeptic. I do not think that Mr. Wesley or Bishop Mouzon would have shut the door against that man.

All that Bishop Mouzon says in his two articles on "The Fundamentalist Movement" is wise, and true, and timely. I object to none of it. I might object to the fact that he did not say some other things. I wish he would tell us what he thinks Mr. Wesley would have said and done if one of his preachers had gone wild on the Pentateuch, and Daniel, the Virgin Birth of Christ and other Methodist fundamentals? I think he would have said something like this: "Brother, it is your right to believe what you may; and you are still my brother beloved: but you are no longer wanted as a pastor of any one of our Methodist Societies." We need not be greatly concerned about vagaries of belief in our untaught and untrained membership; but we are very certainly and greatly concerned about what our preachers and college men are teaching. I do not think that Mr. Wesley would have dealt with the unfaith of a preacher just as he would the trembling belief of a seeker of salvation.

THE CONTENTED PREACHER'S WIFE.

By a Parsonage Dweller.

So many have written of the difficulties of the preacher's wife, that I am literally driven to take up my pen and see if there can be found some advantages accruing from this mooted relation. Let me say, in the beginning, that all honor is due those faithful and sainted ones who bore the brunt of pioneer life as preachers—rather, circuit riders' wives, and who to-day are resting from their labors in a more abundant life. What I am writing seems to me applicable to our times just now.

In some of the discussions, it seems the writers had forgotten, to some extent, the spiritual element—"the high calling in God"—and were using as the end of living for the preacher's family, mere outward symbols of success. All agree that there is some denial in consecrating oneself to the uplift of the race; the denial of self for all, but this is swallowed up in the great inflow of love and joy that comes to the individual thus consecrated. This conviction has come to me after fifteen years of parsonage life.

As a girl I had read how Charlotte Bronte's father, who was curate of a certain English parish, in an effort to teach the dear little wife humility, had consigned to the flames a dainty silk dress, with slippers to match. These had been sent by a greatly-loved aunt, and, no doubt, the wife's heart was broken as completely as she was humbled. So I, with fear and trembling, assumed the role of preacher's wife, wondering how my husband would feel about my love for the beautiful colors and fabrics that go into the average woman's wardrobe. To my joy, I was unhampered in this direction, and have always been free to express my happiness in rainbow colors, if I chose to do so; and thus it has been in every phase of parsonage life—no restriction in development, no narrowed sphere.

I had meant to tell of the contented preacher's wife, rather of the glory and splendor that comes into the truly consecrated life. There is no narrowness, no limitation to the truly spiritually awakened. How can one be limited when possessed of the glory of the indwelling Christ? There may be times when one cannot see just where all the necessities for decent and wholesome living are coming from, but Elijah's God—our God—does not fail us! Somehow, in my own life, just when we needed most that extra money for coats, shoes, books, etc., there would appear from God's bounty the means to supply the needs. The cattle on a thousand hills are his, and can't we believe that our Father will withhold no good things from his children? I am so thankful that I have, to some degree, outgrown these pecuniary fears, for through the deep waters, even through sickness and death, he has safely led us—and always there has been "a sufficiency of things." I have felt poverty keenly—the poverty of ability and spirit—not being able to do for others what they had a right to expect of one of God's servants set aside specially for spiritual work. That has been, and is, the heartache of my life, and I should think of many others, too. Even now, I wonder if we really give to people under us the spiritual returns due them for what they invest in us. I pray that we may more deeply realize what it means to be set apart for the feeding of the flock of God which is among us. Forbid that we should give stones instead of bread!

I know the longing that comes to every woman for a permanent home; yet, after all, what is permanent? Only our achievement in the spiritual realm. Paul says that even knowledge shall vanish away.

So, my dear reader, let's magnify our sphere, which is as limitless as God himself. What a glorious task is ours—just the same task that the Master had—making earth more like Heaven, fulfilling the prayer, "thy will be done on earth as in Heaven."

And while we are thus engaged, we meet the best people, along with those not so good. The best homes are ours, also we are welcome guests at the best social gatherings; and perhaps the one costume will do away with the necessity of trying to choose what to wear.

This custom of moving from place to place also gives us a chance for a new beginning. The parsonage mistress can garner the richness of the best friendships and pass on to others the sweet fragrance of her own life and ideals. Though she leaves her friends behind, along with her much-loved flowers, she can start anew. She may even get a more choice collection of flowers and friends. Just now I am looking from my window into a flower garden, all aglow with petunias, zinnias, salvia, gladioli, daisies and dahlias, all put out since Christmas. True, we left flowers behind we loved, but these we have are equally as gloriously tinted as any that flourished in our other yard. Then, too, we could arrange these to our liking, profiting by past mistakes.

As I have been writing, my mind's eye has detected no dismal side to parsonage life, though back in memory's deep recesses there linger traces of dismal parsonage walls, and even these are rapidly passing away. May all with glad hearts take up our task of living the Christ life before a "wicked and perverse generation." Why can't we be so filled with love that our lives will be truly radiating centers of spiritual energy and light? Seems to me I hear the Master say:

"Go, speak and live for Me to-day,
And let not worldly glamour obscure the light,
That thou art sent to bear to those in darkest night."

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

"Behold, I see the heavens opened and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God." Stephen's testimony to the supreme fact of a risen Lord infuriated the materialistic senate of Sadducean Jews. The tragedy that followed was really the opening gun of the battle of the ages, this never-ceasing warfare between blind, materialistic conception of things human and be- [illegible] tion.

The rationalistic teaching now so widespread in our land, seeking whom it may devour and deceive, is but Sadduceeism risen from the musty tomb of the past. Like cats on the back fence it has many lives and howls quite [illegible], not knowing that all feline forbears held midnight serenades.

Christianity came upon a world that was sick, worn and tired of mere human thought on the great subjects of life and destiny. Read Plato's Phaedo and you get only the very [illegible] of philosophy, and no thinker in this particular field has surpassed or superseded him. But when Christ came, mighty spiritual forces were unloosed. All his great life is a miracle. I can't see why men should stumble at his virgin birth any more than other great spiritual facts of his life, his person, and his works.

When heaven touches earth you may well expect wonderful things. From his conception to his ascension, one envisions a splendid train of miracles that will ever challenge the faith of the world. Now it is faith in him and his works that unlocks the riches of his life and kingdom. It is here that human reason fails and fails most miserably in its vain attempt to fathom the things made clear through faith. In short, the line is drawn just here—is the record of his life and works as given by the four gospels to be accepted in whole or part? To my mind every phase of his earthly career, from Bethlehem to Olivet, is involved and embraced in the plan of redemption. Christ is ever supernatural; hence no system based on mere human understanding can apprehend him or appropriate his redeeming life and power. Believe and thou shalt be saved, is now and forever the battle cry of freedom from sin.

* * *

More and more I am impressed with the supernatural in our holy faith. Read again the thirteenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles—Paul's first sermon in defense of Christianity. See how he links the divine Sonship, quoting from the second Psalm, "Thou are my son, this day have I begotten thee," with the supreme facts of Christ's resurrection and his immortality. I fear some of our modern apostles are not reading the Bible. I am sure they are not accepting that marvelous history of the early church known as the Acts of the Apostles. For therein is enough spiritual dynamic to blow to farthest Hades all the spurious stuff which is palmed off through sensational newspapers as advanced thoughts. Oh, yes, let a man think, but let him think right thoughts, thoughts based on the cardinal, unchangeable, essential principles once and forever revealed to the saints of God. If I understand Methodism, it means freedom of thought within the bounds of revealed truth. It wears no man's collar, but bows submissively to the "yoke that is easy and the burden that is light." It revels in the pure air and magnificent flowers in the garden of God, but would not pollute its beauty with the foul breath of unbelief nor mangle and mar its glory heedlessly.

DWELL DEEP IN CHRIST.

May you dwell deep in Christ! When you get upon the Rock Christ Jesus you are safe, when you get into the Rock you are happy. A man on the Rock will be subject to the wind and to the rain, to the damp of dews and to the heat of the sun; but to a man in the Rock it does not matter what weather it is; whether it blows or shines, he is fully sheltered. The innermost place of the sanctuary is the most divine. Dwell deep.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Every moment of time bears an errand of mercy, and should not be allowed to pass without an acknowledgment of gratitude.—Crafts.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Sardis District.

All our preachers of the Sardis District are on their jobs, and are hard at it. We have almost finished the third round and are glad to report that, generally speaking, the work of the church is progressing fine throughout the district.

* * *

Our congregation at Arkabutler is planning to move their church out on the highway and build Sunday school rooms. Our congregation at Sarah, same charge, have gotten into their own church, of which they are justly proud. This church is wide-awake, having paid in full for the year their assessment for ministerial support.

* * *

Brother N. N. Maxie, who was on the Tyro circuit, suffered the loss of his wife early in June. She was afflicted with tuberculosis. In order that he might give her the best attention possible Brother Maxie carried her to North Carolina, giving up his charge for that purpose. Sister Maxie lived but ten days after reaching North Carolina. During the absence of Brother Maxie, Brother S. E. Ashmore, of the Columbus District, who is coming up for admission on trial this fall, was secured for the Tyro circuit. Brother Ashmore starts off fine on the work, and is destined to do a great work on the Tyro circuit.

* * *

Brother Randolph has everything in good shape at Sardis, and is now at Lake Junaluska for study and recreation. The Sunday school training school that he worked up for Sardis and surrounding charges was a great success. The school was larger this year than heretofore, and bids fair to become a permanent thing of great good to Sardis and the Sardis District.

* * *

Under Brother Young's wise leadership, our church at Batesville has completed the building of one of the finest parsonages there is in the North Mississippi Conference.

* * *

The Horn Lake charge did herself proud on the third quarter. There was more in finances reported at the third quarterly conference than at either the first or the second, and the charge was well up at the second quarter. Brother Ingram is liked by his people and is doing a good work.

* * *

The District Secretary of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, Sister Clara Short, is making a strenuous effort to organize a Missionary Society in each church of the district.

* * *

The people of the Sardis District are lovers of the preaching of the old-time religion. It is a real pleasure to work with a people who love God, believe the Bible to be the Word of God and trust Jesus as their personal Saviour.

DISAGREEING WITH A BISHOP.

By Rev. Henry T. Young.

It may seem foolish for one so insignificant as I to disagree with one so prominent as Bishop Mouzon, but nevertheless I do. I shall not attempt to question the motive he gives in the last paragraph of his article in the New Orleans Christian Advocate of June 28. He means well, I do not doubt, but falls into his own trap—"The Mixing of Things is the Great Bad." He calls on us to rally to Methodist standards. Personally, I rallied to them several years ago, and believe I am still "hitched." If the Bishop can show us, who are "Fundamentalists," that those whom he indorses are defending Methodist standards, there will be no further trouble with us. I am sorry one of our bishops should have assailed Fundamentalism, for in the minds of most people there are just two groups of Christians—Fundamentalists and Modernists; and to attack one is to ally oneself with the other, in the minds of most people, and his stand puts him, in the thinking of the most of us, in the camp with the Modernists, which puts him publicly as having taken a partisan stand; and that, as I sincerely think, against the backbone of Methodism, for I really believe the spiritual force of our church is in sympathy with Fundamentalism. However, I will say this, that nobody can catalogue a creed that either of these factions accepts as a whole. I surely do not accept everything as named by Bishop Mouzon, but I am much in sympathy with Fundamentalism. Some of the things that the Bishop rejects, however, were heartily accepted by Moody and others whom God has greatly honored. So far as I am concerned, and I think I am just normal as a Methodist Fundamentalist, I had rather hold a thing hatched out in a "Prophetic Conference," than to have the marks of German rationalism on my creed. I have not seen any statement from the Bishop indicating a change of his written approval of Dr. Rice's book, and that book has much of the German scholarship in it. German rationalism must meet the judgment and give an account of the more than twenty millions of dead and wounded of the world war; the sorrow and poverty resulting from that awful conflict, and chaotic world condition that no prophet can foretell the future of.

Speaking from a Fundamentalist, view, I, who am a Methodist through and through, will say that Fundamentalists DO NOT CALL ALL WHO DISAGREE WITH THEM INFIDELS. I have the highest regard for many whom I know to be in sympathy with Modernism. But, viewing the ruin wrought in Germany; the worldly and unstableness in the Northern Baptist churches; the demoralized state of the Presbyterians of the North, and the false teachings among the Episcopalians; the helplessness of their leaders to stem the tide (remember the Grant case, and the heresy of the Congregational Church), I believe we should stand against Modernism in our Methodism as really and fearlessly as the French stood at Verdun, crying, "They shall not pass"; and to this I am dedicated. I would fear to leave my posterity in a church that endorsed Darwinianism or the false views of the Bible that are the outgrowth of that subtle philosophy.

I object that we "are making Christian faith difficult." Moody did not; Gipsy Smith does not; Billy Sunday does not; R. A. Torry does not; Paul Rader does not; George Truitt does not; Robert Dick Wilson does not. There are many others, as prominent as our own Bishop Mouzon. I believe the sympathies of Bishop Warren A. Candler are with the Fundamentalists, and he needs no defense among Christians of America.

He regrets that "well meaning men but misguided men put a stumbling block in the way of honest and sincere people who would come to Christ." I want it understood, I do not call Bishop Mouzon a Modernist, but I do say that he seems to throw his sympathies in with them, and I challenge him to show a great soul-winner who is allied with the Modernists. Judging by their fruits is what makes us "misguided, but well meaning men," suspicious of anything that smirks of German rationalism or Modernism.

He says "the verbal theory is not true." I agree with him thus far, but I would ask, What is true? He objects to taking the Bible "literally." How shall we take it? The "Seed of the Woman," promise; the promises to Abraham; the Virgin bringing forth a Son; the suffering Christ, etc., were and are being, literally fulfilled. Will the Bishop, or any other, Modern, or otherwise, please edit the Bible and tell us what to take literally and what to take as a figure? Will any man on earth tell us what is true and what is not true in the Bible? If not, then it is time for some people to take their little scholarship out of circulation and help us take the Bible as the eternal Word of God and by grace and power divine save a world with it.

Substitutionary Atonement has been a battleground where giants have wrestled, and Calvanists may have defended it, and all that, but that "He bore our sins in his body on the tree," is Scriptural, and that "He gave himself for us," huper humas—instead of us—is likewise true. So, if some fellow does hold to this theory, there is a possibility of his being right. I loath the chief Calvanistic doctrine, Predestination—but so true is the substitutionary theory that I find God takes the names of us who believe and puts them in "the Lamb's Book of Life." That looks like that statement—"Who of God is made for us, righteousness, wisdom, sanctification and redemption." I Co. 1:30.

Fundamentalists are wrongly accused of preaching a creed not Christ. I refute it with Moody. Fundamentalists preach Christ as a Savior, and defend the Bible, because it is the only book that tells us of Christ. We know that when this foundation is destroyed, the whole structure will tumble, and the world will then have no Christ, or, at least, knowledge of him.

True, John Wesley laid stress on personal faith and a holy life, but being a man of "one Book, and that Book the Bible," he taught the faith and life of the Bible always, and continually appealed to the Bible to support his contentions.

There is a difference in the "Intolerance" of Fundamentalism and Romanism: One defends man-made creeds; the other defends the Bible as the eternal Word of God.

The Bishop accuses us of being deluded into following Fundamentalism because we do not know what Methodism stands for. If we were that easily beguiled, we would still be sending our boys to Vanderbilt University, calling it a Methodist institution, and the Lord knows where some of us would be, because we have had some strong men among us who have seemingly tried to lead us into German Rationalism, and in spite of our credulity we have refused to be led. Don't worry, Bishop, we are not straw men.

We do not stress the gospel to the exclusion of the social needs. We believe that "all things should be under him." I do not agree with all the theology taught at Moody's Bible Institute, but there is a hotbed of Fundamentalism, and they have shown by the large number of their students in foreign fields, and their stress on tithing, even when we were asleep on it, too much results to be accused of offering a gospel that does not care for others. However, the very thing Modernism tends toward is exactly what the Bible dreads. Look at Unitarianism. They have always been Modernists.

Some of our people, perhaps, do attend the Bible schools of the Fundamentalists, but only in self-defense. Look at ours this summer with such as Shailer Mathews on the program. We would do wise to at least divide our efforts in these schools or conferences.

Fundamentalism is not sowing dissension among the churches. It is standing for the only possible thing upon which all Christians should and can agree and unite on—the Bible. The Bishop is right—we all know—in saying that a Methodist is not measured by his opinions. He is known by his fruits, and the only standard by which his fruits are judged is the Bible, and that not subject to an acceptance with a mental reservation. We Methodists have accepted it, and May God help us not to depart therefrom.

THE SEASHORE CAMP GROUND—SOME REMINISCENCES.

By Payton A. Sowell.

II.

In the old country home, a "horn" was kept at a convenient place to use in emergencies. The sound of this horn between meals or in the night meant to call all in hearing to the house; and it called the laborers to dinner. And it so was that some settler furnished a "camp meeting" horn. It called the worshipers to the arbor. But the "camp meeting horn" is as silent as the voices of the great "camp meeting" singers and preachers. Its notes no longer echo from the sides of the middle Tennessee hills, and from the great forest trees.

As early as 1811—112 years ago—Revs. Lorenzo Dow, Learner Blackman, and Tobias Gibson held a camp meeting near Washington, Miss. No greater trio ever conducted a camp meeting in Mississippi, or the United States. Lorenzo Dow died in 1834—I do not know his burial place. Learner Blackman, yet in the vigor of manhood, was drowned, and his dust is in an old cemetery of Cincinnati, Ohio. Tobias Gibson died near Vicksburg, Miss., and was buried in the community where he died.

I am sure, as Mississippi Methodists think of the toil, sacrifice, and success of these men, they regret that there are not thousands of Methodists in Mississippi where there are only hundreds now.

There was a beginning to "The Seashore Camp Ground." The beautiful Gulf Coast where it sits, with its feet in the waters of the "Sound," is known to people over the whole South—and into the far North.

John Henry Keller was born in Germany. Early in life he came to New Orleans, La. Christine Keller, his wife, was also a native of Germany. They were both Methodists, and members of Dryades Street Church, New Orleans.

They began in a modest way their business life, and good judgment and industry finally brought to them wealth. They both gave their hands and strength to the affairs of life—she as well as he.

Some time about 1870—perhaps before—they bought a summer home near to or touching the east boundary of what is now the "Seashore Camp Ground School" property.

Why John Henry Keller bought 113 acres, more or less, from Emily O'Brien, I have not been able to learn—whether he did so to protect his own home, or because his good sense showed him it was a bargain, or he wanted to see a "great Methodist camp meeting" established on these lovely acres. Anyway, on Dec. 15, 1871, he paid $1,050 for the said tract.

On May 20, 1872, he and his wife deeded the same tract to a "Board of Camp Meeting Trustees" from New Orleans. He did this for the sum of $1,100. In those years that was a very reasonable profit—in less than a year. And yet it was not "profiteering."

Perhaps the first religious meeting at "The Seashore Camp Ground" was held in 1872, and perhaps under a "tent." The most, if not all the "camp ground tenters" the first year, perhaps lived in "tents"—cloth tents. On Feb. 26, 1876, Aimie Duarche (I may not spell correctly) and A. Jourdain, deeded to the "Board of Camp Meeting Trustees" 100 acres, more or less, the said land lying on and touching the west boundary of the 113 acres bought of John Henry Keller and wife. For this the Trustees gave $1,500. And so the Trustees came to own these beautiful acres at the low price of $2,900.

The old shelter for religious services may have been erected in 1872 or 1873. It served a great purpose, afforded shelter and a temple for years and years. Under its roof and within its walls many of the greatest preachers of the South and of the United States—preached the Gospel of Christ.

Ten or more years ago, the commodious auditorium was builded, in the place of the first "Old shelter."

The "Board of Camp Meeting Trustees" of New Orleans deeded the land to the trustees of the Louisiana Conference—and on and on it was deeded to trustees from the New Orleans District, the Seashore District, and the Mobile District, and finally it became the property of the church, through the Louisiana Conference, the Mississippi Conference, and the Alabama Conference, and is now—"The Seashore Camp Ground School." I may be mistaken in the statement that the "Board of Camp Meeting Trustees" deeded it to the Louisiana Annual Conference," but this story is no official record. I am impressed with the idea that it took that course. At any event the title has passed from J. H. Keller and others, on and on, until it is the property of the trustees, or, through trustees, of the three Conferences.

COMPLETENESS.

Do you ask, "How can I get such a blessing?" You will get it by bringing in all the tithes, by giving yourself in love and obedience and wholehearted, joyous consecration to Jesus, as a true bride gives herself to her husband. Do not try to bargain with the Lord and buy it of him, but wait on him in never-give-in prayer and confident expectation, and he will give it to you. And then you must not hold it selfishly for your own gratification, but let it overflow to the hungry, thirsty, fainting world about you. God bless you even now, and do for you exceeding abundantly above all you ask or think! A comrade went from one of my meetings recently with a heart greatly burdened for the blessing, for two or three days and nights did little else but read the Bible, and pray and cry to God for a clean heart filled with the Spirit. At last the Comforter came, and with him fulness of peace and joy and soul-rest, and that day this comrade led a number of others into the blessing. Hallelujah! "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" (Luke 11:13). "Ask, . . . seek, . . . knock."—Selected.

It is an utterly low view of business which regards it as only a means of getting a living. A man's business is his part of the world's work, his share of the great activities which render society possible. He may like it or dislike it, but it is work, and as such requires application, self-denial, discipline.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Call of the Conference Claimants

EDITED BY LUTHER E. TODD, SECRETARY

510-513 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.

This week I am publishing a remarkable aritcle written by Mr. Marvin Campbell, of South Bend, Ind., a splendid layman of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Possibly it contains some statements that should not be published as applying to Southern Methodism, and yet there runs through it such passion and interest for the cause of the Conference claimants that I believe it will help to arouse our people on this subject.

The Methodist Episcopal Church is seeking to pay a certain minimum amount to each claimant yearly and to secure same by placing the total amount in the budget. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is striving to pay a certain amount yearly to each claimant and to secure this amount (1) by assessment through the budget and (2) by income from adequate superannuate endowment, which is to supplement the amount coming from the assessment. The assessment part of our program has now well-nigh reached our aim so far as it is concerned, and we expect at the Annual Conferences this fall to project a special effort looking to secure a minimum of ten million dollars' superannuate endowment to complete the program.

I believe the reading of the following article by Mr. Campbell will serve to stir loyal Southern Methodists to support the special effort for superannuate endowment in a manner that will guarantee its success in overflowing measure.

OUR DISHONORED DEBT.

By Mr. Marvin Campbell.

Our "debt of dishonor" is not the debt of any Board but of our Church as an organization. If as an individual I were to treat my debts of honor, my promise to my employees, my contract obligations with the same lack of fidelity as does the Methodist Epsicopal Church, I would retain no standing in my Church or community as a reliable, honest man.

This criticism is not prompted by any spirit except the hope of benefit, and purposely I have made the statement strong, (1) because it is a fact and (2) because I want all who have read thus far to read further the proof of it. Especially do I want bishops, district superintendents, and ministers to read what I am about to say, because upon them rests the responsibility of conditions as they are, and in them is the remedy, the observing of the law.

The Ethics of Business.—I am president of two manufacturing corporations and own a large majority of the capital stock of both. Hence I control them and am responsible for the honorable or dishonorable way in which they meet their obligations. We have employees to whom we pay a bonus at the end of each six months based on certain conditions. If at the end of any six months or, worse, if repeatedly and continuously at the end of any six months' period I should say to these people, "You have met all the conditions on which we agreed to pay these bonuses; but we have paid unusual amounts to hospitals, orphans' homes, colleges, associated charities, and have decided that these are justifiable reasons for not paying you what we promised to pay," such treatment of my employees would leave me without standing with them and without the confidence of my church and community.

Church Ethics.—The Methodist Episcopal Church is exactly in this position in regard to its aged and disabled retired ministers and the widows and orphans, and its members cannot do as individuals without loss of religious, moral, or business standing that which the Church as a whole has been doing for the last fifteen years.

Concisely the facts are these: Our ministers, all in one class as to their support, are divided into four groups: (1) bishops, (2) district superintendents, (3) pastors, and (4) superannuates (Conference claimants). Provision for the support of all is by the budget plan, one budget in each pastoral charge, and each of the four ministerial groups has a ratio share based and its claim. If there is a shortage, each is required to bear its ratio of the shortage.

1. The Book Concern estimates the claim for the bishops and apportions it to the Annual Conferences, which apportion it to the individual churches, and in this way the bishops should and do get their support.

2. The district stewards estimate the claim of the district superintendents, and this is apportioned to the respective churches of each district, and in this way the district superintendents should and do get their support.

3. The Quarterly Conference of each individual church estimates the claim of the pastor and apportions it to the membership of the church, and in this way the pastor should and does get his support.

4. For the retired ministers and other claimants the annuity claim is positively stated. They are the "preferred stockholders" of the church. Each annuitant shall have one-seventieth of the average salary of his Conference multiplied by his years of service. The Conference stewards shall compute the amount required and apportion it to the respective churches, and in this way the annuitants should receive the full amount of the Disciplinary pledge if it were apportioned. But in most Conferences the full apportionment is not made.

A Sacred Pledge.—The retired ministers rely upon the pledge of the Church, so clearly set forth in its Discipline, to give them a comfortable support in disability or old age by a life annuity. This is a positive contract and a solemn pledge just as surely as any contract that I ever made or ever could make with my employees when they begin and while they continue their service with me, and the Methodist Church cannot with integrity disregard this obligation any more than with integrity I can disregard my business obligations. There is no call for Church funds that can take prior claim to this obligation. Home missions, foreign missions, church extension, hospitals, any call, every call is second as a matter of integrity to this obligation written in the law of the Church. It is the only positive, fixed amount, contract obligation in the Discipline. All others are dependent upon conditions. This is mandatory and must in honor be met even if to do so means that other suggested expeditures be ignored. I repeat it: the retired minister who has met his conditions of service for forty years or more or who is sixty or more years of age or who is incapacitated for itinerant work is a preferred stockholder entitled by contract to a definitely pledged amount, and nothing can excuse the payment except insolvency.

The Facts in the Case.—But in practice what are the facts? This pledge of budget support was made by the General Conference of 1908 after being approved by a commission appointed four years previously consisting of three bishops, Cranston, Hamilton, and Joyce; three ministers, Drs. J. H. Hamilton, W. H. Wilder, and J. E. Stubbs; and three laymen, R. T. Miller, John E. Andrus, and myself. With slight amendments, in order to make the claim more positive, it has been repeatedly ratified. I have been on the Conference Claimants' Committee of every General Conference since that time and know the intent to uphold and emphasize this claim. As to the contract, the language of the Discipline has no ambiguity nor uncertainty. Yet fifteen years have passed and only twelve per cent of the Annual Conferences paid the full Disciplinary annuity, while twenty per cent of them paid three-fourths of their Disciplinary annuity, forty-six per cent of them paid half of their promised annuity, and twent-two per cent of them paid less than fifty per cent. Sixty-eight per cent of the Conferences, five more than two-thirds of them, paid only fifty per cent or less of this positive annuity contract made by the Church.

Paying and living.—It cannot be said that Methodism does not have the ability to meet its contracts, for it is financially solvent. Millions and millions of dollars are paid each year through solicitation. That is glorious, but liberality has no religious nor moral right to intrude on contract obligations. If an Annual Conference is not in position to meet its contract pledge to its superannuates, it is not in a position to pay a dollar for benevolences until it does so. But Annual Conferences can do both.

Again, if a Conference finds that it must apportion to the superannuates only fifty per cent of their claim, it should take the same position toward its other ministers and apportion to the bishops, district superintendents, and pastors only fifty per cent of their claims, so that all classes of the ministry may receive a like ratio of their several claims. This would be equity. It would be religious honesty. It would be following the law as to sharing in the ratio of the shortage, "prorating" as it is called in the Discipline. It would be an honest application of the Golden Rule.

The Golden Rule.—Why am I so earnest about this? Why do I put the facts so plainly? Well, possibly I know the facts more intimately than many other church members. My work with the commission that studied this question and on the committee in each General Conference since the law was placed in the Discipline may have impressed its essential features and the default of the Church more intensely on me than on the casual reader. I am charitable enough to grant that. Further, the Church as a whole may be so absorbed in other things and so zealous along other good lines that it overlooks this basic obligation which cannot be ignored with honor. I can conceive of no other possible excuse and do not grant that this is a valid one.

I hope that our church papers, bishops, officials, and pastors will together demand of Methodism such a regard for its promises as will require that the Methodist Episcopal Church as a composite whole shall meet its contracts with the fidelity that it expects to obtain in the business conduct of its members in their relation to their individual contracts.

"WHAT OF THAT?"

Tired? Well, what of that?
Didst fancy life was spent on beds of ease,
Fluttering the rose leaves scatter'd by the breeze?
Come, rouse thee! Work while it is called day!
Coward, arise! Go forth upon the way.

Lonely? And what of that?
Some must be lonely; 'tis not given to all
To feel a heart responsive rise and fall,
To blend another life into his own.
Work may be done in loneliness. Work on!

Dark? Well, what of that?
Didst fondly dream the sun would never set?
Dost fear to lose thy way? Take courage yet;
Learn thou to walk by faith and not by sight;
Thy steps will guided be, and guided right.

Hard? Well, what of that?
Didst fancy life one summer holiday,
With lessons none to learn and nought but play?
Go, get thee to thy task! Conquer or die!
It must be learned; learn it, then, patiently.

No help? Nay, 'tis not so!
Though human help be far, thy God is nigh;
Who feeds the ravens, hears His children's cry.
He's near thee, whereso'er thy footsteps roam,
And He will guide thee, light thee, help thee home.

PEGGY'S MYSTERIOUS PICTURE.

Little Peggy did not want to learn to read. She said she would much rather play with her dolls, or go out in the fields to look for spring flowers. But her mother said it was time she went to school, and that if she worked hard, she would be able to read lots and lots of nice stories, without waiting until mother had time to read them to her.

So Peggy went to school, but she was sulky about it. The other little girls and boys set to work eagerly to learn the letters of the alphabet, but Peggy just looked out of the window and pouted and frowned.

"What is the matter, little girl?" asked the teacher.

"I don't want to learn my letters. I don't want to learn to read. I want to go home and play with my dolls," said Peggy.

The teacher said nothing, but when Peggy came to school next morning she found a picture lying on her desk. It was the picture of a little girl.

"That is a present for you," said the teacher.

"But who is the little girl?" asked Peggy.

So Peggy turned the picture over, and there was a lot of printing on the back of it. But to her it looked only like a lot of funny little black marks, for she had not learned her letters.

"I am not going to tell you the little girl's name," said the teacher, "but if you will work hard and learn your letters, you will be able to find out for yourself."

Peggy started out bravely with the other children, but before it was time to go home she was tired of working.

"I can't learn them," she said. "There are too many."

The teacher laughed. "Why, there are only twenty-six of them," she said. "If the little girl in the picture could hear you say that, she would laugh at you. See how hard she is working."

"Oh, no, she isn't," said the teacher.

"What is she doing?" asked Peggy.

"I am not going to tell you," said the teacher, "but if you learn your twenty-six letters, and learn to make words with them, you can find out for yourself."

Every morning Peggy found the picture on her desk. When she grew discouraged over the number of letters she must learn, one look at the picture was enough to make her go to work again. For had not the teacher said that the little girl would laugh at her if she couldn't learn twenty-six letters? And what was the little girl doing, if she wasn't painting pictures?

At last all the letters were leraned, and Peggy began to put them together in words. One morning the teacher said to her, "Now I think you can find out about that little girl who has been sitting on your desk so long."

Peggy flew to her desk and snatched up the picture. She turned it over and began to read slowly.

"My name is Su Sing." ("What a funny name!" thought Peggy.) "I live in China," she read on. "Many people in China think that little girls should not go to school." ("That's just what I think," said Peggy to herself.) "But I wanted to go," the story continued, "because I want to know as much as my brother knows. He goes to school and learns many things. So I told my father and my mother that I must go to school, and at last they sent me.

"I am learning to read, but it will take me a long time. Chinese letters are not like your letters. They are like little pictnres, each with a story of its own, which I must learn by heart. In this picture I am learning to write some of them. I do not use a pen or pencil, but a brush, such as you use for painting pictures. I do not write across the page in lines, as you do, but down the page in columns. It takes seventeen strokes of the brush to make some of these letters, so I cannot do it very quickly.

"My teacher tells me that you have only twenty-six letters to learn before you can begin to read and write. Before I can become a well-educated girl and read Chinese books, I must learn by heart about five thousand Chinese characters. But I shall not give up until I have learned them, for I want to be as wise as my brother."

"Oh!" cried the little girl, "I am so glad that I learned to read! Su Sing surely would have laughed at me, if I couldn't have learned twenty-six letters."—Marjorie R. Peck.

MUSINGS OF MEHITABEL.

By Rozella McCaramon.

On a beautiful day in early summer, as I was busy in my kitchen preparing good things for the comfort of my family, Keren-Happuch appeared. And her brow was clouded and her usually sweet smile was absent.

And I greeted her thus: "Why the darkened brow and the tight lips? Knowest thou not that such things are an abomination on such a delightful day?"

"Yea, I know it. And there are other abominations also. I know not whether I am righteously indignant or just plain mad."

I perceived that she was indeed much vexed of soul, so I responded, "Relieve thy mind by confiding in me, and perhaps I can help thee to decide which."

And straightway she poured out her tale: "Thou knowest I have to go to the dentist this afternoon. I must needs have some one to stay with the children, and I asked Cousin Mary. They love her and she them, and they always have a glorious time together. But every time I ask her for any favor I declare to myself, 'Never again.' And today it was worse than ever."

"Doth she not incline to favors?"

"She delighteth in them. There is nothing she will not do for a friend, and at the same time makes one feel like well, like I do now. She telleth how many of her own affairs must be put aside to accommodate thee, and how much she has already done for thee, and so forth, until thou dost wish thou hadst never asked her. And at the same time thou knowest she is glad in her heart to do the favor and would be hurt if you asked her not. But why does she act so, Mehitabel?"

"I understand. Many like experiences have I undergone. So I think thou art righteously indignant. What right hath any one to take the pleasure out of giving and receiving a favor? A favor is a favor. Just like this milk I have been using. Some is full milk and some is skimmed. Cousin Mary hath much of the milk of human kindness, but she skimmeth the cream."

"Oh, Mehitabel, thou art such a comfort! Thou hast restored my good nature. Skimming the cream from the milk of human kindness! Cousin Mary ought to hear that. Yea, verily, and I will see that she doth."—Western Christian Advocate.

FUNDAMENTALS OF METHODISM.

Paul's high principle of Christian liberty brings us exactly to the same point: "All things are lawful to me; but not all things are expedient. All things are lawful to me; but I will not be brought under the power of any." "All things are lawful; but not all things edify. Let no man seek his own, but each his neighbor's good."

Whosoever else may compromise with the world, Methodists must not compromise. When Methodism compromises, she loses her quality and character, and ceases to bear that testimony to "holiness unto the Lord" for the sake of which God raised her up and sent her forth into the world. For Methodism to compromise is for Methodism to die. To repeat words quoted above: "The loss of Puritanism is one of the dangers of the present to Methodism."

And yet I must remind my brethren that these Methodist General Rules were never intended to be a rod to beat the sheep with. Rather they are a staff with which to guide them. For it should not be forgotten, but should always be remembered, that "discipline" means "teaching," or "training"; and the use of "discipline" is for salvation and not for destruction. Its purpose is to hold up a lofty standard of Christian living before our people while the kind and sympathetic pastor guides his flock into paths of righteousness.

2. And consider what Wesley has to say about the positive aspect of the Christian life. A Methodist is expected to do good in every possible way, and as far as possible to all men.

The Methodist Way of Life is something more than a negative renouncing of the world. Historians have drawn out a very interesting parallel between John Wesley and Saint Francis of Assisi. The parallel is more superficial than real. Saint Francis is the supreme and classic example of asceticism, with tender and beautiful and human qualities which survive in spite of his asceticism. John Wesley, to a remarkable extent, left his asceticism behind—a discarded garment—when he put on the garments of the new life in Christ. Christianity knows nothing of self-denial for its own sake; and Methodism, when it is true to its spirit and genius, emphasizes self-denial only as the denial of the lower for the sake of the higher and the sacrifice of self in the service of mankind. A merely negative life is a very poor and beggarly life. It is, further, a very perilous life to live. The peril of the empty house is that the former inhabitant may return with other evil spirits like himself, "and the last state of that man becometh worse than the first."

The Methodist Way of Life, then, is far more than negative; it is very positive. We are exhorted and expected to "do good of every possible sort, and, as far as possible, to all men"—"to their bodies by giving food to the hungry, by clothing the naked, by visiting or helping them that are sick or in prison"—"to their souls, by instructing, reproving, exhorting all we have any intercourse with." We are to do good "especially to them that are of the household of faith or earnestly desiring to be," thus endeavoring to make of the church a genuine Christian brotherhood.

It will be seen immediately that according to Wesley's understanding of it, the gospel of Jesus Christ is not something purely individualistic; rather, it is essentially social. The soul of man, it should always be remembered, is the one thing that has absolute value—the only thing that, considered in itself, has infinite worth. Everything else is of worth only as it relates to the soul. But man is a part of the society he lives in. He is rooted in his environment and his environment becomes a part of himself. If man is to be fully saved, then the society in which he lives must be saved also. The New Testament recognizes this. Christ has a gospel for society as well as for the individual. As Canon Freemantle pointed out so ably in his Bampton Lectures, the world itself is the subject of redemption. Christ lived and taught and died not for the individual only, but that all society—all human life with all its varied institutions—might come under the redemptive power of his gospel. The preacher or teacher who discards and decries the orthodox emphasis on the social aspect of the gospel, is simply throwing away half of his gospel to the hurt of the kingdom of God.

By a true Christian instinct, Wesley and the first Methodists saw that if men and women and little children were to be fully saved, they should be put in the best circumstances possible. All this is clearly seen in the kind of work which was carried on in the first Methodist church built in London. "The Foundry"—so called because it was a church building made out of an old, abandoned foundry—was in almost every respect what one would call a modern institutional church. It was a Methodist preaching place; and it was much more than that: it was the center of all Methodist activities in London. Connected with it were Christian and social activities of various kinds. Here was a Book Room for the sale of Wesley's publications; here was a Savings Bank and Loan Office for the help of the worthy poor; here was a Free Medical Dispensary—the first established in London; here was a school for poor children; here was a Home for the Poor and Helpless; and here was a Christian Home where numbers of Christian workers resided, and from which the sanctified spirit of Susannah Wesley went to God. The Foundry incarnated the soul of Methodism—and Methodism to-day would do well to hark back to the spirit of her great founder.

> "Mr. Wesley's people think that they cannot love their neighbors as themselves without endeavoring to find out every possible way by which they may be serviceable to the souls and bodies of their fellow-creatures. In London and Bristol, and I believe in other places, some of their society who are able to pray, instruct, and exhort, endeavor to find out poor, distressed objects who are confined to their beds by diseases in poorhouses, prisons, lodging-houses, dirty alleys, lanes, etc. These poor, forsaken outcasts of society they instruct, exhort, pray with, etc. The objects most in want, they give money. Perhaps there cannot be any labor of love more praiseworthy, or more deserving of encouragement, as great numbers of such poor, destitute wretches may at times be found languishing in a forlorn state, and generally die without any one caring anything about them; for none but such as are filled with the love of God and man will ever go into such loathsome places and habitations. I formerly accompanied some of these loving people in this work of mercy, and have witnessed their cheerful performance of this great duty, which to a poor, selfish, unregenerate heart would be intolerable. But no labor, however disagreeable, or hazardous to health or life, is too much to be performed by such as are thoroughly impressed with the worth of an immortal soul; who are persuaded that Christ tasted death for every man, and would that every man should come to the knowledge of the truth and be saved. While they were employed in this solemn work, if they could discover any poor creature that gave them reason to hope for his conversion, O, what love and joy warmed every heart!"

When the Methodists of America met for their great Organizing Conference in the city of Baltimore at Christmas time, in 1784, they asked themselves a very definite question, and they gave a very definite answer. This was the question: "What may we reasonably believe to be God's design in raising up the preachers called Methodists?" And the following was their clear-cut answer: "To reform the continent, and to spread Scriptural holiness over these lands." Methodism in America, then, consciously and deliberately entered upon a two-fold mission—to reform the continent, and to spread Scriptural holiness over these lands. The work of "reform" helps to make Scriptural holiness possible; and "Scriptural holiness" always brings about reform. Both to the social aspect and to the individualistic aspect of the gospel, Methodism is committed by its essential character and by its history, as well as by the call of God.

But something else remains to be said, and it needs to be said very clearly and emphatically; for to err at this point is to make a fatal error. The prime object of all Christian philanthropy is the salvation of the soul. It is the perpetual danger of all who are interested in reform that they may lose their interest in individual sufferers and sinners, and that if interested in them as individuals, they come to think more about their bodies than about their souls. With profound insight, Isaac Taylor notes that one of the elements of Methodism in the eighteenth century was "Evangelic Philanthropy." "Evangelic Philanthropy"—that is a fine phrase and comes at once to the heart of the matter. "The benevolent affections"—thus he writes—"when kindled and enhanced by Christian motives, take a wide range and prompt Christian men to engage in enterprises of mercy which have respect more to the religious and moral necessities of their fellows, than to their bodily destitution. Those noble charities of these times which are carrying the Gospel out through the pagan wilderness—these have their rise in motives that are wholly approvable to the Christian law—'thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself'; for where we lodge Christianity, with its healing influence, and its purifying institutions, in the heart of a pagan country, we do that which embraces the purposes of all works of mercy, spiritual and temporal."

All of which is to say that Christian philanthropy is primarily evangelical—it is first of all interested in the gospel—the good tidings of redeeming grace to lost men—the salvation of man's immortal soul.

3. The third General Rule gives advice touching Spiritual Self-culture.

> "It is expected of all who desire to continue in these societies that they should continue to evidence their desire of salvation,
>
> Thirdly, by attending upon all the ordinances of God: such are,
>
> The public worship of God;
> The ministry of the word, either read or expounded;
> The Supper of the Lord;
> Family and private prayer;
> Searching the Scriptures; and > Fasting and abstinence."

The phrase which I have used, "spiritual self-culture," may be objected to. Dr. R. W. Dale, for instance, says that "self-culture, the great law of natural ethics, is unknown in the supernatural life." But immediately he goes on to explain what he means:

> "Christian holiness is nothing else than a revelation of the inexhaustible holiness of Christ * * * The Christian man does not simply develop and perfect his own life; he is constantly receiving and appropriating the life and power of the Son of God * * * Hence the possibilities of the Christian life are not to be measured by our native resources, but by the infinite perfection of Christ Himself. We dwell in Him; He dwells in us; and He is the living prophecy of the height and glory of our holiness—a prophecy never to be fulfilled on earth or in heaven, but perpetually moving toward fulfillment through struggle aud sorrow and frequent defeat in this world, and through endless ages of joy and triumph in the world to come."

With these words of the great English theologian we are in heartiest agreement. And in the light of the great truth which they set forth, we call attention to Wesley's insistence upon the importance of making use of the "means of grace."

Note briefly the things mentioned under this third General Rule: (1) "The public worship of God"—The soul perishes in solitude. Society is necessary if Christian faith is to grow. In public worship we come together with common sins and sorrows and frailties and hopes and fears and aspirations—and we find our needs supplied. Thus we are knit in a closer bond of brotherhood and our Christian faith grows stronger while God is glorified. (2) "The Ministry of the Word, either read or expounded"—The Word of God—the Holy Bible—has the first place in our Protestant worship. The Bible stands on every Protestant pulpit, and the pulpit stands directly before the people. Our people suffer when the reading of the Bible from the pulpit is neglected. Few things would help so much as a return to a wise and understanding "expounding of the Word." (3) "The Supper of the Lord"—This is Christ's holy institution in remembrance of his own death and passion. It perpetually preaches the fact that his Death is the central thing in the gospel. And here still, in the breaking of bread, does the living Christ make himself known to his followers. (4) "Family or private prayer"—The family is the social unit in Christianity. The home is the church in miniature. The writer of this communication may be pardoned for saying that of all the memories of his childhood none is more sacred, for none made a holier impression on him or had more lasting influence, than those which cluster around the "family altar." Oh, that the Methodists of this generation would rebuild the altars that have fallen down! And private prayer is necessary if one is to maintain the Christian life. Nothing tells more immediately on Christian character than the neglect of private prayer. A visitor to City Road Chapel, London, goes immediately to Wesley's house. There he is directed to Wesley's "Prayer Room." Opening out of Wesley's bedroom is a little chamber which is a sacred spot indeed. This was Wesley's closet where he shut himself in with God. Methodism was made by such prayers as were offered in this little room. Here the writer bows his head and prays that he also may know the way to the Source of all power. (5) "Searching the Scriptures"—What a book this Bible is! How God does speak through its pages to the soul of man! To the neglect of this book may be traced the fact that so many people are being led astray, blown about by every kind of doctrine. I plead for the study of the Bible—of the Bible itself rather than of books about the Bible. (6) "Fasting and abstinence"—Those first Methodists were in earnest. Inded, Methodism has been described as being "Christianity in earnest." And no one will deny that nowadays we need less feasting and more fasting, less self-indulgence and more self-sacrifice. So shall we draw nigh to God and so shall God draw nigh to us.

Some one has said that the gravest danger the church confronts to-day is the danger of "practical efficiency and spiritual shallowness." And I fear that saying is true. We have developed a wonderful machine. The things that any well trained and efficient business man can do, we have all learned to do well. But where are those who can do what "practical efficiency" can never accomplish? We have been so busy with "much serving," that we have not taken time to "sit at Jesus' feet." And we are the poorer—and the whole church suffers. A young man visiting a distant city for the first time was much impressed when, in passing a great electrical plant, he read this sign, "Power to Let." Here was a great power-house from which wires ran in all directions, sending power out to the surrounding country. There is a great central Power House for the human soul. Here, power is to let. Here, the soul comes in touch with God. "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." And by use of the means of grace, as suggested in our General Rule, one will put one's self in touch with that Power without which all our efforts will accomplish little and our own souls grow yet more poverty-stricken even while we try in vain to accomplish the great task of saving the world.

Here, then, in the General Rule, we have one of the most important fundamentals in Methodism. What a pity it would be if Methodists, having received such an inheritance from that man "sent from God whose name was John"—John Wesley—should now join in with those who sound a false note in Methodism—the emphasis on a creed to be believed rather than on a life in Christ to be lived. Let Methodists learn again what Methodism is and come back to those great ethical and spiritual principles which have made Methodism the mightiest spiritual force in America!

✓ DEATH OF MRS. C. C. WIER.

The shadows have fallen upon another parsonage home. Mrs. C. C. Wier, wife of Rev. C. C. Wier, pastor of the Methodist Church in Algiers, died last Monday and was buried in the family tomb at Evergreen, La. Mrs. Wier had been ill for some time, and her death was not unexpected; nevertheless, it came as a shock to her devoted husband and the many loved ones and friends in Algiers and elsewhere.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. W. W. Drake, D.D., presiding elder of the New Orleans District, assisted by the Methodist pastors of the city, at the Methodist Church in Algiers, at 6 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon. The funeral party left later via the Southern Pacific to Eola, La., on the private car, "Angelina" of Colonel B. F. Bonner of Houston, Texas. From Eola the body was taken to Evergreen and interred beside her father and mother. Service was held in the old home where she was married to Brother Wier in 1896; where her father and mother were also married, and from which they were buried. Those accompanying the remains to Evergreen, besides Rev. C. C. Wier, were Joseph Wier, of Algiers; Robert W. and T. P. Wier, of Houston; Dr. Wier, of Beaumont, Tex.; Colonel and Mrs. B. F. Bonner, of Houston; Miss Gladys Heard, of Evergreen; Rev. W. W. Drake and Rev. J. G. Snelling, of New Orleans.

Mrs. Wier was popular with her friends, not alone because of personal qualities, but also because of superior mental powers. She had read much and had traveled extensively. She was a graduate of Baylor University, Waco, Texas. She was born in Avoyelles Parish, La., the daughter of the late John Ewell, prominent sugar planter of that section.

We grieve with our afflicted brother, but we sorrow not as those without hope.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Bishop Ainsworth has appointed Rev. M. H. McCall to supply the pastorate at De Soto, Miss., until further notice.

We are glad to learn that Bishop Ainsworth, who has suffered three or four weeks from fractured ribs, is almost entirely recovered, and is able to resume his work.

Rev. A. G. Shankle, for many years a member of the Louisiana Conference, now pastor of Grace Church, Atlanta, renewed old acquaintance in the Advocate office last Monday. He was in New Orleans visiting his two sons here.

The fifth annual convention of the American Legion of Louisiana will be held in Monroe, La., Aug. 15, 16 and 17. Many prominent speakers will address the convention, chief among whom will be Colonel James Edmonds. Nothing, it is said, is being spared by the Monroe Post, either in money or in labor, to make this convention a complete success. Reduced rates will be offered by all the railways of the State, and a large attendance is expected.

Rev. B. H. Rawls, of Moselle, Miss., a superannuate member of the Mississippi Conference, paid the Advocate office a call last week. He has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Allen, who live on Canal Street, in this city. Mrs. Allen is a daughter of Brother Rawls.

Rev. W. E. Thomas, general evangelist, who has conducted several meetings in Louisiana, but is now in Kentucky, writes that he will be in Louisiana again within a few weeks and that any one desiring his services may address him at 1601 Fair Place, Shreveport, La.

Ill health has caused Rev. W. W. Nelson, pastor of the Adams charge, Mississippi Conference, to take a two months' rest. He expects to spend the time at Biloxi, Miss. We trust that by the end of the two months his health will be so improved that he can resume active work.

Rev. George D. Parker, who has been visiting his sister, Mrs. Marvin Brown, Woodlawn Place, this city, called at the Advocate office last week. He has been making his headquarters, while at home on a year's furlough, at the home of Mrs. Parker, Hilliard, Fla., near Jacksonville. Dr. Parker has given a great deal of his time in this country to the Centenary Emergency Campaign, speaking in large centers in Missouri, Arkansas, and Texas. He will sail, Sept. 1, on the "American Legion," from New York, to resume his work as presiding elder of the Santa Maria District, Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, near the Argentine border.

REV. J. M. BROWN PASSES AWAY.

Just as we were going to press we received a telegram from Rev. A. S. J. Neill, dated at Belcher, La., stating that Rev. J. M. Brown, one of our beloved superannuate preachers, had passed away at midnight, July 16, 1923.

JONATHAN RIMER EDWARDS was born Dec. 28, 1837, in Alabama, and died in Pelahatchie, Miss., June 7, 1923. When a child his parents moved to Smith County, Miss. He spent the rest of his life in Smith and Rankin Counties, except the four years he served in the Confederate Army. He belonged to the Sixth Mississippi Regiment. In 1870 he was married to Miss Almeda Hailes. Six children were born to them, four of whom are living. His wife died in 1908. He was a member of the Methodist church for about 65 years, and was the oldest member of the church at Pelahatchie. He was a religious man, and loved God. He passed through the Civil War without receiving a wound. He frequently remarked that his safety was in answer to prayer. He was a good soldier for his country and a good soldier of the Cross. He was resigned to the will of God, and not afraid to die. Through a long period of invalidism he was nursed by his youngest son and daughter, whose care of their father and devotion to him were most beautiful. "Blessed are they that die in the Lord."

On May 11, 1923, the spirit of Sister SAM McCULLAR, after a lingering illness of many months, left its earthly tabernacle for that building of God, "an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Sister McCullar won her crown after faithful service of forty or more years in her Master's vineyard. When well, she was at all the services of her church, active in its departments, ready and willing for any task. She was one of the charter members of the famous Matron Class of our local Sunday school, organized by Brother J. H. Holder many years ago. This class has been a potent factor for good, lo, these many years. In disposition and character the good mother was quiet and unassuming, modest, uncomplaining, pious and true—true and loyal to her faithful husband, her dear children, her convictions, and to her many friends. She bore her afflictions for a long season without mumur or complaint, believing in her heart of hearts that "all things worketh together for good to them that love the Lord." She is not dead, but just beginning the real, worth while, big and glorious life, having made port a little ahead of her loved ones and friends. The deceased was in her fifty-eighth year, and leaves a devoted, kind husband, and two heart-broken children, Mrs. Josh Jaco, daughter-in-law of our own Brother Benjamin P. Jaco, and Leslie McCullar, a worthy citizen of our town. May God bless and sustain the husband and the dear, good children.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father saw fit to call to himself, on May 19, 1923, our beloved pastor, REV. S. D. ROBERTS;

Resolved, That we, the Woman's Missionary Society of Vinton La., feel deeply this great loss, but bow submissively to the Father's will. In his passing we lose a faithful, well-beloved minister, a true friend to all mankind.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent the bereaved ones, to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, the Missionary Voice, and that they be spread in full upon the minutes of our Society.

DR. PAUL FOSTER—AN APPRECIATION.

By Rev. H. S. Johns.

DR. PAUL FOSTER, of Opelousas, La., died on Sunday evening, May 20, 1923, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. His pastor, Rev. S. L. Riggs, has written a beautiful tribute to his memory, but as his brother-in-law, I cannot refrain from adding my testimony to the ability and worth of this good and true man.

Dr. Foster was born of noble parents. His father, the late Dr. David Walker Foster, and mother, the late Mrs. Melissa Spurlock Foster, were to him all that loving parents could be. They were pious, and strong intellectually, so the young man grew up in an atmosphere of love and strength.

Converted gloriously at the old Spring Creek camp ground in 1879, he gave his life completely to the church, and to suffering humanity.

Not only was he blessed with an environment of purity in his childhood, but he was fortunate in being under the ministry of great men, true to God and of sound conviction. The late Bishop J. C. Keener, D.D., LL.D., was a frequent visitor to the Foster home in those days in the long ago, and young Foster was thrilled by the magnetism of that great man. Then among his pastors were the late Rev. John F. Wynn, father of our Dr. R. H. Wynn, of the Louisiana Conference, and also the late Rev. M. C. Manly, whose ministries of strength and gentleness were to the young man food for his development. There never was a more saintly man than Rev. John F. Wynn; and Rev. M. C. Manly was often referred to in those days as the "Elijah" of the Conference, strong, and with the unswerving faith of that prophet of ancient times.

So Dr. Foster, with every educational advantage, grew up, and after graduation in medicine made his life a blessing to others in St. Landry Parish, where he was foremost in every contest where morals were concerned.

He was happily married to Miss Emma Daniel, of Bayou Boeuff, Sept. 15, 1881, Rev. M. C. Manly officiating. This true and faithful wife, the daughter of J. W. Daniel, another stalwart, has stood by his side with words of encouragement these more than forty years, and still abides in the faith.

Dr. Foster was the friend of the poor, and no call ever went unheeded in forty-odd years of the practice of medicine in his section. His friends were legion. Like his distinguished father in his death, he was called home on the Sabbath day, and also suddenly.

On Sunday morning, May 20, Dr. Foster drove in with his good wife to attend the Sunday school and church service, At the close of the lesson that day he rose and said he was impressed to make a short talk. He told of meeting a Frenchman, recently converted from Romanism, who was enduring persecution for Christ's sake, but said he was holding his little light high that it might shine out in the darkness of sin that surrounded him, and Dr. Foster said if this unlettered man was letting his light shine, how much more should we with our greater light and superior advantages hold our lamps high, that we might lead others to Jesus. And he added: "Our time is short, let us make haste, and we know not how soon the night may come!" This final talk was no doubt especially inspired of God. His eyes fairly shone with his earnestness, and his breast heaved in this last message to his classmates.

But he is gone from us to that bright celestial city. Just after uttering those words he was stricken with heart disease, and expired in his home near Opelousas at 7:30 o'clock that same evening.

There will be a vacancy in the various boards of the activities of the church of which he was a member, but God will raise up others to carry on the work. Ho "buries his workmen, but carries on his work," is a true saying.

To the widow, the two sons, Dr. M. H. Foster, of Alexandria, and W. C. Foster, of Grand Cane, the brothers and sisters and many other relatives and friends that remain, I tender my most sincere sympathy in this hour of distress, and pray that our Father's grace may be sufficient.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

METHODISM IN ROME.

By Rev. F. B. Hill.

A section of the Italian press has again been working up a campaign against the Methodist High School on Monte Marlo, Rome, which the Clericals magnify in the eyes of the public into a university. Stupid attempts to alarm the Italians by misrepresenting the scheme, exaggerating tho scope of It, and underlining the Americaness, have even gone so far as to suggest that the American Methodists intend to tunnel to the Vatican and blow up both that and St. Peter's. The energetic propaganda in the newspapers culminated in the introduction of the subject by one of tho Clerical deputies at question time in the Italian chamber a month ago. I translate literally from a report to the daily papers given by Rev. Edgar Bradford, our English Wesleyan minister in Rome, and sent to the Methodist recorder, believing it will be of great Interest to the readers of tho Advocate.

Signor Cingolani (Popolare Clerical) asked to know whether, in view of the significance given to the acquisition of an important part of Monte Mario In Rome, it was not considered opportune to Interfero in order to look after the religious, moral, and artistic interests of the Capital of Italy and the Catholic world?

Finzl (Under Secretary for Homo Affairs) declared that the Govornment understood the precise significance of this question, but for reasons of superior order, he did not think it was advisable to give a concrete and explicit reply. Comments.

Cingolonl—I thank the Government.

Chiesa (Republican)—You havo had a "hair-cut" and a "shave." (Laughter.)

Cingolani—It does not matter that the Government has not replied today.

Vella—It means that the Government is not worried about It as you are, because "the Methodist Invasion" only exists in your Imagination.

Cingolani—I beg to inform the Hon. Vella, who does not know the facts, that in the last census in the Province of Rome, there are no less than four thousand Protestants.

Chiesa—Exaggeration.

Vella—But surely you are not worried about four thousand?

Cingolani proceeded to affirm that the Methodist International Institute, which, according to the Methodist Bishop Henderson, would be opened in Rome, would be built on the summit of Monte Marion, "which," says Bishop Henderson, "is two hundred feet higher than the top of St. Peter's, just as Protestantism is two hundred spiritual feet higher than Catholicism." (Laughter in the Center and Right.)

De Andreis (Republican)—That is most true. Catholicism is the negation of Truth.

Lazzari (Socialist)—Yes, It is an obscurantism which oppresses the conscience and keeps it in the dark.

Cingolani—The truth is, that this propaganda — In appearance purely religious—has for its real aim political expansion and penetration.

De Andreis—That is not true. Italy does not enter into this question.

The Methodists are against the Papacy; against the Papacy; quite a different thing. Don't confuse matters. (Murmurs and laughter.)

Giesa—Protest rather against the Vatican, which does not recognize Italy.

Mattei Gentile and other Clericals —Stop it. Let him speak. What manners are these?

De Andreis—The Protestants aro no worse than you.

Maffi—It is an industry like Catholicism.

Conti—It is a matter of shops.

De Andraes—Trade jealousy.

Chiesa—The Papacy ignores Italy —that is a shame.

Chigolanl—Monte Marlo must not become a center for the fomentation of religious dissensions and international preoccupations. The Government should rescind contracts—If they exist—and Monte Mario remain a worthy seat of the National Monument to Dante, sign and symbol of the most glorious traditions of our people, reflecting alike Catholic thought and the civil conscience of Italy.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

Sunday to Thursday was spent with Brother Allums at Sontag. We visited Thompson's Chapel and all that part of the Monticello charge, which is a fairly good-sized scope of country.

Brother Allum is doing a good work and trying to serve the people. Thompson's Chapel, it seems to me, gives promise of a mighty good rural church. Brother Liddell, the superintendent, is taking hold and the folk seem to be rallying to him. We had a mighty good congregation, and, it seemed to me, good interest.

Sontag is not in as flourishing condition as one could wish. Some very lovely folk are there, but our church is weak and families are divided in their church interest. We had good meetings, and perhaps in time the church will take on life. One very fine young man has accepted the call to preach.

The Sunday School Day funds are coming in. In the Brookhaven District, 30 schools have sent in $257.19; Hattiesburg District, 16 schools, have sent $114.42; Jackson District, 28 schools, $452.62; Meridian District, 22 schools, $188.01; Newton District, 14 schools, $106.61; Seashore District, 11 schools, $117.56; Vicksburg District, 8 schools, $103.91, making total receipts of $1,336.41.

This is $458.07 behind last year. There are 195 Sunday schools that sent in offerings last year, that we have not heard from yet. If we could hear from them I am sure we would get more than we did last year.

There are signs of wonderful advancement. God is using Brother Hull in a wonderful way. Pray earnestly for him. He is doing a great work for the Sunday schools of the circuits. Pray for the work.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

Yes, He is the ground of all our good; and all that we inadequately call our idols, the inner experience that looks at us through the symbols of the universe, the better possibilities that seem to struggle through the material conditions of life, the contrite longing to be free from self and at peace with God—these, while they are in us, yet are not of us; they are not ours, his; nay, they are his very self; first standing at the door to knock, and then, if the latch be lifted by a hospitable hand, entering to abide and dwell, and turning the bread and wine of life into a sacrament.—James Martineau.

PAYMENT OF CONFERENCE ASSESSMENTS IN FULL.

By T. W. Holloman, Conference Lay Leader.

I was greatly interested in the report made by Rev. J. L. Evans, West Monroe, showing that that charge has already paid the Conference assessments in full.

At all of the district conferences which I was able to attend, and I believe at all of the district conferences, the District Board of Lay Activities adopted resolutions putting the emphasis for this year on three principal objects, viz:

First, the payment of the Conference assessments in full this year by every charge.

Second, the development of the lay speaker's committee in every charge so that, in co-operation with the pastor and presiding elder, services could be held every Sunday in all vacant churches.

Third, assistance by the laymen in every way possible in evangelistic work during the summer.

Undoubtedly, there is great opportunity here for the development of the church if the presiding elders and pastors and lay leaders will work together systematically and prayerfully along these lines. It is said that more than ifty per cent of the church membership does not attend church, and there are hundreds of laymen in Louisiana capable of rendering service if they can catch the vision and get the necessary information and instruction.

We should so arrange our financial matters that our assessments will be paid in full and that our pastors' salaries generally will be increased next year so that more attention be given to other than financial matters. The Board of Lay Activities, therefore, is urging every church to make a budget and make an Every-Member Canvass next November and get the budget, which should include the support of the Sunday school, subscribed in advance. The scheme also contemplates the regular payment of these pledges so that our pastors may be relieved of the embarrassment of being without funds.

I most urgently urge the laymen to give every assistance to the pastors in these matters.

I would also like to call attention to the Laymen's Conference to be held at Lake Junaluska, N. C., Aug. 10-15. No layman can do a better thing than to attend this conference. If we could have fifty laymen from Louisiana at this conference I believe it would add an immeasurable impetus to the work of our church in Louisiana.

MRS. R. M. DAVIS.

This community and her church sustained a great loss and a home was broken up when MRS. R. M. DAVIS passed away at her home in Byhalia, June 1, 1923. Margaret Alice Thomas was born in what is now Calhoun County, Miss., May 8, 1844; and reared in the place of her nativity. On Dec. 20, 1860, she was married to the late Rev. R. M. Davis. She leaves one daughter, Miss Susie Davis, who has devoted her life to the care and comfort of her parents and the service of the church. For forty-odd years Mrs. Davis shared the fortunes of her husband as a traveling preacher and member of the North Mississippi Conference. The place of a preacher's wife she filled with unostentatious dignity and consistent piety to the end of Brother Davis' active ministry. Joining the church early in life, Mrs. Davis was a church member more than sixty years, during which long time she was consistent and faithful in the discharge of her duties. She loved her church and was informed about its larger interests, and concerned for its general welfare. She was a practical woman, possessed of industry and strong common sense, and thus she was a successful housekeeper, home-maker, wife and mother. The later years of her life were spent in Byhalia, where the whole family was noted for their consistent life and faithful service to the community and church. They were sympathetic and helpful to their pastors. While the church is becoming thoughtful of her superannuates, it is in order to speak of Brother Davis and his family and their work of usefulness after his superannuation. These worthy people doubtless had no years of greater usefulness than their years here, where they lived after retirement. Indeed, I have never lived in a community so profoundly impressed by one man as people became impressed by the life and character of R. M. Davis. Almost seven years have elapsed since he passed away, but on every hand and almost daily his name is mentioned with love and reverence. Mrs. Davis was the fitting life companion of that truly great and good man.

RESOLUTION OF RESPECT.

Realizing that Henry C. Blanks, our brother and co-worker in the Men's Bible Class, and the Sunday school in general at Columbia, was an immeasurable power for good, and as he grew older that he continued to rise up and up on the wings of consecration, and that he was a source of inspiration to his fellow-workers, and that by the example set by him they have been enabled to drink with a deeper sense of duty and devotion of the pure waters of life;

Therefore, be it resolved, by the Men's Bible Class, and by the Columbia Methodist Sunday school as a whole, That in the death of Henry C. Blanks, our dear friend and brother, we have sustained a loss, the greatness of which none can ever know save those who have been associated with him as we havo been. And realizing, as we do, our irretrievable loss, we know his relatives and loved ones have sustained a loss which to them the world can never repay; and we therefore extend to them in this their hour of sorrow our sincerest sympathy; and we pray that they may let songs of triumph dry their tears, while they linger on a few short years, for their loved one is now in heaven, where nought but love to him is given. There ho roams among tho flowers that bloom far beyond tho skies, which for endless years and not for hours, will gladden his holy eyes.

Signed: C. P. Thornhill, R. M. Irwin, R. R. Redditt, Committee.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference.

The Executive Committee of the Mississippi Woman's Missionary Society met in a called meeting Tuesday, June 19th, at eleven o'clock, in the Sunday School room of the Main Street church, Hattiesburg. Fifteen Officers and District Secretaries were present.

The meeting opened with devotional service led by the President, Mrs. McCleskey. Mrs. McCleskey expressed her appreciation of efforts of those present to attend the meeting. Several visitors were present, including the Presidents of the Hattiesburg auxiliaries.

TO RELIEVE PAIN AND BACKACHE

Women May Depend upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Minneapolis, Minn.—"I had heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that when I realized I needed to take something to relieve my pains and backache, and to help build me up I began to take that. I had been sick off and on for years and barely weighed a hundred pounds, but now I have had such good results that I am recommending the Vegetable Compound to every one."—Mrs. J. J. BIEBER, 3939 18th Ave. South, Minneapolis, Minn.

Finds a True Friend

"Every woman who values her health should be proud to have a true friend like the Vegetable Compound," says Mrs. W. E. Shaw, 3227 Walnut Street, Chicago, Illinois. "I had female weakness so badly that I could not stand on my feet. Half of my time was spent in bed and I had pains in my back which were unbearable. I tried everything I could think of to help myself, and when a friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I began taking it at once. I recommend it without hesitation."

Reports of officers were heard. Each officer present told interestingly of her work, showing a decided increase in reports mailed.

It was announced lunch would be served at the Y. W. C. A., and Mrs. Wicht offered the dismissal prayer.

After lunch the afternoon session was held in the Y. W. C. A. room, and Mrs. Semis opened with prayer.

Work of the Superintendent of Supplies was discussed. Motion was made and carried that one month be appointed to each District and the District Secretary put on drive for boxes for the Meridian and Biloxi Wesley Houses. The assignments were as follows:

Brookhaven, July; Hattiesburg, August; Jackson, September; Meridian, October; Newton, November; Seashore, December; Vicksburg, December.

Miss Porter gave interesting echoes of the Council meeting held in Mobile. Consecration Service of Deaconesses and Missionaries both very impressive. Mississippi Conference had one deaconess, Miss Addie Greely, and one missionary, Miss Anne Deavers, consecrated.

Another moment, a beautiful occasion, was when Miss Gibson presented to the Council the beautiful portrait of our great leader, Miss Belle H. Bennett, and our own Mrs. McCleskey, in well chosen words, accepted it. Mention was made of Mrs. Stephens as our splendid new Council President. She is a just and impartial leader.

The Superintendent of Social Service gave a splendid report. Motion was made and carried that the Conference send Mrs. Alford and Mrs. Lewis to the Social Service Conference at Junaluska, North Carolina, July 1.

Miss Porter explained the Doubling Campaign. She suggested that our Conference might double in membership and subscription to the Missionary Voice.

Under the head of special seasons, the Week of Prayer was discussed. We will carry out the program planned by the Council.

Reports of District Secretaries were then called. Very encouraging reports were given. A number of new auxiliaries were reported. Just here Mrs. Lewis explained the Circuit Circle Plan, and suggested that this plan be used.

The Committee decided to send to Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb a love gift on the eve of her departure for China.

Mrs. W. I. Denton was asked to give a report of the work at the Meridian Wesley House. Mrs. Denton told interestingly of the graduation exercises of the sewing school.

Mrs. McCleskey mentioned the good work at Biloxi Wesley House, and everything is going forward.

Miss Porter explained the plan of the Belle Bennett Memorial Fund to the Committee. Miss Porter was requested to get this plan in shape for the New Orleans Advocate.

The time for adjournment having come, Mrs. Lewis closed the day's work with prayer, asking God's blessings on the work and this committee as each returned to her respective home.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

June Meeting.

Durant, Miss., July 10 (Special).—Miss Minnie Lou Johnson, of West, was elected chairman of the "Zone" meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society, held in the parlors of the Methodist Church here, Monday afternoon from 2:30 to 5 o'clock, when several of the surrounding societies met, at the call of the key woman, Mrs. R. P. Neblett, who had been appointed by the District Secretary, and the program of the Conference Organization for these meetings taken up.

Miss Kathline Hooper, of Durant, was elected secretary and after the devotional exercises, which were conducted by Miss Hooper, a program of instruction and inspiration was taken up. Practically every member of the Adult societies from Shrock and West were at the meeting, and representatives from the West and Durant Juniors as well as the Durant Young People's society.

The two adult auxiliaries for the Durant Church,—number one, Mrs. G. R. Bennett, president, and number two, Mrs. L. C. Lipsey, president—were the hosts of the visiting workers, who represented the southern section of the Grenada District. The meeting was a distinct success from every standpoint.

One of the outstanding features of the afternoon was the representation of the "Belle H. Bennett Memorial Fund," by Mrs. T. R. King. Miss Bennett, who had been president of the Council, the ruling body of the Woman's Work for Southern Methodism since its organization, several years ago, died during the past year and a memorial fund is being raised representing a half million dollars to more fully equip the Scarritt Bible and Training School.

Miss Cisceal Ramsey discussed "Social Service" in its real meaning and appealed to the representatives present to take more definite steps in looking after this important department of the church work, declaring that it was not a problem of any one group or denomination, but should be entered into by all the religious bodies of our country as a common problem which would take all working together to accomplish any adequate results.

A short play, or burlesque, "First Church Missionary Society," was given by members of adult number two, from the Durant Church, and was quite true to life as it represented a very careless, haphazard attempt to conduct a missionary meeting with no previous preparation; the president was late and after postponing a hymn, because they did not know it, discovery was made that the proper literature was not in the hands of those who were to have part on the program.

Reports were given from the different societies present, showing splendid work being done, and the "Standard of Excellence" was discussed by Mrs. B. W. Moore. Musical numbers were rendered by Mrs. Eugene Cole Durant and Mrs. Weir, a member of the West Auxiliary. Miss Alice Louise Rhyne gave a life sketch of Miss Belle Bennett.

After a social half hour the meting adjourned to meet in August, the time and place to be announced by the chairman. REPORTER.

FROM BOONEVILLE, MISS.

We closed Sunday night, July 1, one of the best revivals that ever came to Booneville. Thirty or forty were converted (half that number uniting with our church), many were reclaimed, and all of our churches gloriously revived. The Protestant churches of our little town presented a solid front, coming together in a union meeting, using a large tent, pitched on the courthouse square, purchased a year ago by the laymen of our churches for evangelistic purposes. This same tent will be used this summer in four or five rural places adjacent to Booneville, the respective revivals being financed by the Evangelistic Committee of our local church.

The preaching was done by that inimitable Charles D. Tillman, of Atlanta, Ga. Under Brother Tillman's splendid preaching, wonderful personality, and peculiar magnetism, the people flocked to the tent at each service—larger congregations at the close than at the beginning. There was not a dull or uninteresting service in the entire series. Miss Elizabeth Tillman, his accomplished daughter, and Mrs. E. G. Mohler were his pianists, both contributing immensely to the success of the revival. Rev. E. H. Mount led the singing.

E. G. MOHLER, P. C.

HOW THE BIBLE GOT INTO THE CHIEF PRIEST'S HOME AT FAMOUS NIKKO.

The chief priest's wife was sick. The doctor recommended a certain massage. He furthermore told her that he knew of a man who was an expert on such treatments, and all agreed that he should be called. This man, by the way, was Mr. Tanaami, who formerly was our regular colporter and is now independently doing Christian work at Nikko and vicinity. He still carries Bibles wherever he goes and is known as "the Jesus man."

Now the doctor had told Tanaami that he should not tell the woman that he was a Christian, but, to the surprise and annoyance of the doctor, as soon as Tanaami came into the room of the sick woman he told her of his Christian faith and asked her permission to pray to God before giving his treatment. "I always pray before I undertake anything." She consented, and he did so, and when he said amen, the doctor, the nurse, and the servant of the house all repeated it, thus revealing that they also were Christians. This, and the peculiar tenderness shown her by all of them, very deeply impressed the sick woman. While giving his treatment he told her of his experience and of what God said in his Word, etc. This intensified her interest exceedingly much, and she wondered how she might obtain the book he had mentioned. Fortunately he had his pack of Bibles with him and was glad to show them to her. This whole occurrence seemed so wonderful to her that she not only bought a large sized Bible for her own use, but also a Testament for the wife of the priest next in rank to her husband, and a Testament for her son.

The happy issue of the above was that both this woman and her son became ardent lovers of the Bible, and although they still do not dare to confess that they believe in Christ owing to the position the head of the family holds in the town, they are quietly recommending and pushing the Bible into the homes of the many priests who are connected with the famous shrines in Nikko. It has commenced to be the talk of the whole place that "the Jesus man" goes in and out at will among the homes of the priests, and wonder is expressed that this is allowed.

The son, who is now in school in Tokyo, has written to Tanaami that as it is known he is the son of the chief priest in Nikko he reads the Bible in secret, but he assures him that he believes in it with all his heart. He asked Tanaami to be patient and work quietly so as not to excite his father and cause him to do rash things, thereby adding to the list of the many and awful sins he has already committed.—American Bible Society.

MOONSHINERS DECLINING.

After serious consideration, reading carefully the action of Congress and the ratification by the States (necessary) it became a law to annul the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors I decided there was not any reason to become alarmed over a few wets trying to bluff the United States Government. Considering the time and sacrifices that were made by the prohibitionists to defeat the arch enemy of the soul, we can rejoice in the fact that we were victorious. I will admit we shall have to be on the alert and fight every conceivable proposition they put forth. If we people who love God, our families and our country stand firm, not yielding an inch, helping the officers to enforce the law to the letter, regardless of cost, we shall soon forget there ever was such an enemy. We are making the moonshiners of Grant Parish (La.) realize they will have to obey the law, thinning them out one by one. The only trouble we have to contend with is, there are men who are ready to go their bonds, by so doing they are encouraging them. If the Christian people of our State will determine not to vote for a candidate who favors the liquor traffic, we shall accomplish much. I feel confident we shall send a representative from our parish that we can depend upon. I believe there will have to a law made to make it a penitentiary offense to make or sell liquor in our State. The greater the penalty, the fewer the violations.

Every chapter in the State is asked to secure gifts from the individual members at once and mail all funds to the State Treasurer, Miss Grace Cook, 614 North Fourth Street, Monroe, La.

This debt of $900 must be paid within the next thirty days, so we are counting on every individual Leaguer in the State to do his or her part.

Do not delay raising this fund in your local chapter, but ask each Leaguer to give one dollar, or even fifty cents each.

WE ARE COUNTING ON YOU.

New Orleans City Union.

NOT DISAPPOINTED.

Not long ago a gentleman was driving in his car through Mississippi. When about nine miles from one of its leading cities, he saw two women, one of them with a baby in her arms, trudging along the road. When he reached them, he stopped, inquired if they were going far, and invited them to ride with him. They accepted the gracious invitation, informing him that they had started for the city nine miles distant. When he asked them if they had intended to walk all the way, one of them replied, "We were sure somebody would give us a lift." What a beautiful thing to have faith! and what a glorious thing not to be disappointed!

A TRIBUTE TO THE PREACHER.

Hon. Will H. Hays, in an address before the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., in behalf of the Pension Fund of that church, delivered in Indianapolis on May 17, pays a splendid tribute to the ministers of the gospel, using it as the basis of an appeal for their proper support in old age. In view of a similar movement in our own church, and with the hope that we may have a better understanding of the debt society owes to the preacher, we reproduce his words: "We are prone to take things for granted and not consider the part which the minister of the gospel plays in our lives. It makes no difference to what denomination we belong; if we profess Christianity at all, if we call ourselves members of any church, the servant of that church, whom we call by the scriptural term which Jesus used, the minister, holds a peculiar place in our lives which no legal adviser, no family doctor, no teacher, no government official, no political leader, no dear and intimate friend, no member of our own family even, holds. In a very real sense, the minister is the interpreter of God. We see through a glass darkly; we hear through a thousand veils, faintly. We are conscious of the presence of the Almighty, but our ignorant minds can not understand the language that he speaks. The minister, having sought out the kingdom of heaven and sojourned there even while he was yet a dweller on earth, translates for us the mysterious language and places us in relation with him who is and who upholds all law, spiritual and natural, and who is merciful because he is just.

"The minister is the proclaimer of eternal values to men caught in the tangles of ephemeral things, the snares of gossip and show, care and pride and self-absorption, greed and fear and hate and ignoble getting and spending. We go to him when we are lost, to show us the way. On stormy seas we look to him as a lighthouse. Out of the bewildering maze of unrealities we seek to have him point us to the things which are real."

WORTH MORE THAN THAT.

Mr. Edward Bok, the distinguished former editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, has offered a prize of $100,000 to the author of the best practicable plan by which the United States may co-operate with other nations to achieve and preserve the peace of the world. The conditions announced by the committee of award define broadly the scope of the plan sought, as follows: The winning plan must provide a practicable means whereby the United States can take its place and do its share toward preserving world peace, while not making compulsory the participation of the United States in European wars if any such are, in the future, found unpreventable; the plan may be based upon the present covenant of the League of Nations, or may be entirely apart from that instrument; the competition is open to every citizen of the United States, whether by birth or naturalization; the plan must not contain more than five thousand words, the manuscripts must be typewritten, and all manuscripts must be in the hands of the committee by midnight of November 15. The offering of this munificent sum will, we feel sure, enlist the best efforts of thousands of people in the contest, and the committee of award will have a stupendous task in making its selection from the vast number of plans that will probably be submitted. But the end sought is so greatly to be desired that the money prize will be insignificant in comparison, and the labors of the committee will not weigh against the inestimable benefits to be gained by the discovery of a plan that will accomplish the end in view. If any of our readers have it in mind to submit a plan, they can get full particulars of the contest by applying to the American Peace Award, 312 Madison Avenue, New York City.

GOOD PAY—AND GOOD WORK.

We are in full sympathy with every movement that tends to insure the workman good pay for a day's work. We are also in sympathy with every movement that tends to insure a good day's work for a good day's pay. We are led to make this trite remark by reading a newspaper item to the effect that recently the bricklayers' union in New York threatened to go on a strike unless a $12-day contract for three years was given, it being understood that a day meant the laying of 400 bricks. We grant that $12 a day is a good day's pay; but is the laying of 400 bricks a good day's work? The man who gets more than he gives will inevitably be the loser in the end.

A GOOD COON DOG.

One of our favorite sports in boyhood days was coon hunting—sport for us, whether it was for the coon or not. Good coon hunting requires a good coon dog, and we were [illegible] in having the use of two, Bill and Pat. We [illegible] with a good many others at various times, but these two stand out in memory [illegible] the best of the lot. A good coon-dog must be quick to strike the coon's trail, persistent in [illegible] it, and reliable when he comes to [illegible]. Some dogs could never be relied upon [illegible] expected of them. They would [illegible] after going into the swamp [illegible] likely to be the trail of a [illegible], even after they had struck a coon [illegible] would leave it to follow the rabbit or [illegible] that might have recently crossed the path of the coon. Some of them could never be trusted when they pretended to have the game up a tree. [illegible] were notorious "liars." But Bill and Pat were a rare pair. Bill, it must be confessed, was somewhat of a "liar," since he never seemed to be sure in his own mind whether the coon was up the tree or not, but he entered the chase [illegible], would never leave a coon for a possum or rabbit, and would hunt all night if called upon to do so. Pat had all the good qualities of Bill, and in addition, he always "told the truth." When we heard Bill "tree," we would always wait to see what Pat had to say about it; when he opened up, we got ready to cut the tree down. There are many good lessons to be learned from the homely illustration of the coon dogs. We venture to suggest some of them: Know what your real objective is, strive for it eagerly and persistently, do not be misled by side issues, know when you have reached your objective; do not "bark up a tree" that the game has left. An old coon hunter will think of many other good lessons that people may learn from good coon dogs.

"EXTEMPORANEOUS PREACHING."

Dr. Charles R. Brown, dean of the Divinity School of Yale University, in his [illegible] book, "The Art of Preaching," has this to say about a certain kind of so-called preaching: "I do not use the term 'extemporaneous preaching,' you notice. There is no such thing. There is extemporaneous twaddle and extemporaneous prattle and gabble, oftentimes loud and [illegible] and greasy. But the real preaching is never extemporaneous. The man who rushes into the pulpit with no preparation beyond the possession of a few scattered ideas (to which he [illegible] be anything but clear), trusting to the [illegible] of the occasion and [illegible] he intends to put in to do the rest, is not an extemporaneous preacher; he is an extemporaneous rascal and an [illegible] [illegible]. He ought to be put down with a strong hand and an outstretched arm, and I should like to be the presiding elder called upon to do the job." Well said, Dr. Brown!

The king of love my Shepherd is,
Whose goodness faileth never;
I nothing lack if I am his,
And he is mine forever.

"PATRIOTIC BOHEMIANS."

By Mrs. J. L. Neill.

The entrance of Austria into the war in July, 1914, caused much uneasiness among the Czecho-Slovaks. They knew that if any people were to be hutchered and sacrificed, they would certainly be the first. The Czechs had no interest in the conflict between Austria and Siberia, neither had they any sympathy with Austria in her difference with Russia. In fact, their interests and sympathies were with the Russians and Serbs, but because of circumstances over which they had no control it looked as if they would be compelled to fight for their worst enemies, the Austrians and Magyars, and against those they considered their best friends and kindred, the Russians and Serbs. (We must remember that the Czechs are a Slav people.)

Finally, the mobilization order was sent out; that was a sad time for the people of Prague. But the seeds of patriotism that had been planted in the hearts of the pupils of the loved and adored Prof. Masaryk, of some day seeing their beloved country free and independent, hegan to bear fruit. They determined that they would fight if it was necessary, but some day "against" not "for" Austria.

A regiment was formed of men from Prague which was known as the Twenty-eighth Regiment of Prague. The Germans called it the "Children of Prague," thinking that some day these men would be proud of their military achievements in behalf of Austria. The Regiment accepted the name, but with thoughts quite different.

This regiment was one of the first to be mobilized. It was marched through the streets of Prague with a German regiment on each side, and every German soldier had his bayonet fixed to his rifle. It was evident that the Germans did not trust the "Children of Prague." But in spite of that, this regiment carried its own Czech flag. At one time a German tried to take it from the hand of the soldier who carried it, but he was immediately sent rolling to the curb. Perhaps some day this spot will be marked. As the regiment marched through the streets, from all sides could be heard the cry, "Don't go; don't fight; throw down your arms!" The Germans either did not understand the Czech words, or pretended that they did not.

The regiment was assembled in barracks only a short distance from Prague. Here they were to drill and wait for orders. They were surrounded by German troops, who tried to be cheerful and make the Czechs believe that perhaps before they had finished drilling the war would be over. But the "Children of Prague" knew that as soon as they could do so, the Austrians would send them to the worst places they could find in the battle-front.

The orders came on the fourth day and the regiment was marched off at once, always preceded by one German regiment and followed by another. As they marched they sang their own national songs; the Czech population of the villages through which they passed understood if the German did not. For some time they were not told their destination; finally word reached them that it was to be the River San.

They had hoped that it would be in the mountains, because there they could easier signal to the Russians without being seen by the Austrian command in the rear. Hope sprang anew in the hearts of the Czechs. Perhaps the Austrians would be defeated before they could throw this regiment into the battle. But they were suddenly awakened one morning by the sound of guns—a furious battle was raging about twenty kilometers away. With two Austrian regiments and a Hungarian Honved regiment, the "Children of Prague" were ordered to dig trenches, but had only begun the work when orders were received to fall back. For a month the Russians were victorious in every battle, and the German-Austrian officers were so disheartened that many said it would be wise for Austria to sue for peace at the first opportunity. As the Austrians became depressed, the "Children of Prague" became more cheerful. They did not regret that Austria was being defeated, and expressed their delight to one another. The Russians knew that the sympathies of the Czechs were with them and against the Austrians, so by means of Russian aviators, Grand Duke Nicholas sent frequent messages of hope and comfort to the Czech soldiers. Fortunately none of these fell into the hands of the Austrians, or, if they did, it was never told.

About the middle of November the regiment was thrown into the fight in earnest, and was under bombardment for a number of days. But while the battle of Limanoff was raging, the "Children of Prague" were hurried there to assist in holding the ground that had been gained by the Austrians, and for ten days they were in the thickest of the battle. On Dec. 8, they were sent to the front line and ordered to hold a certain hill, cost what it might. As had been the case from the beginning, there were Austrian troops on each side of them; the hill on the right was assigned to the Twenty-seventh Austrian Regiment and the one on the left to the Fifty-ninth Austrian Regiment. The hill assigned to the "Children of Prague" was slightly forward. The three regiments were commanded by an Austrian colonel, who, with his staff, was about eight hundred yards in the rear. The opportunity had come at last! But would the Russian soldiers understand? It was a serious time for the Czech soldiers! A furious hand-to-hand bayonet attack was made by the Russians against the Twenty-seventh Austrian Regiment on the hill to the right, and at the same time a similar attack was made on the Fifty-ninth Austrian Regiment on the hill to the left, but not a rifle shot was fired in the direction of the hill in the center, and not a shell was dropped on it. Perhaps the Russians had understood. The Austrians fought well for a time, then the Russians gained ground steadily and occupied trench after trench, but the "Children of Prague" did not fire a shot. The colonel, thinking that they were fighting, and seeing that they were in danger, sent orders for them to fall back, but there was no response, the order was not even passed through the trenches. It was a critical hour, but this opportunity must not be lost! The Russians directly opposite came forward, aud at the last minute ten men of the Twenty-eighth Regiment of Prague lost their nerve and ran away. When the Russians reached the edge of the trenches, the men climbed out, threw down their rifles and cried, "We are Czechs!" The Russians pointed the direction for them to take and the men lost no time getting to a place of safety. A whole regiment with its band and banner could not go over to the enemy without some one seeiug it. The Austrian gunners had observed the movements and the guns of the Twenty-seventh and Fifty-ninth Austrian Regiments that were still in place opened fire. It was too late, the "Children of Prague" had reached the opposite hill in safety! Tho national song burst forth spontaneously while the Russians cheered.

A member of the now celebrated Twenty-eighth Regiment of Prague said: "The 'Children of Prague' had done their duty, only ten had been defaulters, and we were sorry for them, the rest were safe. It was no small thing to keep one's nerve, for the private to keep his eye on the officer, and for the officer to keep his eye on the private, in the midst of one of the most furious battles of the war. To stand the strain, even for half an hour, of remaining firm and inactive in the midst of the awful tumult, was an act of bravery and self-possession, and when the strain was over it was a relief to burst forth into song, and to feel that though prisoners, we were 'free.'"

ECCLESIASTICAL ZEBRAS, MUSHBACKS, AND YOUNG TURKEYS.

By Dr. R. H. Bennett, Secretary, Ministerial Supply and Training.

That prominent citizen of Missouri and of some other countries, the mule, as the small boy's composition would say, is a very useful animal. To be sure he has certain variations of habit that are sometimes uncertain and inconvenient, which led Bill Nye to say that if he had to preach the funeral of a mule he would stand at the head of the corpse. Justice has not been done the mule in literature. He is a most valued item of our economic life. Much of the burden of civilized existence rests upon his shoulders. He should have a monument to his faithfulness, and a poem to his memory.

There is a creature which much resembles him, albeit of gayer plumage and more debonair habits, known as the zebra. He looks sleek and prosperous and apparently knows not the restrictions or bit or hames. It is said to be impossible to break him to harness. He is slightly ornamental, but not useful. He is a bogus mule so far as economic life is concerned, a consumer and not a producer, which is about the worst thing political economy can say about a being. The festive zebra, to our mind's eyes, spends his time galloping over his native pampas at his own sweet will, scorning harness, and with mane and tail flying in the breeze.

I once had a neighbor who bore the unusual and unfortunate name of Mushback—"Colonel Mushback." It was not at all an appropriate name, far otherwise, for the Colonel was an old Virginia gentleman of vigorous personality and resolute will. But his name! And a military man!—"Colonel Mushback!"

In my early days I tried to raise a brood of young turkeys. After extended trial I came to the conclusion that a young turkey would rather die than do anything else in the world. Just a little dew from the wet grass on his pin feathers and over he falls, curls up his toes and, with a sigh, departs from this planet. So light is his hold upon life, and so apparently eager his desire to give up the ghost that it is hard to have patience with him.

These things have been suggested to me by a recent strange and hithereto unheard of state of affairs among a number of our young preachers, viz., that of failing to bring up their Conference courses of study, treating lightly or even ignoring their examinations and being continued year after year in the same undergraduate class. A few years ago such conduct was unheard of. Such a man would have been a "speckled bird" for years, if not branded for life. He would have been mentioned in an undertone as "one who failed to make his examinations" and therefore must have been very dull or very neglectful or very unfaithful to a main duty which he had solemnly vowed to perform. He would have been referred to in lowered terms, as a divorced person's name used to be mentioned in respectable Southern parlors. Nowadays, however, such a case is almost as respectable as a divorced person. The situation has become a well nigh church-wide scandal.

What does the church think of the exhibit, taken from the printed Minutes of our Annual Conferences for the year 1922, showing that out of a total of 1,310 undergraduates supposed to be pursuing their studies there, were 407 who failed to make their examinations?

What is the cause of this strange state of affairs? Is this but another instance of the present-day revolt against all authority and the following of one's own sweet will? Or is the personnel of our ministry on the decline, and necrosis of the vertebra becoming epidemic among our younger itinerants? Is it not time for all in authority to put vigorous pressure upon this situation? I am glad to note that some of our bishops are coming down strong in the Annual Conference sessions upon the shirkers. As one sits in an Annual Conference, it is pathetically amusing to note a tender-hearted or politically cautious presiding elder ransacking the innermost recesses of his brain, or reaching out to the furtherest limits of space and possibility, to find perchance some excuse for the delinquent when the bishop says, "What is the matter with this young brother?" Listen to some of the "reasons" reported to me by some of the delinquents themselves. They run like this: The circuit horse has been sick, or the Ford has punctured a tire, or developed engine trouble, or the baby has the colic, or twins have arrived at the parsonage, or there have been so many visits to be paid, or so many protracted meetings to be held. In other words, the preacher has simply had to meet the usual duties of life. Did not our fathers rear children and doctor horses and hold protracted meetings and visit their flocks? Yes. And they mastered their work irrespective of the equine health and the infantile digestion and whether twins or triplets entered the family circle. Do not men in other lines of work have to overcome difficulties and bear extra burdens? What sort of an example to set before one's flock is such shirking of one of the main duties of one's life? How can a preacher be a "leader and commander" to the people when he is failing with his own task of managing himself and his time? I actually heard one young preacher at an Annual Conference last fall lay his failure in his year's studies to the Mississippi River! A new scapegoat! "We had so much high water in our neighborhood, Bishop." I wondered if it was a case of water on the brain.

I am fully aware that there are a few cases where a man is continued in the same Conference class because he is off at college or seminary, and there are also a few cases, but very few, of protracted illness or very unusual circumstances, but these are so few as to be neglible. Who cares for a hen that will not lay in the nest, but hides her eggs under any fence corner that strikes her fancy and you never find the eggs until they are stale? Who wants a moderately good egg anyway? Our leading thinkers say that a preacher ought to read at least one strong book a week. Remember Father Wesley, of whom one of his great contemporaries said, "I admire but strive in vain to imitate his indefatigable industry." Remember his riding 5,000 miles a year, mostly on horseback, preaching sermons by scores of thousands, writing innumerable letters, publishing one hundred and thirty-eight volumes edited by his pen, supervising the churches, caught by a swollen stream and sitting down in a cottage by the riverside and translating a Latin grammar while waiting for the waters to fall, writing in his diary, when his health failed temporarily, that he must take better care of himself, and that he was resolved hereafter not to preach oftener than five times a day. What sort of ecclesiastical descendants of such a man are those among us who say they cannot read and digest from four to six books in twelve long months? A preacher is supposed to have to study something in order to make his sermons. If he does not spend enough time in his study during the whole year to master even these few books (and they teem with sermon suggestions and material), from whence does he get his sermons? From the comic supplement and the daily papers? Pity the congregation that has to feed on that sort of veal!

Is it not time that something was done about this business? Our Annual Conferences have been entirely too easy with these young brethren, and, like all too soft handling of wrongdoing, the conditions have grown steadily worse instead of better. Shall not our presiding elders—every one—vigorously take this matter up with their undergraduates and see that they promptly press their studies to completion and correct this wretched condition of dawdling failure?

There is no reflection in the above upon the many high and devoted and studious men in our young ministry. I rejoice in their present success and in their future triumph. May their tribe increase! It is only the drone, or the near-drone, or the semi-drone, or the demi-semi-drone, that I am after and that the church ought to be after through all of its agencies. We cannot afford to carry such lagging burdens. Let us take heed and vow a mgihtly vow to beware forever of the leaven of the ecclesiastical zebra, the mushback, and the young turkey!

RELOCATION OF THE TRAINING SCHOOL.

NO 2.

By Bishop W. F. McMurry.

In a former communication I called attention to the fact that the Board of Missions, in annual session, declined to commit to its Executive Committee the final authority of relocating the Scarritt Bible and Training School.

That there was a general understanding with the committees who had considered the question and with the Woman's Missionary Council that the new location was to be in Nashville, Tenn., there seems to be no shadow of doubt.

The action of the Board of Missions, requiring report to be made to the full Board, resulted in the sending out, by Bishop E. D. Mouzon, of communications to several cities in the church, making inquiry as to their desire, and inviting propositions from such cities for the location of the Training School within their bounds.

These communications seem to have produced some results, as the Nashville Banner, under date of June 27, contained an article headed, "Calls Meeting on Scarritt School." This article stated that "Mr. Molloy issued the call to the Methodists when it became known that several other cities were putting forth efforts to get the relocated institution, and that the committee for the new site for Scarritt had received some very attractive inducements from other places." The article further stated that Mr. Molloy issued the call for the mass meeting to discuss the matter of additional overtures from Nashville. Mr. Molloy is the presiding elder of the Nashville District.

This would indicate that Nashville had not been interested in a bonus for the location of the Training School until after it became known in Nashville, in response to the communications of Bishop Mouzon, that other cities were willing and ready to make substantial propositions.

In my judgment there is but one proper course open to those in authority, and that is to locate the new Scarritt in connection with one of the universities owned and controlled by the church. If these universities, which have cost the church so much, are not of such character and standing as to justify such a relationship, let it be said in the open.

RELIGIOUS RATHER THAN CHRISTIAN.

There use to be a story of a crossroads country store keeper who would call to his son in the morning: "John, have you watered the syrup? Sanded the sugar? Rocked the coffee? Come to prayers." We have recently had that same thing in high places in industrial America. Judge E. H. Gary, head of the United States Steel Corporation, made an address on Friday in which he pleaded for a return to the principles of Jesus and the old-time religion as our only hope for the world. On Saturday morning he read the report of a committee appointed at the request of President Harding to look into the twelve-hour day in his plants. The report contended for its continuance, as it was not practicable to make three shifts instead of two. Worst of all, it tried to justify these killing hours as desirable for the workers and desired by them. Meanwhile the Corporation piles up its millions in profit and dividends. It was claimed that the three shifts would increase the cost of steel to consumers beyond what they could bear. Why did they not provide for reducing their profits to a reasonable level, paying the excess out of these abnormal dividends? They are willing to traffic in human souls, burn up helpless employees in spirit and body, and deprive them of a chance to achieve a life while they are making a living for their families! Can they be Christians while they are coining the blood of helpless men, women and children into excess profits to be hoarded by idle rich, while Gary and a few friends spend three-quarters of a million dollars on a frolic excursion to the Mediteranean? Can they be Christian and frolic in extravagant luxuries made possible by depriving their dependent employees of the common human right of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness? Is this not slavery worse than our colored friends knew? Is it not time for the Christian sentiment of America to enter into a relentless crusade against this inhuman use of autocratic power and make it forever impossible? The whole country is indebted to the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America for a vigorous declaration of war against such cruel zarism. They insist that the fight is on until this abomination is abated and the million and a half or more helpless sufferers have a chance to be men and women in a free world.

Worse even than the twelve-hour day is the twenty-four-hour day which is required at intervals of a certain number of workers.

Those who practice such iniquities may be religious, may talk loudly about the old gospel and the principles of Jesus, as some of them have been doing ever since the war, but the answer of the enlightened Christian sentiment of the nation must be, "I never knew you."

THE FINE MANHOOD.

The world is a sphere of suffering and, until it is remade from base to summit, no one can deny that it will continue to be what it is. Hence the aim of fine manhood should be not to make life easy, but to make it so strong that it can stand the utmost strain. Again, I say the end is not suffering but victory, though of a sort that can be achieved only through suffering. Nothing less is worthy of men who are sons of God.—Bishop Charles H. Brent.

As in that purple!—E. B. Browning.

THE SOUTHERN CONFERENCE AT BLUE RIDGE, N. C., AND THE MILLSAPS COLLEGE DELEGATION.

The Blue Ridge Association, in securing what is said to be one of the finest conference grounds in the world, and providing splendid buildings of ample size and with modern equipment, made possible one of the greatest interdenominational training conferences in the South. The Association grounds comprise more than a thousand acres of virgin forests extending to the top of the peaks, and the beautiful Robert E. Lee Hall, the Auditorium, dining hall, and about thirty other buildings, are located on a natural terrace on the side of the mountain about 2,500 feet above sea level, and facing Black Mountain, which is the railway station just fifteen miles east of Asheville, N. C.

Looking out from Lee Hall across the valley, through which winds the Southern Railway, the sky-line is lifted high by a succession of granite peaks that may often be seen towering above the layers of clouds that float across the field of view in changing form and color, marking the scene as one of surpassing grandeur. Near by may be heard the musical murmur of a pretty mountain stream wending its way in occasional falls over the weathering granite until it enters the large swimming pool which it is constantly renewing with its pure, cool water, tempting every Blue Ridge student to a morning and evening plunge. Leading back of the buildings are frequented paths and trails winding in ascending curves about the mountain in and out of wild woods, and amidst a profusion and variety of foliage and flowers that attract every lover of nature and challenge the attention of all. Well known to every student who has been to Blue Ridge is the path to Brown's pasture, high on a neighboring ridge, the path to Dr. Weatherford's cottage home in a glen of exceptional beauty, the trail to Webb's tower, and the longer, steeper, trail to High Top. By the side of the roadway leading down the mountain may be seen the tennis and volley ball courts, the track, and baseball field. The students' rooms in Lee Hall are neatly and comfortably furnished, shower baths are constantly supplied with hot and cold water, there is a large book store in the building and also a post office. A local laundry is managed by student aid, and the numerous tables in the spacious dining hall are served by a group of young college women, under the direction of an experienced matron. Martha Washington Cottage, an attractive building, was erected to care for about eighty college women who work in the buildings during the entire summer, meeting their expenses by this service.

Blue Ridge was not established as a summer pleasure resort, but rather as a training ground for Christian leadership, a moral and religious work-shop, a place for interdenominational conferences for the study of questions vital to co-operative Christian citizenship. The exhilarating air, inspiring scenery, physical comforts, and recreational features were recognized as an essential part of the plan, but the training of young men and young women for efficient service through the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. organizations of our colleges and cities, and in special associations for industrial plants and railroads, as well as inspiring many to take up definite Christian work at home and in foreign fields, was the great aim. Results have justified the investment many times. The following are some of the schools and conferences held at Blue Ridge each summer: The College Conference for the Young Women's Christian Associations; the Southern Student Conference of the Young Men's Christian Associations; the Conference of the Missionary Education Movement; the Summer School for Secretaries of all deprtmaents of the Young Men's Christian Associations; the Life Service Conference for High School Boys; the Southern Industrial Conference; the Summer Quarter of Southern College of Young Men's Christian Associations training secretaries for the whole South.

During the past year there was organized a Southern Faculty Conference, which is held in connection with the Student Conference each June and furnishes an opportunity for the faculty men, not only to come together in their own group for a study of the religious and social problems of the State and denominational colleges and universities, but to join with about five hundred choice students in hours of devotion, inspirational study and recreation. Quite a number of campus pastors and others from the churches and college towns met with the faculty group.

Among recent notable speakers and leaders in Bible Study, Mission Study, Social Service, Personal Evangelism, Industrial Problems, Race Problems, etc., were: Mr. Ralph Harlow, a useful missionary in the Near East; Mr. Arthur Rugh, several years Senior Student Secretary for the Y. M. C. A. work in China; Mr. Eugene Barnett, present National Student Secretary of China; Mr. Jackson Davis, Field Agent of the General Board of Education; Dr. J. Stitt, former mayor of Berkeley, Cal.; Dr. S. T. Mitchell, of Richmond College, Virginia; Dr. H. H. Sweets, Secretary of Ministerial Supply and Relief for the Southern Presbyterian Church; Dr. O. E. Brown, Dean of the Vanderbilt School of Religion; Dr. C. G. Hounshell, Educational Secretary of the Board of Missions, Methodist Episcopal Church, South; Dr. W. D. Weatherford, to whom is largely due the origin and success of the entire enterprise. It may be noted that five of these are Methodists.

For quite a number of years the Millsaps College Y. M. C. A. has sent a delegation of five or six men to the Southern Student Conference at Blue Ridge, and an annual report full of earnestness and inspiration has been brought to the student body. The results have been seen in the training of students for official positions in the Y. M. C. A., for Bible class leaders, and as personal workers in evangelistic service, or as Student Volunteers. The students who represented Millsaps this summer were D. W. Poole, O. B. Triplett, A. B. Cassity, R. L. Hunt, and James Plummer. The writer represented the college in the Faculty Conference.

Other Methodist colleges represented by delegates were Wofford, Trinity, Birmingham-Southern, Emory and Henry, Randolph-Macon, Centenary, and Emory University.

The following will indicate something of the daily schedule of the ten-day conference: The bugle sounded at 6:45 for rising, and a few minutes later for morning watch, at which time all students were requested to reverently devote twenty minutes to Bible reading and prayer. Our own group of six gathered together in one room, and after a Scripture lesson each one participated in the prayer. Following breakfast the students met in twenty-three Bible Study groups, each delegation selecting a leader, but the assignments being made alphabetically, thus bringing delegates from different groups and different States into the same group. At 9:30 all delegates met together in the college hall for College Conference Hour, when various problems concerning the religious work in the different institutions were freely discussed under the direction of experienced men. This was followed by the Life Work Hour, in which discussions were general or in the student groups. At 11:30 inspirational addresses were delivered in college hall to the general audience. The faculty members met in a separate group for Bible Study at 8:30, for discussion of Campus Problems at 9:30 and Industrial Problems at 10:30. The afternoons were devoted to various forms of athletics, mountain climbing, rest and social conversation, reading and singing. After supper there was a gathering on the hillside in front of Lee Hall for a brief devotional exercise, followed by the World Fellowship Forum, when the students gathered in classes of their own selection, instructed by men of large experience and successful leadership, and the faculty men and pastors gathered for an hour with Dr. W. D. Weatherford. At 9 p. m. the State delegatios held their business meetings.

The Mississippi institutions represented were the University, A. and M. College, Normal, and Millsaps College, the pennants of which were hung in the great dining hall over the tables at which these delegates were seated together.

It was a pleasure and inspiration to the writer to go with the Millsaps delegation last year and again this summer, the trip being so arranged that the stratigraphic and economic geology could be studied along the route, especially in the vicinity of Birmingham, Chattanooga, Knoxville, Morristown, and Asheville, passes being secured to various large industrial plants. The men who went to Blue Ridge this summer are ready to put more earnest and efficient effort into the problems that concern the religious welfare of the next student body.

ON "PUNCHING THE TIME CLOCK."

By I. T. Inerant.

Personally, I should like to feel that I could afford to punch a time clock at the beginning of a day and again at the close thereof, and have the consciousness that I had done my duty. The tragedy of the effort of the good minister of Jesus Christ is that he never can feel that his day's work is done. When the sun rises over the eastern hills it discovers to him open portals of opportunity, and these portals do not always represent things that are possible for him to do. In fact he sees many impossible things that should be done, that must be done, and the preacher shrinks from the terrible task. His work is in the realm where men's footsteps alone can never wake the great silence. He can walk there only with God. Outside, the worldly may look and wonder that so little is accomplished in the kingdom; inside and above, angels watch with eagerness the outcome of the mighty struggle.

Good ministers of Jesus Christ work serenely in the consciousness that time is the least of their consideration. The sun is hurrying toward the meridian for some of us, for others it is already casting lengthening shadows across the hilltops of the world; but the task you and I have taken, Brother, has nothing to do with time clocks. Yesterday Jesus the Son of God walked across the world's stage and cast a halo round the commonplace. To-day he touches such weaklings as ourselves and calls us to help complete the work he instituted then and there. We are busy with the task he gave us, we are "fighting at Armageddon with the armies of our God."

I saw the trooping thousands of soldiers go forth to fight the battle of righteousness against an ungodly ambition. I went with them. We didn't need a time clock there. We saw death in all the watches of the day and night. He crept upon us silently with the shadows of the eventide in the beautiful and romantic land of France. He stalked us in the glare of the midday sun—at midnight, when the world should have been touched with the magic wand of earth into the presence of God. The dawn flushed gloriously the sodden hills whence darkness was beginning to lift: was there an armistice with death? Nay verily, dawn was the "zero" hour. And the world-weary souls of youth, which had a right to life and happiness, found death in the blush of the springtime dawn. No "Time clock" there. I wonder if the boys who fought and died in the fields of France and those who fought and returned to the "Land of the Free" don't laugh at the time clocks of commerce.

Let's not commercialize our ideals. Let's look at the cause for which we fought. I live amidst the busy hum of the wheels of commerce. A great industrial center flings its messages of "Business" to the world about me. There have been times since I have been here, many of them, when I would gladly have exchanged places with the laborer who "punches tho time clock" and calls it a day after ten hours of work. Am I different from other ministers? Not at all. There is the same urge in the soul of us all, the same tremendous tragedies lie about the pathway of each preacher of the gospel. Our work had its real beginning when the devil crept into Eden and led a couple astray; it will have been finished when the trumpet sounds for the last call, the world and history give up their stories and their dead to be judged at the blazing bar of God.

But listen, there is one who watches the time clock for us; it is he who walked this way before us and who gave us the Great Commission. He it is who said, "Greater works than these shall ye do, because I go to the Father," and he it is who at last will open the books of lives and read there the story of the records we have made.

SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

Last session was my first at the Divinity School, and I can say unhesitatingly that it was the best ten days that I have spent since the Centenary at Columbus, Ohio. If I had really known about the good of the Divinity School, I would have attended it sooner, and that is the reason why I am writing these lines. The only possible objection that there could be to it is the expense, which is made as reasonable as possible, and I consider it worth preparing for a year in advance. I would not discount the Correspondenc School, for it is exceedingly thorough, but it is not like hearing experienced instructors consider the important points in the books. Then the lectures by the bishops are worth the trip to the coast, to say nothing of the class work. So I hope that many who have not attended the school will meet us old boys back there next year and make it the greatest session in the history of the school. I wish space would permit me to mention each instructor by name, but I hope that if they read this they may feel a consciousness of thanks for their very faithful and splendid work, and I hope that we all may see them there again next year. Not knowing the value of the school, I would not have attended it last session except for the influence of one of the young preachers, C. W. Avery, and this is written with the hope that it may be the cause of some other young man taking advantage of that great opportunity. It is a recreative, social, intellectual and spiritual feast. Come, boys; don't miss it. Begin now to save your money to go next year.

THE SEASHORE CAMP GROUND—SOME REMINISCENCES. NO. 3.

By Payton A. Sowell.

The "Spanish Trail" has been along the Gulf Coast, beginning away up, or down, in Florida, and looking far westward for centuries. And it passed near, or through the land now "Seashore Camp Ground School."

But in about 1869 the New Orleans and Mobile and Chattanooga Railroad crept slowly up the coast, stretching its rails as far as Mobile. And it crossed the land of the "Camp Ground" (or property to be). In 1881 the Louisville and Nashville Railroad leased this railroad, which then was known as the New Orleans and Mobile and Texas Railroad.

And this strong corporation constructed its great line from Cincinnati, via Louisville, Nashville, Birmingham, Montgomery, Mobile, to New Orleans. When John Henry Keller and wife deeded the land to the "Board of Camp Meeting Trustees," and when the saintly Methodists of New Orleans, from Felicity Street Church, and Carondelet and Dryades and other churches, came up to the grounds to sing and pray, and Bishop Keener and other preachers came to call sinners to repentance, the railroad was the only road to the grounds.

It was a tangled forest and weeds and briers to the very beach itself. People coming from Pascagoula, Ocean Springs and such places, had to come in boats. Many came from New Orleans by boat. There was not even a path, unless it was a "cow path," from the "Grounds" to Biloxi. These Christians from New Orleans came and pushed back the limbs and vines and met under a tent to worship God and save souls. There was no artesian well, only a "beach" spring. This spring may yet be located, near the beach, at the west line of the property. No one drinks at it now. But fifty years ago the great companies slaked their thirst there.

About 1873 the "Board of Trustees" planned to have "Methodist" families build "cottages" about the shelter in which to live while attending the camp meetings. Persons walking from the "Grounds" to Biloxi had choice of going through bushes, grass and briers, or on the "beach sand."

The Trustees encouraged, or arranged that cottages might be built, and cottagers lived on the "Grounds" for the "camp meeting and summer season." At first a "rental" of $10 annually was charged. This price has been very much increased.

For fifty years many people have felt a sincere love for the "Camp Ground," especially children, and the summer is anxiously awaited to come and spend a week or months on the coast. Perhaps the first person to build a cottage, at least Mrs. Zahles so thinks, was Mr. Otis from Mobile, Ala. The cottage stood north of the auditorium, and was the one lately owned by Mrs. Sinclair. First and last—and the last built was quite a number of years since—there have been about seventy cottages erected on the "Grounds."

In those "old days" of "camp meetings" out of the "ground rent" paid by cottage owners, and gate fees and resources from various sources such as these, the "shelter and food" of every preacher was paid, if he did not choose to care for himself, or was not otherwise cared for.

So that the "Seashore Camp Ground," in its "old times," had the spirit of hospitality that characterized the early days.

THE CENTENARY "IFS."

If

The Centenary Treasurers and their committees would follow up the collection of the pledges in a more systematic and peristent way;

If

Some one would occasionally call the church's attention to some of the wonderful achievements of the Centenary in the various fields;

If

Those who made pledges were willing to make a sacrifice (if necessary) to pay their pledge in full;

If

The Centenary Treasurers would promptly send in their report and remit their collections to the Conference Centenary Treasurer;

If

Every one to whom a letter was written asking for information would promptly respond;

If

Each church would realize that the pledges are a church obligation, and that there is only one way to discharge this obligation, and that is to pay it—all the money pledged by the membership of the church;

If

Each church would do all the things suggested by the "Ifs" mentioned above, the interest in the Centenary would intensify to such an extent that our collections would be better, the collections would get to the Conference Treasurer sooner, those who pledged and the church of which they are members would feel better about it, and more workers could be sent to the needy fields, both at home and abroad.

THE "FORGOTTEN MAN" IN THE MAKING.

By Rev. C. E. Bower.

"My dear, I guess you and I will have to have another conference on home finances this evening," said the minister to his wife one evening at the supper table. "I regret the necessity of it very much, but I would be untrue to family interests if I withheld from you certain facts which you are entitled to know."

The simple evening meal they called supper had been finished. The children, of whom there were four, had been excused and were already out playing in the spring twilight wtih the care-free spirit that belongs to children almost anywhere in the world. The minister and his wife had pushed back their plates to linger awhile in confidential chat over the table. It was at this time that the minister had made the above announcement.

Their supper consisted of oatmeal and milk, bread and butter, and tea. The children drank of the milk, which was furnished the minister's family free of charge by a kind neighbor. This meal, though fairly satisfying and nourishing, still left something to be desired. But the state of the minister's finances was such as not to admit of a more elaborate spread. It had been so for some time past.

As resolutely as possible the devout pair entered upon a discussion of their affairs. It was not the first time they had found it necessary to consider their household expenditures.

"What is it that you wish to impart to me or discuss, whichever it is?" asked the minister's wife when he hesitated to proceed. "Is it anything I have done that was wrong or have not done that needs an airing? I am sure I could hardly live more economically than I have, both as to our table and the children's clothes. I have not given one thought to getting myself anything new this spring, for I know we cannot afford it. Besides, that insurance money will be due again next month, and where is it going to come from?"

"My dear, you must not think for one moment that you are to blame for anything," he replied in a subdued voice, "a woman who has toiled with her children as you have done and kept the home as you have kept ours. By no means! And it grinds my very soul to have you deny yourself so many comforts and needs. I feel that I should apologize to you every day rather than blame you with anything." His voice grew unsteady with emotion, and tears glistened in his kindly eyes. It was plain that he was carrying a heavy load, and there were signs that he might be approaching the last straw.

Surprised at his emotion, the wife sat regarding her husband for a brief space in silence, but it was with heaving bosom and something akin to sobs creeping into her throat. It appeared to be her turn now to be brave instead of giving way to her feelings, as she had often done before. She did not remember ever seeing her husband so wrought up and apparently crushed as now.

To the minister his troubles were all the harder to endure when he recalled that it was through no fault of his that they were now on the verge of absolute want. He had endeavored to be faithful to his charge and had so well succeeded that there were no serious complaints against him.

This minister was pastor of a church in a good-sized town. His congregation numbered two hundred. Most of them were persons in moderate circumstances, with a few who were well-to-do and others poor. The salary promised by this church was, of course, small. A bad feature of the case was that the small salary was not promptly paid. The minister had done quite as much as was his duty in trying to impress upon his official members the necessity of prompt payment of his stipend if he were properly to support his family and maintain his self-respect in the town. But for some reason his appeals had not impressed them. Contributions continued to be almost negligible. His earnest appeals for the payment of his unpaid salary evoked promises of immediate action, but nothing was done about it.

This was not the only church that was slow to pay the small salary assessed for its pastor. It had been this minister's experience reaching back to the beginning of his ministry. True, some few of the churches had been a little better than others in their support of the pastor, but the fault was a general one. Every time the self-denying man moved his family to a new field of labor he hoped to find a better support for his growing family. This hope was not realized, and it is not surprising that this faithful man of God reached a state of physical and mental collapse.

At middle age he married a wife some ten years his junior, and four children had been born of the union. Early in his married life the minister had taken out a small life insurance policy as a means of saving something for his family in case of his passing on. The premiums on this policy he had paid with absolute regularity. "It is all I have for my family," he would reflect, "and I dare not fall." Often it pushed him to the very limit to find the money to meet them, but he considered no self-denial on his part too great that he might achieve this end.

It was inevitable that his family needs should become greater as his children grew older, and the demands made on him for schooling and clothes grew heavier and heavier. So at this time the minister was confronted with a dire situation. His accounts at the stores were already so large that he could scarcely have the face to make them larger, even though it were to keep soul and body together.

Such was the situation on the evening when the minister had asked his wife for a consultation over their finances. If he only had in the bank what the churches had promised him but did not pay, it would have relieved the situation at once and completely. If his present official members would pay him what they owed him, he could at least have temporary relief. As it was, nothing but gloom appeared to surround them. After a harrowing review of things lasting for more than half an hour, they arose from the table without any relief to their overburdened hearts.

There were doubtless persons in this town who knew something of the minister's predicament. It is scarcely possible that the extremity of his needs could have escaped the notice of every one. It is incredible that not one of them showed an interest in the situation, but not one did.

The minister in this story had seen his affairs become continually more complicated and unmanageable till there appeared to him no possibility of unraveling them unless the money could be obtained with which to do it. He was getting so far up in years that he was beginning to be looked upon as an old man. Soon few, if any, churches would desire his services as pastor, preferring a younger man. What was then to become of him and his family? He had not been able to lay by anything for old age, and the church had made but the most meager provisions for its superannuate ministers. Almost nothing could be depended upon in this direction.

"But," he thought, "my children will soon be large enough to help themselves and their mother if I just get them through school." Get them through school! There was the rub. This could not be accomplished without money, and where was this money to come from? "My life insurance policy" was suggested to his mind. He could perhaps mortgage it and get some money for immediate needs. But he put the thought from him instantly. "No, no! I cannot do that," he said to himself almost aloud. "Small as it is, that is the only thing that stands between my family and beggary. I cannot use that."

The consultation between the minister and his wife took place on Tuesday evening. Wednesday night was prayer meeting. In the morning of this day the troubled wife was alarmed when she first looked upon the face of her husband. His cheeks were sunken. His eyes were deep-set in a face that was wan and wasted. He looked like one who had not slept all the long night, and it was true that he had not.

The pastor's study was in the church, close by the minister's residence. The wife rarely saw him all that day. She perhaps thought it better to let him wrestle with his troubles alone. Or he may have been preparing some work, as was his custom, and preferred not to be interrupted. He did not come to supper; and when one of the children was sent to call him, he asked not to be disturbed.

When prayer meeting came, the bell had not been rung as usual. The pastor usually did this. The wife wondered at the omission but did not go to investigate. The first persons to arrive for the prayer service came without waiting for the summons of the bell. On entering the little church the sight that met them fully explained the failure of the bell to ring. In the vestibule, dangling from the end of the bell rope which hung down through the manhole, ws the lifeless body of the pastor. He had hung himself!

The coroner's jury rendered a verdict of suicide by hanging due to worry over financial troubles.

Of course the terrible news of the suicide of the minister spread rapidly through the town and out into the adjacent country. Everywhere the greatest sympathy and horror were evoked by the sad occurrence, but it was too late to remedy the neglect. Many said: "I didn't know he was in such trouble. If I had known, I would willingly have helped him out." But it was too late.

BEN'S WISH.

He was a little city lad
  Who came to visit me;
For I live where the fields are green
  As far as one can see.

I live where the hens lay eggs,
  And where the geese strut by,
And where the sky above is blue,
  And where the wild birds fly.

And this is what the laddie saw,
  He came and told it me:
"Your hens were rolling in the dirt,
  I scared 'em up," said he;

"Because I thought you wouldn't want
  Such dirty hens around;
But grandpa says it makes hens clean
  To wallow in the ground.

"It doesn't make boys clean, I know,"
  With rueful face, said Ben.
"They never let me play in dirt;
  I wish I was a hen."

A DONKEY PROBLEM.

"Here's a problem for you, William: A donkey was tied to a rope sixteen feet long. Eighteen feet away there was a bundle of hay, and the donkey wanted to get to the hay. How did he manage it?"

"Oh, I've heard that before! You want me to say, 'I give it up,' and you'd say, 'So did the other donkey.'"

"Not at all."

"Then how did he do it?"

"Just walked up to the hay and ate it."

"But you said he was tied to a sixteen-foot rope."

"So he was. But you see, the rope wasn't tied to anything else."—Exchange.

THE MORNING AFTERWARD.

By Susan Hubbard Martin.

The supper had been given at the library. It had been a wonderful success, too. The tables had been decorated, and the chicken pie had been praised by every one. Even Mrs. D. York, who was Finley's connoisseur in the matter of good cooking, said that it was the best chicken pie she had ever tasted.

The young people of the church had given the supper, and it was due to their efforts that $46 had been added to the treasury.

A half-dozen of the girls stayed after the others had gone. Nina gave a glance at the disordered tables.

"I suppose we ought to wash these dishes," she remarked slowly. "It will be some work clearing things up in the morning."

"Let Miss Anna do it," suggested Maude with a yawn. "She's librarian and is supposed to keep the library in order."

"Yes, but we gave the supper," replied Betty quickly. "And it isn't Miss Anna's place to wash our dishes."

Maude stifled another yawn.

"Well," she replied, "I'm too tired now to bother over any of it. Hasn't it been a grand evening? How pretty the tables looked, and, only think, we made $46 on the supper. I call that wonderful."

Little Miss Anna, white-haired and fragile, went to the library earlier than usual that morning. She dreaded to go for she knew about in what condition she would find it. She supposed that, being librarian and general custodian of the Board's dishes, she'd have to wash them and put them away if no one else did, and it was fairly probable no one else would. She had had rheumatism in her shoulder the night before and had slept very little. She felt tired already.

But when she opened the door she found that some one was there before her. The library had been swept and dusted and the tables put in order, and out in the little room that held the stove and dishes Miss Anna heard some one moving about. She hurried out there.

Over by the table stood a young girl enveloped in a long blue gingham apron. About her were great piles of neatly washed plates and cups and saucers.

Miss Anna stared.

"Betty," she cried. "Have you done all this?"

"Yes, Miss Anna, I came early. You see I didn't want you to do it."

Little Miss Anna laid aside her hat. How white was her hair and how frail she looked!

And Betty, as she stood there, was so glad she had done it. It hadn't been easy. Helping decorate the tables and arrange them, seeing the people come in and serving them in the softly lighted library—that was a pleasure, but the morning afterward, with the library in confusion and all the dishes to wash—that was different.

But she was glad she hadn't failed.

And, as for Miss Anna, she quite forgot the rheumatism in her shoulder. She came and put both arms around Betty.

"There will always be the morning afterward, dear child," she said gently, "when the lights are out, the people are gone and the docorations are faded, and it is only the few who are willing to do the humble dishwashing and clearing away after the feast, but He who washed the feet of Peter, John and the rest knows."

VALUE OF THE SOUL.

Matt. 16:26; Mark 8:37.

The famous Madonna by Botticelli was painted on a wooden panel at least four hundred years ago. Recently the wood began to crack, and it was feared that the painting would be ruined; but a restorer was found who said he could save it. His first step was to paste thin strips of tissue paper on the face of the picture, pressing the paper into the uneven surface of the paints. He added layer after layer, until a thick body of paper concealed the picture. Then the restorer turned the picture over and began to sandpaper the board away. After many months of careful work he had all the wood removed, and nothing but the paint adhered to the paper. Next he glued a piece of linen canvas very carefully to the paint, and slowly and patiently removed the paper bit by bit. The work took nearly a year, but when it was finished the painting was in a conditino to last another four centuries.

It was the value of the painting that justified such extreme care and the expense in restoring it. How patiently the great Master deals with human souls in order to save them! The value of the soul is proved by the fact that he gave his precious life for it.—Selected.

THE SECRET OF ENDURANCE.

"He endured as seeing Him who is invisible."

Without vision a man chooses like Lot, and his affinities are with the earth. As with Moses, so with us, we need to learn the secret of endurance. We live in circumstances where it is not easy to endure. In every one of us there is a consciousness of a dual nature; a lower and a higher, with its secret conflict, where character is at stake. There are life's sorrows and bereavement, experiences which admit of no explanation. We meet difficulties in Christian service. Those we try to help are hard to get along with; others are unresponsive. Thank God that the Arm upon which Moses leaned never fails. These words are true to-day. Are you cultivating the vision which sees God now? Do you keep fellowship with the Eternal? When the soul seeks God, all the infinitude of a Father's love goes out on its behalf.—Arthur T. Fowler.

If thy silent wishing, thy voiceless, unuttered prayer, let the desire be not cherished that afflictions may not visit thee, for well has it been said, "Such prayers never seem to have wings." I am willing to be purified through sorrow, and to accept it meekly as a blessing. I see that all the clouds are angels' faces, and their voices speak harmoniously of the everlasting chime.—L. M. Child.

One of the Leaguers presided, and others read the Scripture lesson, led the prayers, and gave special musical selections. One little girl had brought her father and mother and two brothers to the service, and all five of them joined the church by baptism.

According to the Department of Records and Research of Tuskegee Institute, there were fifteen lynchings reported for the first six months of 1923, which is fifteen fewer than the number reported for the first six months of last year.

Rev. H. S. Johns, chaplain of the Louisiana State Penitentiary, is in Touro Infirmary, this city, suffering with a carbuncle on the back of his neck. He has undergone an operation and is convalescing as satisfactorily as could be expected.

Dr. Henry Felgar Brooks, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Shreveport, La., will spend the month of August with his family in the Ozarks. Sunday morning services will be held as usual during the month, the pulpit being filled by visiting ministers; but the evening services will be omitted.

Dr. Felix R. Hill, Jr., greatly beloved in Louisiana, is making an automobile tour of the country, accompanied by his wife. He says they expect to see everything between "California and Chicago." Incidental references to fishing along the way almost arouse a feeling of envy on the part of this editor.

Rev. W. B. Van Valkenburgh, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Westboro, Mass., has just been granted a six weeks' vacation by his congregation, which he will spend in London, England. Brother Van Valkenburgh has many friends in Louisiana, where his father was a well known minister for many years.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson, Louisiana Conference Sunday School Superintendent, writes that 300 pupils are enrolled in the Training School at Lake Junaluska, N. C. The Louisiana Conference pageant, "The Spirit of the Gray Moss," written by Dr. R. H. Harper, of the First Methodist Church, this city, was scheduled to be presented on Monday evening of this week.

The visit of the editor to his father at Ellisville, Miss., last week would have been most delightful in every way if he had not been sick most of the time—not seriously, but utterly incapacitated from a "summer cold" such as he had not experienced before in all his life. Duties in the office necessitated his return to the city on Friday of last week, but he hopes to go back to Ellisville for a few more days to be spent under more favorable conditions. The avoirdupois he lost during his illness he hopes to regain by well sustained attacks upon the bountiful supply of fried chicken, "dumplings," and such like.

REV. JOHN L. FERGUSON JOINS GENERAL SUNDAY SCHOOL FORCE.

Rev. John Lambuth Ferguson, of the Mississippi Conference, has recently accepted a call from the General Sunday School Board to enter the field of missionary education as an associate with Dr. Ed. F. Cook.

Miss DeBardeleben, of the University of Oklahoma, accepted a similar position last winter, but found it necessary to ask to be released before assuming the duties of the office.

Professor Ferguson is well prepared for the work in prospect. He received his college and university training at Vanderbilt and Emory, taking his A.B. and B.D. from the last named institution. He majored in religious education and has done graduate work in this field in the University of Chicago and in the University of Edinburgh. In Christian work he has had experience as a pastor, as a chaplain in the United States Army in France, was head master of Millsaps Academy, and latterly Associate Professor in the Department of Religious Education, Millsaps College, from which position he comes to his new field. He married the daughter of Dr. A. F. Watkins, President of Millsaps, and brings into his new and wider field of Christian service a helpmate of broad and genuine interests and missionary zeal.

Professor Ferguson will assume the duties of his office on July 24. He will then take over a large share of responsibility in the missionary education program in the Sunday school. Professor Ferguson's coming to the work of the General Sunday School Board will enable Dr. Cook to turn his attention to the surveys incident to the inauguration of the Extension Program in the home and foreign fields.

THE DEATH OF REV. J. M. BROWN.

Dear Brother Carley: Rev. J. M. Brown, a superannuated member of the Louisiana Conference, passed out to the better world at 11:50 p. m., July 16, 1923. He appeared to be as well as usual before retiring that night. Near midnight members of the family heard him coughing, and went immediately to him and asked if he was feeling unwell. He replied that he was not; but, on being asked further, he told them they had better call the physician. When he arrived ten or fifteen minutes later Brother Brown recognized him, but was unable to speak. A heart stimulant was immediately administered, but to no avail. The veteran soldier of the cross laid down his cross to receive his crown of righteousness.

Brother Brown was born eighty-three and one-half years ago, less seven days, in Dallas County, Ala. He joined the Alabama Conference in 1860, was transferred to the Louisiana Conference in 1873, and was superannuated in 1918. Since he superannuated he has lived here in Belcher with his three unmarried children—one son, John M., and two daughters, Misses Mattie and Carrie Brown. These, with one other son, B. Wrenn Brown, of New York, and two daughters, Mrs. A. G. Wrenn, of Shreveport, La., and Mrs. R. P. Newton, of Doyline, La., survive him.

The funeral services were held in the Belcher Methodist church at 2 o'clock p. m., July 18, and most of the people of this community and many of neighboring communities attended and followed the remains to the last resting place. The preachers present at the services were: Revs. W. F. Henderson, B. T. Crews, and S. J. Davies, superannuates; Revs. J. O. Bennett, C. B. Carter, W. W. Holmes, A. H. Parker, C. L. Nourse, local Presbyterian minister, and myself. Revs. W. F. Henderson, Jr., Mr. Materne, Baptist minister, and Rev. George Sexton were also present at the cemetery.

The body was tenderly laid to rest in the beautiful Forest Park cemetery, Shreveport, La., after our church commitment service was read, by the Belcher Masonic Lodge, of which he was a member. Truly a good and true man has fallen in our Israel and will be greatly missed among us.

A. S. J. NEILL, Pastor.

TO THE PREACHERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The first of August we are to put on an Intensive Campaign for collecting all money that is due on Christian Education. Please co-operate with your collectors, and have your Educational Committee assist them when necessary.

I have mailed to each of you a poster, to be tacked up in your church, calling attention to the necessity of our boys and girls attending the Christian colleges. Should you need more than I have sent, write me. Let us work together for full collections of all delinquents. On Nov. 1 our third payment will be due.

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH EDUCATION?

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

Some years ago Ex-President Woodrow Wilson said: "I have found everywhere a note of apology. Learning is on the defensive. We have fallen of late into deep discontent with the college. The college has lost its definiteness of aim. There is utter confusion and a hopeless dispersion of energy."

In a recent article published by the Outlook from the pen of Dr. Albert Bushnell Hart, a leading professor in the faculty of Harvard University, the same discontent is voiced which Mr. Wilson expressed.

The following are several of the striking paragraphs of Dr. Hart's contribution to the columns of the Outlook:

> "What is the matter with American education? From the kindergarten up come complaints that elementary schools, grade schools, high schools, colleges, technical schools, normal schools, business schools and professoinal schools are all failing to graduate the desired proportion of pupils or students that begin with them; nor do teachers, school boards and faculties feel warm satisfaction with the character and purpose in life even of the graduates.
>
> "A watchdog of education, Doctor Pritchett, of the Carnegie Foundation, publicly asserts: 'It is entirely possible to dissipate enormous sums of money in the name of education, which serve neither to equip children with a body of knowledge nor to train their minds, nor to instruct them as to their duties and rights under the government through which the education is furnished.'
>
> "It is a fair question whether the public schools really educate as many as half their pupils. Business men are taken aback by finding that graduates of grammar schools and high schools, and beyond that, even of the colleges, are not able to take up a new employment easily, do not know how to carry out directions and are weak in fundamentals."

About the same time that Dr. Hart's article appeared, Mr. Thomas A. Edison is reported to have said to a representative of the New York Tribune: "There is something wrong with the college system. I don't know what the trouble is; that is not my line. I can only judge by the results. But one thing is certain: the present system of education in the colleges does not train men to think. University presidents in criticising my questionnaires said that the college does not try to fill the students' mind with a lot of information but teaches him where to find it. Yet when we tried my questionnaire at one college the students couldn't pass it because they didn't know where to find what they wanted."

What Mr. Edison says might be justly taken with a degree of allowance. It is well known that he has something of a bias against colleges, and it is quite possible that he has had some unfortunnate experience with some college or colleges. Moreover, he may have applied some unfair tests to the graduate whom he tried out; for he is not a good judge of educational matters, being what is sometimes called "a self-made man," and in common with many "self-made men" a devout worshiper of his maker.

Again, not all colleges are alike. Many are not failing in their work. Very many are sending forth as many capable men as can be made of the material given them.

But after making all these qualifications, it remains true that something is the matter with American education in all its grades. President Wilson and Dr. Hart have spoken no more than the truth. What is the matter?

The fruitful source of the failure of American education is the abdication of government of educational authorities and surrendering everything to the pleasure of pupils, the whims of parents, and the demands of outside parties.

Many kindergartens, elementary schools, grammar schools and high schools proceed on the false principle that learning must be made a diversion and the acquisition of knowledge as nearly effortless as possible. Such a process not only fails to educate, but it tends to de-educate. It induces habits which enfeeble the mind and promote self-indulgence.

Amiel has stated the matter in this form: "Amusement, instruction, morals are distinct genres. They may no doubt be mingled and combined, but if we wish to obtain direct and simple effects, we shall do best to keep them apart. The well disposed child, besides, does not like mixtures which have something of artifice and deception in them. Duty claims obedience; study requires application; for amusement nothing is wanted but good temper. To convert obedience and application into means of amusement is to weaken the will and the intelligence."

The colleges are not wholly to blame for their failure to make scholarly and competent men of not a few of the students received by them. Very many of the boys who are certified to them by high schools are spoiled before reaching them. These youths come for nothing more than easy-going courses, unaccompanied by serious application, attended with much fun, and ending in any sort of diploma that may be granted at the close of a few effortless years. Very little can be made of such material, and the main fault is not with the colleges.

But there is a fault which can be charged to the colleges and universities. They are to blame for the surrender to the "knowledge-made-easy" methods of education.

They allow ignorant boys to pick their courses of study, and the courses chosen by such youths are such as run the way of least resistance, after the manner of the aimless currents which flow from "wet-weather springs." Diplomas are given for almost anything, and often for next to nothing.

It was reported not long ago that one of the Northern colleges was proposing to give courses for training "bell-hops." Of course, at the end of the course a diploma conferring the degree of "Master of Arts in Bell-Hopping" must be granted. Why not? Is not that "practical education"?

An immature youth is no more competent to choose a course that will cure his mental defects and remedy his ignorance than he would be qualified to pick out of a stock of drugs the medicines required to heal his physical diseases. The fact that he needs education is proof positive of his incapacity for such a task.

President Nicholas Murray Butler, in a notable address, charged that this mistaken method of education led to lawlessness. And this is certainly true because as Amiel says, it "weakens the will and the intelligence." What educational process could lead more directly to lawlessness?

But this misguided method is accompanied by attendant customs which tend still further in the same evil direction.

It is said: "Parents no longer choose the colleges to which boys go, and most boys will not enter colleges that prohibit intercollegeate athletics. Hence an institution must allow these distracting and demoralizing games."

This is not true. The colleges and universities in the United States which forbid these games have more young men applying for admission into them than they can receive. But if it were true, education should not be subjtced to the domination "of youthful sports, and their backers among gamesters and arrogant coaches."

In this connection it should be observed that the virtual control of very many colleges and universities has passed from the hands of presidents and faculties to irresponsible coaches." Grades and "pass marks" are given when not justly deserved because "the coach" demands that this be done in order that certain men may be allowed to play. Unprepared students are sought and drawn into institutions of higher learning for the same reason. What "the coach" says "goes." He is paid more than the president, and holds a higher place in the esteem of the sportive body of students.

Can the faculties and trustees of colleges and universities consent to turn over to coaches the control of the institutions committed to their care? If so, will they not thereby pervert the resources put into their hands by philanthropists and States for the education of the youth of the land?

Of course, there is in every faculty one or more professional demagogues who would sacrifice an institution in order to win a spurious popularity with students. And there are some lazy intructors who are glad to get days off while their classes are adjourned for games. There are also "sports" among teachers who are as excited by games as are the rawest undergraduates; for there is beginning to appear in the educational world teachers produced since the mania for intercollegeate athletics began about thirty years ago. They have more degrees than culture, and bear grateful recollections of how some of their degrees were won by generous allowance made for them on account of their place in "teams."

The superficial work of men who were brought up under the system of intercollegiate athletics, and participated in it during their school days, is already damaging many institutions. Such work led President Wilson to say: "I have found everywhere a note of apology. Learning is on the defensive. We have fallen of late into a deep discontent with the college. The college has lost its definiteness of aim. There is utter confusion and a hopeless dispersion of energy."

If this evil continues, the superficial men in faculties will become more and more numerous, and serious men, like Woodrow Wilson, will withdraw from the distasteful work which is dominated and defeated by coaches. Then what will result?

The games will be increased; for the number of games in any season tends to increase in coach-controlled institutions, doting on large gate receipts. Study will be decreased to make room for the ever-increasing games. Philanthropists and States will cease giving money to game-ridden institutions, and the whole cause of higher education will be discredited and damaged. Already we are in sight of that bad goal.

Can coach-trained men serve efficiently as instructors and presidents of educational institutoins? Can coaches and game-mad alumni erect necessary buildings and provide adequate endowments from gate receipts? Can they command the confidence of those who can? Hardly.

It is encouraging to note in the report to the Legislature of Georgia made by Dr. Marvin M. Parks, State Superintendent of Schools, that this able and conscientious educator perceives this evil and points out its ultimate consequences. Dr. Parks says:

> "Physical training is an important part of education. Wholesome athletics should find a place in every school. Suitable playgrounds should be provided. School authorities should recognize the responsibility for 'safeguarding and raising the standards of physical education of all students.'
>
> "Unfortunately, all athletics in our schools and colleges is not wholesome, and much of it should be regulated with more vigor. Occasionally young boys are over-trained or over-strained with injuries to the heart.
>
> "Occasionally the school athletics is confined to a small per cent of the students, with neglect in physical training to the majority of students.
>
> "Frequently the school expenses are increased to the individual student, who is sometimes subjected to sentimental appeals for excessive contributions, and who is sometimes subjected to arbitrary assessments for athletics.
>
> "A Minnesota attorney says: 'Athletics are too highly organized. The same can be said of the many social functions which inevitably distract the mind from class work. Inspite of the great material development of our public school system, the real education of American youth is made much more difficult to-day than it was twenty years ago, because of the increasing evils with which youth comes in contact. Communities are much to blame for permitting such evils to exist and prey upon youth to the detriment of educational advancement. Parents are blamed for lack of discipline in the home and lack of interest in school and community affairs. Home discipline comes to naught, however, when the community tolerates and maintains its evils and the school authorities are indifferent toward their restriction and proper regulation.'
>
> "The school year is short, the standards of scholarship in Georgia are none too good, and it is unfortunate that so many students are losing so much time from regular school work. It is time to call a halt and get to more serious work, with fewer holidays and fewer absences. It is hoped that the Legislative attention will not be necessary to correct these evils. The people did not establish colleges and high schools to carry on abuses of athletics, or hazing, or sport, and they will appreciate the efforts of college and school officials who suppress these abuses."

The restrained words of Dr. Parks are very wise. He might have said more without exceeding the limits of truth.

The church at Plain Dealing suffered a severe shock and loss in the sudden death of SISTER M. S. KEITH, April 26, 1923. She was en route to Shreveport, La., to visit Mrs. James Philips, one of her adopted daughters, when her car turned over into a bayou. She met death instantly. Mrs. Keith was born near Collinsburg, La., Bossier Parish; married J. P. Keith June 9, 1887; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1887. Mrs. Keith was one of the most patient sufferers. She had been confined to her bed as an invalid for three years. She often spoke of how good the people were to her. She ever remembered the kind hands that administered to her needs. Never did she fail to speak good of her friends. In my visits to her home she always had good things to say about her pastors, and how she loved for them to visit her in her home. I, being her pastor for eight years, saw and knew her both at home and church. From the sacred desk I have seen her face all aglow with hope, confidence, and assurance of being a child of our Heavenly Father. I never was in her home without her putting her Bible in my hands and saying, "Read some favorite Scripture of yours and pray with us before you leave." She was one of the great souls of our fellowship, queen in the Christian religion, loyal, faithful, and pure as the white carnation in character. She knew, loved, and served the church of God. In thought and life she was truly a Christian. The paths of peace beyond the sighing and the weeping, the toiling and the striving, are hers, with that innumerable host who walk in white before the great white throne, bearing palms in their hands. She is now spending her first Sabbath with her Saviour in eternal glory.

A NEW KOREAN DISTRICT—ITS WORK, NEEDS AND OPPORTUNITY.

By L. P. Anderson.

The Songdo North District, to which we were appointed last year upon our return from furlough, is the newest one, comprising nearly one-fifth of the baptized membership of our church in Korea, or, according to last year's report, 1,440 members, and at present 87 churches and preaching places. It is interesting to note that this is the exact number of churches in the Songdo District at the time Bishop McMurry organized the Korea Annual Conference just five years ago. What was then the Songdo District was divided into the present Songdo and Songdo North District last Annual Conference, the former having 85 and the latter 87 organized groups and preaching places at present. You can see something of the growth during the Centenary period from these facts.

During this year, in the Songdo North District, we have established eleven new groups, and could just as easily have doubled or trebled this number had we only had funds for expansion, conservation and providing houses of worship for these new groups and those already established.

Our hearts are full of gratitude to God and the home church for all the funds we have received during the past year, and which have made it possible for us to grow so rapidly. But at last year's Mission Meeting, during the Christmas holidays, we were forced to curtail our expenditures, and this meant that we could not advance as we hoped and as the opportunity offered. We were obliged to confine our efforts almost entirely to conserving and strengthening organized work and were unable to go out into new fields where we had no churches, and where they were calling for us, because this would, as I have already said, have meant larger expenditures for pioneer work, conservation and buildings than we had in hand. The field is ripe and waiting if we only had the funds to advance into these new fields.

For awhile many of the poorer and ignorant classes flocked into the churches, but now this has largely reversed, and the learned classes and those better off in respect to this world's goods, are coming in.

Bright young men from government offices and those with and without educational advantages are turning towards the church for something they have not yet found and can never find outside of Christ.

A semi-political movement, namely, the establishment of tempernace societies to limit the consumption of strong drink and tobacco, is under way, and in many instances the initiative is coming from among the Christians, and often from the non-Christians.

Then the nation-wide longing for education gives us another strong point of contact and opportunity. Many are beginning to realize that those within the church have special advantages that those still in heathen darkness do not have.

We cannot give the exact figures, as yet, but we feel that the two Songdo Districts will reach or pass the five hundred mark in baptized members this year, a nice increase over last year.

In spite of great flood damages in a large section of our Songdo territory, our finances are coming up to an encouraging degree.

There comes to my mind a building enterprise that has been on my heart and on Brother Weems' also. This is the E Chun church building, to house one of our self-supporting stations. We have no more loyal congregation anywhere, and they will do all they can. In the Askings for this year, 1923, we have in the estimates for the first quarter $5,000 for this church. Advances from other years and other enterprises are about to crowd this most urgent building out, though it was given a preference and placed in the first quarter. First of all, the local congregation is ready and waiting with its part, and we have constantly been telling them to wait just a while longer. The stones have been quarried and brought from the mountain and most of the lumber sawed and stacked up in the open, where it will be constantly damaged. Already this congregation has sustained heavy losses due to timber being washed away by flood, but they went bravely to work again and have gotten material together, and are only waiting for us to fulfill our pledge made in good faith. Numbers of non-Christians have subscribed liberally to this enterprise, and all over our district they and the Christians are looking and waiting for us to begin a building, and every day we are losing, or are in danger of losing, something we cannot afford to lose—prestige and opportunity, which we will lose if we do not keep our pledge. If it were not his work, one could not continue to bear up under the continued inquiries and entreaties to start at once.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

WOMAN'S EXALTATION.

By Rev. A. W. Bardin.

The incarnation of the blessed Son of God, his transition from the glory he had with the Father "before the world was" (John 17:5), to his being "made flesh and dwelling among us" (John 1:14), is an unfathomable, incomprehensible mystery, like the vastness of God's great universe. When this great event of the centuries was to be performed, God co-operated with woman alone, as set forth in the "Apostles' Creed" of our church, "conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary," and in John 1:13, "born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God," puts woman in a more "exalted" relationship with God than man ever was.

In the Garden of Eden when woman was "beguiled" by the serpent (Gen. 3:13) and first ate of the forbidden fruit, and gave unto her husband to eat (Gen. 3:6), which resulted by their disobedience the ending forever of the direct fellowship of God with mankind, and the expulsion from the Garden of Eden, the first ray of hope that was given in that dark hour was that "the seed of woman should bruise the serpent's head," the far-reaching promise of the coming of Christ recorded in John 3:8, "for this purpose the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." Therefore, while woman was the first in the great transgression, it was woman in direct harmony with God that gave to sin-cursed humanity a Redeemer, in whose name and atoning merit, received by faith, humanity could be brought back into fellowship and communion with the Holy Trinity.

Many great men of history have credited their greatness, or success, to the early training and influence of their mother. It has been said "the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." This great government of ours has conferred upon woman an equal right with man to decide by their votes what shall be the laws and principles that govern our great nation. What a vast change would be wrought in the morals of humanity if every female was absolutely, uncompromisingly chaste and virtuous! Woman can to-day, in this age, wield a great power for the betterment of the world and bring it into right relations with God.

NOT EQUIPMENT BUT THE MAN MAKES THE DIFFERENCE.

Every great school, college or university has been built around the personality of some one man. The educated men of America can, as a rule, recall some personality in early youth who largely shaped their destinies. The dominating personality of Robert K. Morgan makes him such a man. He unmistakably impresses his personality on his students. His influence brings out the noblest best traits in a boy. His instructors are so selected that this one idea may prevail, viz—to develop personality in a boy of the highest type.

The ideals of Morgan School are the highest, to train boys for useful citizens in the church and State, and to develop mind, soul and body alike.

Write to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary, Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., who will send you a catalog and tell you what Morgan School will do for your boy.

THE MOTOR CAR OF THE FROZEN NORTH.

The several great tribes of natives who roam over a vast section of Arctic Siberia and Northeastern Asia, many thousands of miles from civilization, give their entire time to the raising and breeding of reindeer, the motor power of the frozen North. In fact, these animals, besides being their sole source of food, clothing and transportation, play also an important part in their burial rites and in all of their ceremonies. These nomads can neither read nor write; they have no money, and no government. All trade is carried on exclusively by barter. They live out their nomadic lives in their own way, wandering around with their reindeer herds and living in skin tents.

The Siberian natives raise reindeer in immense numbers. They are the most successful breeders of them in the world. Their herds often number from two to five thousand head, and all the time and energy of the herdsmen and their families are devoted to keeping these herds together. For at least nine months in the year the camp is changed every few days, for the herds are continually kept on the move in search of fresh pasture. Large herds, especially, have to move forward after a few hours, and actually keep moving the whole winter. The herdsmen drive the flocks before them and wander with them for the entire time without shelter, carrying their spare clothing on their backs and living practically the same life as their animals. Reindeer cannot remain too long in one place, since the constant scraping of their hoofs hardens the snow, and thus makes difficult reaching the moss under it. They scrape the snow with the hoofs of their forefeet, the sharp rims and pointed ends of which penetrate even a very hard crust. Reindeer moss grows throughout the year, but, if too much trampled upon, it will wither and dry up.

If well pastured and not overworked, a trained, harnessed reindeer is swift, and a pair can make one hundred miles in a day, provided the snow is thin and hard on the tundra. When tired, the deer must be given immediate rest. If compelled to make further efforts to travel, they will become exhausted and often drop dead on the spot. Among the reindeer people all trade is carried on exclusively by barter.—Herbert Beardsley, in Our Dumb Animals.

TO THE BRETHREN OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Rev. Oscar Sanden, who has just completed the two years' course of evangelism in the Bible School of Los Angeles, will be back in Louisiana Aug. 12, and desires to do evangelistic work among us. Brother Sanden is a product of this place; has made an excellent record on the Pacific coast, and Dr. R. A. Torrey has written me a letter, highly commending him as an evangelist. I have other letters recommending this young man as a soul-winner. I most heartily commend him to you brethren, and trust that many of you will have the good fortune to have him for revival work. You can address him at De Ridder, La., after Aug. 12, and until then, at Simi, Cal., care Rev. R. E. Harrington.

Fraternally yours,
HENRY T. YOUNG.
Chairman Evangelistic Committee.

The Christian's song of gladness is a psalm of gratitude, the echoes of which may be heard from every object around him. He sympathizes with all the innocent joy on the earth; but he remembers that all this joy has a source, and he looks beyond earth and earthly things. He regards his happiness as given; and he is grateful, and seeks to impart of his abundance, and make others happy and cherful and grateful.—Greenwood.

TSING MING.

By Miss Pearle Way.

We are having spring now. It is very important to know that it is spring for this climate has a way of jumping around so that sometimes it just skips spring and goes right over into summer But now the weather is bright, clear and cool; the skies are rarest blue and the earth is carpeted with golden mustard flowers and pink clover. On the hills wild azaleas are flaming and purple lilac is shedding its fragrance everywhere. Oh, it is lovely in China in the springtime! The black and white magpie chatters to the old goldfish in the pool in the temple courtyard, and the white-throats build nests in peach trees. Along the canal banks the farmers have banked their rice seedlings and the paddy-fields are being prepared for the transplanting. Everywhere the fishermen have set their white sails against the wind and are off to fish in the moonlight. That's how we know it's spring.

Another mark of the tender season—the Chinese have shed some of their winter clothes. Weather in China is measured by so many coats; extremely cold weather may get to be seven coats cold, and summer to the coolie may mean no coats. Just now it is about two coats cold, though at night it is three.

A LUBRICANT—NOT A LAXATIVE

It is spring because it is the Tsing Ming season, a sort of Chinese festival that includes our Easter and Arbor Day, both rolled into one. It is the time when the graves of the family ancestors must be visited and swept and planted with shrubs and grass, and food must he left for the spirits' sustenance and ghost money burned to provide their maintenance in the spirit world. The clerks in the foreign office, in the stores and native banks leave their desks, and the Number One boy, cook and amah ask for one day's freedom to visit the countryside to pray and burn ghost money. It is the time when all who can afford it make the pilgrimage back to the ancestral home, to the old home place as we would say, to do honor to twigs on the family tree higher than they. The meshes of ancestral worship enfold China—even many Christians go back to the ancestral halls at Tsing Ming festival to do honor to their ancestors.

A better way of celebrating the Tsing Ming than garnishing the graves and burning ghost money has recently been inaugurated by the students. They have introduced the practice of planting trees, and this year in the north of China, around Pekin, thousands of trees were planted at the Tsing Ming season. China's great primeval forests have been exhausted for many centuries; her great plains and mountain sides are treeless, shrubless, bare and barren looking. But it need not be so, for China soil is fertile, and of how much greater benefit will this reforestation be to the nation than refurnishing the past—the attempt to live in the present on the depleted past. The Chinese have too long dwelt in the past, and it has brought their lower classes to poverty, ignorance, superstition, to a condition indescribable. This one thing, small and insignificant outwardly, may be an indication that she is coming to the realization that the future is more important than the past. And when China realizes that the present and the future must he cared for and the past left behind, she will he almost ready to claim the position in the present that was her glory in the past. Every missionary thinks the land and nation in which his activites lie are the greatest. I live in China and am not different.

I am teaching again this year in the night school at the Moore Memorial Church. This school runs for four months, and has an attendance of about two hundred and fifty, all boys and men. There are about fifteen on the faculty, seven of whom are foreigners, and all of whom are college graduates, one of the Chinese members being a Ph.D. of Yale. I have a class twice a week in English conversation. There are eighteen enrolled and there are usually about sixteen present. It is quite interesting. To use a prohibition phrase, I am getting a real "kick" out of it. The men in this class are employed in foreign British and American business houses, and are very quick and bright, and have a very good knowledge of the English language. Many of these students are not Christians, and of course every possible opportunity is utilized to present Christian doctrines.

Mission work, I think, is making steady progress in China. Many of the old barriers to its spread have been removed, and while there are now many new and different obstacles and problems, their very presence points to progress. One hears of conversions every day. Just now a letter came to the office telling of an almost startling conversion. A girl in Changchow, a student in the normal school, in the midst of a recitation, suddenly exclaimed, "I believe!" The most heartening indication of the strength and progress of Christianity in China is the launching of the Manchurian Mission by the Chinese church—a project initiated and to be carried on by the Chinese of our church, a mission by the Chinese to the Chinese in Manchuria. This should mean, and I believe will mean, not only encouragement to the missionaries laboring in China, but a revitalizing of the spirit of the Chinese church.

"TAKING IN SOME NEW GROUND."

Dear Dr. Carley: Last October there was completed, in the southwestern part of Coahoma County, the erection of the Sunflower consolidated school. Hearing that there were some fifty white families in the vicinity of this school, we decided it was a good opportunity for service. Brother J. A. George, of Jonestown and Duncan charge, had also heard of the conditions in this place. Unknown to each other we both made appointments to preach in the school building, he on the afternoon of the first Sunday in January, and my appointment was for the second Sunday afternoon in the same month. These appointments have continued to be filled up to this time.

Last Sunday evening we closed a meeting at this school. Brother George was very active in the meeting and the credit all belongs to him for its success. We visited fifty-one homes and had prayer in each one. The net results of the meeting are as follows: A Methodist church was organized with twenty-one charter members; an Epworth League with twenty-seven members was organized; ten infants were baptized, two of the latter being of Baptist parentage. Fifteen of the members of the church were received on profession of faith. "Praise the Lord."

FROM ARTESIA, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Perhaps nothing has the pre-eminence in the pastor's heart more than the revival of his church.

It was in the early spring that we called our board of stewards together to discuss this desired occasion for Artesia.

At the last session of our Annual Conference, Rev. W. M. Campbell was appointed one of the rural missionary evangelists whose lot fell to this section of our Conference, and we decided, if it was possible, for him to give us a date, and so help us while he was waiting a more agreeable time for that special rural work to which he was specially called. The invitation was accepted, to begin on the fourth Sunday in March. He was here on that day, and both morning and evening services were auspicious to a great and profitable meeting. But on that same Sunday night there came the hardest freeze of the winter, followed by rain, which lasted for more than ten days; although we made several efforts to revive the services, we were at last rained out, to our great disappointment.

After some waiting, another call of the same character was made, and we talked over the proposition, and one suggested a pastor-evangelist, and Rev. V. C. Curtis was suggested, and was unanimously selected as the man. Brother Curtis agreed and came to us on Monday night following the fourth Sunday in June, and for ten days gave us a feast of good things. His themes were practically on the cardinal doctrines of the Bible, which were in clearness and force presented, and much enjoyed. This series of sermons caried us back to the years ago when the Methodist church had an altar, the place much honored of God in the salvation of thousands of souls. I do not know that it is wholly lost to use, but, if alive, it has little attraction to the majority of the usual to-day revivalist. There seems to be a nearer way to the cross, but I am persuaded there is none better than that old altar, as many will testify.

I thank God for Brother Curtis' coming, and his messages. He was pastor here seventeen years ago, and met many of his old friends; but many then active in the church and elsewhere are gone to the other side. Our church has installed a Delco light system, with seven large white glass bowls, which must soften the light and make beautiful at night time.

We hope soon to have a number of Sunday school rooms added to our church, and begin anew this great and good work with much advantage over the past years.

Sincerely yours,

H. M. YOUNG, Pastor.

THE MISSIONARY VOICE.

Mrs. E. B. Chappell, Editor.

The record of the year 1922 in the office of the Missionary Voice, and in the experience of your Editor does not vary materially from that of the previous years save in that to each new period of time come new aspirations and new ambitions for an ever-increasingly vital publication, and a larger success in every line open to a missionary journal.

Could dreams come true your missionary paper would visit you weekly, and bring you tidings of great things, wreathed in attractive colorings, and illustrated by great artists.

Your editors and business agents are most comfortably housed in the new Lambuth Building, in adjoining offices and in easy access to the offices of the Department of Literature and of Home Cultivation.

There come to the desk of your woman editor many letters of appreciation of the efforts made to supply information and stimulus to readers, and promotion to auxiliary and conference organizations. These are the basis, the bone and sinew of missionary work for the womanhood of our Methodism, and no part of the monthly preparation is done with greater interest than that which is designed to make them more effective.

One expression of this appreciation is the ready response to calls for co-operative effort on the part of Voice agents and other officers of societies. The appeals issued from the office have met with enthusiastic response in every case. This spirit of working together is the significant feature of the relationship existing between the Voice staff of editors, business agents, and auxiliary agents and members.

Nor does the spirit of co-operation stop here: No appeal for contributions, whether from secretaries, missionaries, deaconesses or interested friends of the cause, has gone unheeded. Indeed, many articles for publication come unsolicited. These are desired and appreciated. Items of fresh missionary interest from Conference, District and Auxiliary organizations are needed to keep all parts of the work in touch, and to provide stimulation to one another. You are hereby requested to send them, and to request your members to forward short, spicy news-stories and items for publication.

The subscriptions to the magazine in January, 1923, doubled those of the same month in 1922.

CHIDREN'S WORK.

Miss Althea Jones, Superintendent.

The work which has been done with the children of the church the past year under the direction of your superintendent has been good. All the statistics, except two items, show an increase. The total offering by the children, of money, was 5 per cent less than last year. Six fewer auxiliaries observed the Week of Prayer, which makes the second of the only two decreases of the year. In members and divisions, mission study, social service, and honor roll, while some of the gains are small, still they all show a net gain for the year.

We have altogether now enrolled in the Children's Department 108,133 children, a mighty army whose potentialities are limitless. How great is the opportunity of every woman in this Council Missionary Society for a second chance through these more than a hundred thousand children!

This past year the work has been a great joy to me, and I desire to express my thankfulness for the opportunity of serving in this field. The Conference superintendents are a splendid body of women, and have always responded beautifully to the suggestions coming from this office, and frequently have made valuable contributions toward the promotion of the work by the exchange of ideas and methods which they have been so generous in giving. I would like to take this opportunity of thanking them publicly, as I have already done privately, for their loyal co-operation, and to say that this report of the splendid year's work has been due in a very large measure to their faithfulness and consecration to the task.

The church is thinking and planning for the children to-day as never before. Truly this is the day of the child, and we should be encouraged over the outlook and be inspired by this deeper realization of the value to the church of the child, and by the knowledge that many of its departments are adjusting their activities to meet more fully the needs. Our progress as a church will be measured by the way we meet the needs of the childhood of the church. So may we all enter into this great task God has given us, the training of his little ones, preparing them for life.

TO THE FRIENDS OF REV. E. L. ALFORD.

Our dear brother is here in our midst, and, with Christian fortitude and submission, bearing his afflictions, he sends to each of you this message, possibly his last before he makes the transfer from earth to the better realm.

He and his family appreciate more than words can express the many letters and messages of sympathy, both from his personal friends and through resolutions passed by District Conferences and other bodies.

His presence in our town for the past several months has been a great benediction to the community and to me personally, and as I have at various times visited him I have always come back feeling stronger.

He bids me say to his brethren [illegible] the Conference that his faith is yet firmly fixed and grounded in Christ, and he knows from experience that religion is good enough to live by and for, and is now convinced it will prove to him to be good enough to die by.

Brethren, he has been an intense sufferer, and even while I write these lines he is suffering pain known only to him and his God. In behalf of his family, I ask that each of you remember him and them in your devotions to God. He is ready for the transfer, brethren, and is just patiently waiting the call.

To you who have written him, do not feel neglected that no reply has been sent you. He himself has not been able to reply, and his wife and daughter have not had the opportunity, for one or the other has been constantly by his bedside watching carefully and ministerg to his needs.

This message from his pastor is his reply to all who have written. Personally, I do not see how he can remain with us much longer.

But of one thing I am sure. When at last he hears the call to come home the way will be clear, and he will be conscious of the rod and staff to comfort him. And we will know where to find him.

His Pastor,
F. B. ORMOND.
Tylertown, Miss.

RENWAR VS. RHEUMATISM.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year tha intense pains of rheumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve or your money is refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the slightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Boehmer says, "One 50c bottle has done me more good than all sanatorium treatment, and what it did for me, why should it not do the same for others? Should any one doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me." ## TO THE PREACHERS AND LAYMEN OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: The great Conference on Lay Activities to be held at Lake Junaluska on Aug. 10 to 15, under the direction of our General Board of Lay Activities, will certainly be recognized as affording a splendid opportunity for preachers and laymen to study together vital phases of the work of the church while receiving information and inspiration from great leaders. The attractive program has been published in our church papers, and leaflet copies are being distributed. A few points of interest may be mentioned here.

Each morning and evening a devotional service will be conducted by Dr. E. C. Webb, of the University of Texas. A few of the addresses to be delivered will be: "The Work of Our Church in Europe," by Bishop W. B. Beauchamp; "The Christian Program of the Country Church," by Dr. C. M. McConnell; "Christianity in International Relations," by Judge John H. Clarke; "A Militant Christianity for Our Era," by Dr. J. Stitt Wilson; "The Importance of the Christian College at the Present Time," by Dr. H. N. Snyder. Each day there will be the Open Forum, conducted by some prominent layman. Will it not be greatly to the advantage of the church that we secure the attendance of as many laymen as possible? Let all of the pastors, either themselves or through the lay leader, get the program of the conference before every congregation, and let our district and charge lay leaders plan to go, as far as possible, and do all they can to interest congregations in sending one or more delegates.

Good room and board can be secured for $14 to $15 per week, and a "Summer Tourist" round-trip ticket to Lake Junaluska can be purchased for about $34. Full information as to hotels can be secured by writing to the General Board of Lay Activities, Lambuth Building, Nashville, Tenn.

Conference Lay Leader.

WOMAN SO BLUE SHE CRIED

Because of Ill Health—Tells How She Found Relief by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Burlington, Iowa.—"I used to dread the time for my monthly period as it came every two weeks and lasted for two weeks, and during that time I would have the blues and cry. Since I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I am so happy I can hardly express myself. I have gained several pounds and look fine. I have recommended your medicine to my friends and you may publish my letter as a testimonial. I hope your medicine will give others the relief it did me."—Mrs. RALPH GAIL, 2021 Des Moines St., Burlington, Ia.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a medicine for ailments common to women. It has been used for such troubles for nearly fifty years, and thousands of women have found relief as did Mrs. Gail, by taking this splendid medicine.

If you are suffering from irregularity, painful times, nervousness, headache, backache or melancholia, you should at once begin to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It is excellent to strengthen the system and help to perform its functions with ease and regularity.

TEDDY'S TURKEYS.

Cases of old and unexpected maternal love are sometimes met with by those interested in animals. We hear of cats mothering puppies and even young chickens, strange as this last may seem.

But it remained for "Teddy," a big, curly-haired watch dog on a certain poultry ranch near San Diego, Cal., to prove that a dog's heart can warm toward a brood of motherless little turkeys.

One day he was discovered with the four forlorn little creatures huddled close against him for warmth. He was lying perfectly still, keeping interested and watchful eyes upon them as they crowded close against his warm coat.

Thereafter it became a usual thing for Teddy to mother the orphans, and they ran to him when frightened, burying their heads in his soft curls, apparently sure of protection. Woe to the unlucky cat who tried to creep up on the small fowl or an unfamiliar automobile arriving in the farmyard which sent them scattering for shelter.

When the family heard an unusual amount of barking some one would be sure to say: "Something's wrong with Teddy's turkeys." And sure enough there they would be huddled against him for safety.

Teddy brought his family up to dignified turkeyhood, and in due course of time they were sent to market. But Teddy remains at his post, a vigilant defender of the farmyard. Perhaps he sometimes dreams of the baby turkeys which huddled close to him, the only mother they knew.—Dumb Animals.

MEETING ON THE ROCHELLE-STANDARD CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Carley: We have closed our revival services, with a good gain for our church membership.

Our first meeting at Olla-Standard, May 6-20, Rev. W. D. Bass, evangelist, and Mr. E. S. Homan, singer, was helpful and fruitful — twenty-seven persons joined our church during that meeting.

The second was at Rochelle, May 28-June 5. Rev. O. W. Bradley, our pastor at Alexandria, and Rev. C. K. Smith, preacher in charge at Pineville, were with us, and did fine work for nine days—resulting in four accessions and the stimulation of our Sunday school.

I held the next meeting at Pollock, and thirteen accessions to our church were had. There seems to be a growing interest in our work at this place. We have a good property, and with steady cultivation will be revived again.

Our last meeting at Selma, Rev. R. J. Smith, of Winnsboro, Tex., leading, was very gratifying—thirty-seven joined our church, and our people there desire to get a regular appointment another year.

Others besides these mentioned have helped and have joined our church. The Lord has been and is very gracious to us for saving and adding so many to our church—eighty-four in all so far this year. The Sunday schools are prospering this year in numbers, interest and offerings. The other activities of the church, Leagues and Missionary Societies, are maintaining themselves quite well. Fifteen infants have been baptized. Altogether, this has been my most fruitful year on any charge during my ministry.

I thank God, and press on.

W. W. PERRY, P. C.

Said delegates shall be elected by and from the Annual Conferences, provided said General and Jurisdictional Conferences shall have not more than one ministerial delegate for every forty-five members of each Annual Conference and not less than one ministerial delegate for every one hundred and twenty members of each Annual Conference and an equal number of lay delegates, chosen according to the regulations of each of the two Jurisdictions; but for a fraction of two-thirds or more, of the number fixed by the General Conference as the ratio of representation, an Annual Conference shall be entitled to an additional ministerial and an additional lay delegate; and provided further that each Annual Conference shall be entitled to at least one ministerial and one lay delegte.

Article V—The General Conference.

Section 1—Voting.

Every vote in the General Conference shall be by Jurisdictions and shall require the accepted majority vote of each Jurisdiction, to be effective.

Section 2—Powers.

Subject to the limitations and restrictions of the Constitution, the General Conference shall have full legislative power over all matters distinctively connectional, and in the exercise of said power shall have authority as follows:

1. To define and fix the conditions, privileges, and duties of church membership.

2. To define and fix the qualifications and duties of Elders, Deacons, Local Preachers, Exhorters, and Deaconesses.

3. To make provision for such organization of the work of the united church outside the United States as may promptly consummate the unity of Episcopal Methodism in foreign lands.

4. To define and fix the powers, duties and privileges of the Episcopacy; to fix the number of Bishops to be elected by the respective Jurisdictional Conferences, and to provide in harmony with the historic practice of Episcopal Methodism, for their consecration as Bishops of the whole church.

5. To alter and change the Hymnal and Ritual of the church, and to regulate all matters relating to the form and mode of worship, subject to the limitations of the first Restrictive Rule.

6. To provide for a Judicial System and for a method of Judicial Procedure for the church, except as herein otherwise provided.

7. To govern any and all enterprises and activities which may be agreed upon as being of a connectional character.

Section 3—Restrictive Rules.

In making rules and regulations for the church, the General Conference shall be under the following limitations and restrictions:

1. The General Conference shall not revoke, alter or change our Articles of Religion or establish any new standards or rules of doctrine contrary to our present existing and established standards of doctrine.

2. The General Conference shall not change, or alter any part or rule of our government, so as to do away with the Episcopacy, or destroy the plan of our itinerant general superintendency.

3. The General Conference shall not revoke or change the general rules of the United Societies.

4. The General Conference shall not do away with the privileges of our ministers or preachers of trial by a committee and of an appeal; neither shall they do away with the privileges of our members of trial before the church, or by a committee, and of an appeal.

Immediately after the union shall have been consummated, the Bishops shall meet and organize as one body and shall arrange for the superintendence of the work of the church.

A Bishop may be assigned to administer in any part of the church, provided that when he is assigned to administer within the Jurisdiction other than that by which he was elected, it shall be with the consent of the majority of the Bishops of the Jurisdiction involved.

Article VII—Presidency of the General Conference.

Article IX—The Judicial Council.

1. The General Conference shall at its first session provide for a Judicial Council to be composed of an equal number of members elected by each Jurisdictional Conference and the Judicial Council shall provide its own methods of procedure.

2. The Judicial Council shall be authorized to review, upon appeal of one-fifth of the members of the General Conference or of either Jurisdictional Conference or on the appeal of a majority of the Bishops on constitutional grounds, the acts of the General Conference and of the Jurisdictional Conferences; to hear and to determine all other appeals and matters coming to it in the course of legal procedure.

3. The Judicial Council shall have the right on its own motion, subject to such rules and regulations as shall be determined by the General Conference, to review the legislative acts of the General Conference or of either Jurisdictional Conference, and to pass on the constitutionality of said acts.

4. The Judicial Council shall also have power to arrest an action of a Connectional Board or other Connectional Body when such action is brought before it by appeal by one-fifth of the members of said body present and voting, or by a majority of the Bishops.

5. All decisions of the Judicial Council shall be made by a majority of the total membership of the Council.

Article X—Amendments.

The General Conference shall at its first session provide in harmony with the existing procedure of the two churches a method of amending the constitution, and until such method shall have been adopted amendments shall be effected through the process now prevailing in the churches, respectively.

Article XI—Schedule.

In all matters not specifically set forth in these Articles and until the General Conference by legal process shall otherwise ordain, the rules of government in the Disciplines of the respective churches shall be of full force and effect and binding upon the Jurisdictions respectively.

Recommendation.

We recommend that [illegible] interest of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church be continued by the Jurisdiction with which it is historically related and to such an extent as that Jurisdiction may deem wise.

LAWLESSNESS OR LAW OBSERVANCE—AMERICA'S WORLD OBLIGATIONS.

At the recent Conference held at Lake Junaluska under the auspices of the Commission on Temperance and Social Service, there was very full and thorough discussion of many great questions pertaining to the relation of the membership of the Christian church to the world in which the church is located and must work. Reports were made and resolutions prepared and adopted on the various subjects before the Conference. The reports on some subjects were referred to a special committee for editorial condensation. The chairman of the Commission was instructed to send out at once to all our church papers the resolutions adopted concerning "Lawlessness and Law Observance" and "America's World Obligations." These resolutions, therefore, are given below without further comment.

JAMES CANNON, JR.

Lawlessness or Law Enforcement.

The Eighteenth Amendment is part of the Constitution of the United States. Even its enemies admit that it will not be repealed. It is the law of the land by the will of a great majority of our one hundred and ten millions of people, as represented by a vote of over two-thirds of both Houses of Congress and by the Legislatures of forty-six out of forty-eight States. A selfish minority has persistently, even defiantly declared that it places appetite and covetousness above the general welfare and obedience to the law of the land. This element openly boasts that the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States shall not be enforced, and there are those who even shamelessly demand that Congress attempt to legalize the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer in the face of the Constitutional prohibition against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. For these men are really demanding intoxicating wines and beer.

The issue to-day, therefore, is not whether a man favors Prohibition, but whether he favors law enforcement. Even did this noisy, thirsty minority, located chiefly in sections with large foreign-born population, include even as many as ten or twenty milions of people, should such a minority be permitted to carry on a traffice in intoxicating liquors either as bootleggers or as buyers, despite the expressed will of the other one hundred or ninety million of their fellow-citizens? We believe:

1. That the very existence of all Government is imperiled whenever lawlessness is permitted to triumph over law. We believe that city, State and Federal Governments should co-operate to the fullest extent to secure the efficient enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment, and that whatever of money and whatever force of men are necesary to subdue lawlessness should be unhesitatingly provided by the Government.

2. We condemn the action of the Legislature of New York, one of the States of the Union, and the approval of said action by Governor Smith in repealing the Liquor Enforcement Law of that State, and also the effort which is being made under the leadership of the Association against the Prohibition Amendment to secure similar action in other, including even Southern States, as witness the bill which has recently been introduced in the Legislature of the State of Georgia. The effort of Governor Smith to shift the issue from the effective enforcement of the Prohibition Law, to which Governor Smith has always been opposed, to the question of State's Rights is recognized by all true friends of Prohibition and of orderly government as simply an effort to drag a red herring across the track, hoping to introduce a divisive element into the Prohibition ranks and to weaken as greatly as possible by the lack of State co-operation the efficacious enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment.

3. In view of the paramount importance of this issue which has been raised, emphasized and thrust to the very forefront by the law-breaking element of society—the smugglers, the bootleggers and their patrons—we urge our people in the selection of public officials, who either help to make or enforce law, to exercise the greatest care and to vote for no man, from constable to president, who is not known by his record to be positively in favor of the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment. We repudiate as a slander upon the independence and good conscience of our Southern people, the statement attributed in a recent publication to Mr. Norman E. Mack, of New York, that the electoral vote of the Southern States will be cast for any man for president simply because he is a candidate of the Democratic Party, regardless of his attitude towards the question of light wines and beer and of the efficient enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment.

4. We urge our people to give their active support to the Prohibition Department of the Federal Government and to all city and State officials in their efforts to enforce the Prohibition Law, and we appeal to the editors of secular and religious newspapers, to the teachers in our schools and colleges, and to our pastors and Sunday school workers to emphasize persistently the duty of all good citizens to condemn lawlessness and to actively support the law.

5. We commend the Federal Government for enforcing the Eighteenth Amendment as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States, forbidding all persons from transporting beverage liquors into or through the territory of the United States. If one ship is permitted to violate that law, all other ships will claim similar privileges, and the administration of the law would be broken down by a multitude of exceptions. We furthermore believe that our Government has the right to protect our people from the smugglers which hover around our shores and frontiers and, if it cannot secure the reasonable co-operation of other Governments, it should take aggresive action to disperse the rum fleet, even at the risk of protest from other nations. It is unthinkable that the Government of a great people shall be openly defied by what is known to be an organized conspiracy to violate the laws of that Government, and that no effective action can or should be taken to prevent a continuance of such defiance of law.

6. We appeal to the courts in this fight against lawlessness. We respectfully appeal to juries and to judges, not only to convict men who violate the law of the land, but to inflict such punishments as will deter the offender from a repetition of the crime. The certainty of conviction and the certainty of adequate penalties will go far to break up lawlessness.

7. We commend the splendid work of agitation and education which is being carried on by the Anti-Saloon League of America and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and we express our high appreciation of the courageous, efficient leadership of these two great organizations, and hereby pledge our undiminished co-operation with them in their fight against the enemies of the Eighteenth Amendment.

America's World Obligation.

With ancient Christian races in the Near East in danger of extermination, with nearly two million refugees driven from their ancestral homes, with fifty thousand men in camps on the shores of Asia Minor awaiting medical attention and transportation to a land of Christian safety, with thousands more still fleeing before the persecutor, America must hearken to God's Word: "Whoso hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need and shutteth up his bowels of compassion against him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" We commend to our people's generosity the work of the Near East Relief, the organization chartered by the United States Congress to handle the problems of relief and reconstruction, and to whose efforts the native Near East leaders credit the saving of the lives of at least one million people.

1. We place on record our approval of the statement sent to President Harding by the committee appointed by the Conference held in New York City on May 10 on justice for the Near East. Emphasizing the requests contained in that statement, we urge our Government to press for the prompt appointment of the International Commission to consider thoroughly the distressing refugee problem in the Near East, and, should other nations delay or refuse to co-operate, we believe our Government should take immediate action to save the many thousands who must inevitably perish unless outside relief is reported, and we believe that our Government should co-operate financially in carrying out the recommendations of such a Commission.

2. Furthermore we urge our Government to continue its efforts with the Allies and with Turkey to obtain justice for the Armenians who have been driven from their homes, to the end that the Armenians be given proper reparation for the grievous wrongs committed against them, and that they be granted a territory for future residence, preferably contiguous to the present Armenian Republic in the Russian Caucasus. We believe that our Government should refuse to enter into diplomatic or treaty relations with Turkey until Turkey has agreed to guarantee just treatment to the Armenians, or to refer that question for final settlement to an impartial Commission.

3. We believe that our Government should take immediate steps to assume her proper place in the life of the world. We believe that the policy of isolation is selfish and unchristian, especially in view of the present distress of many European nations consequent upon the World War in which our country was an active participant. We believe that the United States should align itself with other nations for the consummation of an enduring peace in the stabilization of the life of the world. We believe that we are responsible as a nation for the use of the great resources which have been placed in our hands by Almighty God for the uplift of the world. We favor the entrance of our Nation into the World Court, but we believe that is the measure of our responsibility to only a very limited extent.

COUNTRY AND CITY—A SURFACE GLIMPSE.

By Rev. James H. Felts.

Country folks still "get religion" and produce preachers, missionaries, stewards, and Sunday school teachers for the city churches. The city seems unable to produce its own religious leaders. Even the larger part of the leading business men are generated in the country. More, if some of our watchmen are correct in their deductions, the greater currents of life have a tendency to destroy the religious fervor and "orthodoxy" of those transplanted from country to city.

A woman sat at her sewing machine busily engaged. Her maid reported an alarm at the door. The busy woman simply said, "You are mistaken, maid," and kept on sewing. Again the maid reported the alarm. This time, with evident irritation, the busy woman said, "There is no one at the door, go to work." For the third time the maid reported the alarm, saying, "If you will stop the noise of the machine, madam, you, too, will hear the alarm."

May there not be in this incident some explanation of the scarcity of leaders produced by the city churches? City people are immersed in business and pleasure—chiefly pleasure so far as a majority of them are concerned. The Master knocks at city hearts just as persistently as at country hearts, but city folks will not stop the noise long enough to hear. Occasionally there may be a product of the city church that finds the place of great leaderhip, unselfish service—but this product is usually generated in the white heat of an unusual revival, a revival akin to those held in the country; a revival, if you please, that looses the pent-up emotions, finds the healing waters, gets a real vision, hears and heeds the divine call.

The simplicity and naturalness of country people must have something to do with the fact that here are produced the great majority of our leaders. The quiet place they have with them all the time, and when they will they may touch the garment of God. Their minds are not constantly filled with the floating trash of the great currents. Largely their amusements are just sufficient to leave a deposit for good. Their ears are not dulled by a constant stream of vulgarity and profanity. There are few, if any, roosting places for unclean birds of passage. They are not soaked in amusements of questionable value, poisoned by evil suggestions flung at them from posters and screens, saturated with crass dreams provoked by women in the nude "for art's sake," and slugged by propaganda born in Russia's slough of despond. Their theology is as simple as their living. They are not harrassed by doubt, porcupined by question marks, evoluted into the church; not schooled in the mission spirit, yet producing the missionaries; without great schools, yet producing the great scholars; behind the times in Sunday school work, yet producing the great majority of our teachers in the city churches; without any definite program, yet furnishing the word's great program makers.

When the city gets the country properly trained and organized, will they have bridge parties, poker rooms, dance halls, wet nurses and poodle dogs? Will there be the refinement that is evidenced by plug hats, claw-hammer suits and decollete evening dresses? Will they have a big choir "loft" for about three persons to harrass the people from, just before they are told by the pastor how to evolute? Will they park corsets and cars, make night hideous with noise, and the roads dangerous to travel? Will they turn their homes into mere places to sleep, and make the road-house the custodian of meat and morals? Will they multiply ritualism (as Dr. Sledd so forcefully put it at Jackson) until spiritual decadence is unmistakable? And should all or any appreciable part of this appear, WILL THEY STILL PRODUCE OUR LEADERS? And if we fall here, for any reason, from whence will come the leaders of the next generation? Bob Ingersoll was wont to say, "Plug hats produced our splendid civilization." And there are those among us who are saying that sports produce a college, naked women constitute good society, bridge parties and poker games are the evidences of advanced civilization, a dance hall is a necessary avenue of expression for those of "artistic temperament" and in need of special exercise, while a Continental Sabbath is the panacea for all our ills—giving us the one palladium of liberty necessary to make us free like HAPPY AND PROGRESSIVE RUSSIA. It might also appear that to question the divinity of Christ and challenge the reality of miracles is sufficient evidence of one's INTELLECTUALITY, the necessary pabulum of "liberty of thought." Our country territory is comparatively free from all this rot, and our country territory still produces "ninety per cent of our missionaries, seventy-five to eighty per cent of our better known preachers, and two-thirds of our officials and Sunday school teachers in the city." (Quotations from Dr. Taylor.) IS THERE ANY KIND OF CONNECTION BETWEEN THESE THINGS?

Another matter of interest in this connection is the spirit of our trained men FROM the country. How many of them, being educated and trained, often at the direct expense of the church, say to the authorities, "Here am I, send me to the country?" They hear the call of the mission fields (foreign), and the city call rings clear, and, for a short time even the better village and town charges can make them hear, but out in the sticks, SELDOM, IF EVER. Why is this? What process is it that transforms the spirit of these country bumpkins, fresh trained in mind and body? Is it another evolution? Occasionally there is found a rare spirit unspoiled by the new vision, giving himself with the reckless abandon of a great passion to the land that produced him. Yet again, not for long. He is soon sent elsewhere. The fields that produce neither preachers nor teachers call for him. They offer greater remuneration. While comparatively barren in the matter of preachers and teachers, they produce good salaries, afford many comforts and luxuries. Occasionally one is found who carries to the great cities a breath from "the hills from whence cometh our help," maintains both his spiritual integrity and modest consecration, reaches the heart of a city charge, working miracles by the grace of God, including the miracle of forgetting "If a man desireth the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work."

You know, gentle or pugnacious reader, and I know that the average graduate from our colleges, in so far as he is able, demands recognition, if you please. He does not necessarily look with contempt on his less fortunate brother—he scarcely looks at him at all. He looks at the charge that pays well, gives him suitable association, proper recognition of his intellectuality, real or supposed. Does this mean that our educational system is wrong? Is Rev. Bob Shuler's experience when seeking an assistant pastor at Trinity, Los Angeles, Cal., a common one? Are we robbing men of the spirit of holy boldness, the passion for souls? Does it mean that when a man acquires a taste for mayonnaise and olive oil he ceases to like ham and gravy? Or, having seen "society as she is dressed" and heard "English as she is spoke," is there a dull drabness in the land of his nativity that jars his "refined constitution?" Whatever the SCIENTIFIC reason, from bishops up to SECRETARIES, and from SECRETARIES down to pastors, even as low as presiding elders, we find men who never wore socks before they were eighteen years of age, the crease of whose celluloid collars yet abides, TELLING us how to save the couutry places, but failing, sadly failing, to SHOW us how. Fact is, few of the men who give us EXPERT advice have any remarkable record, so far as I have heard or read, in the matter of building country territory.

Am I a knocker and complainer whose petty jealousy is transparent? Not consciously so. I hold no brief for judging any man save myself, and even when I suffer unspeakable humiliation because of my glaring mistakes, calling myself a fool, I am not LONESOME. I am just looking at every-day naked facts that trying to hide helps not. Also, I am working, praying, using every means at my command to reach the remotest nook of my territory with the old, old story. I have on my prayer list the burdened men who give general direction to our energies. But I find myself wondering no little when a man like Dr. Taylor tells us that practically all our workers come from the country, yet sends out an S. O. S. call in behalf of the ONLY PRODUCING GROUND OF THE CHURCH.

I have a well defined suspicion, not to say conviction, that God is honoring his gospel where it is preached in simplicity and earnestness; that where there is the slightest doubt or questioning, LEADERS ARE NOT PRODUCED. They tell us that unless the gospel is MODERNIZED, young men will not go into the ministry, while they are telling us the only real supply is coming from the country. When good acting, literary efforts, plays, entertainments and the like are substituted for the gospel, NO LEADERS ARE BORN. EVOLUTION will never be successfully substituted for REVOLUTION in the human heart. We crate, systematize, analyze, dissect, adorn, beautify, theorize, dogmatize, intellectualize till the gospel is lost in a maze of meaningless mummery. In the meantime, here comes Gipsy Smith, Jr., with a gospel near enough like his really great father in its simplicity and directness to draw even the children; a gospel so free from even the intimation of doubt; a gospel that hardly more than "tells the story" as found in His Word, just illustrated by scenes and incidents from the common walks of life, and great throngs go through all kinds of weather in this delta country to hear him, and many are saved. And here comes our own John Robertson, weeping, laughing, exhorting in a way so free from "preaching as she is taught" that some of us smile, and before the smile is gone many are reclaimed and saved. I have often heard him say, "I have just sense enough to tell them that the God who saved John Robertson can save anybody." And I hear again the voice of Dr. Goodell, "Evangelism is not a theory, IT IS AN EXPERIENCE." And Dr. Sledd, "You do not educate men into the kingdom of God, they are born into it," and "Methodism is grounded on personal EXPERIENCE. It must be a reminiscense." And yet again Dr. Goodell: "These are times when they are telling us that changed conditions provoke new methods. There are some fundamentals (think of it) THAT NEVER CHANGE. Sin, sorrow, doubt, burdens"—and there are some remedies that never change—God, grace, truth, love, regeneration, Jesus Christ and him crucified. Even the report of those received into the church from the Sunday school is greatly exaggerated. Many of them come through special revival effort, and are reported as coming from the Sunday school, overlooking the immediate agency.

Some notable things are happening these days. Here in Mississippi the Episcopalians are "getting religion" at Gipsy Smith meetings, while in New York an Episcopal clergyman is filling his house and staying in the limelight by challenging the divinity of Christ, and inviting a heresy trial, provoking a strong and readable editorial from Dr. Ivey. Our own Bishop is digging at the hearts of men with Jesus Christ, consecration, Christian stewardship, AND MEN ARE HEARING HIM GLADLY. A sweet potato is "good eating" to most folks, but when it is so cold that it fails to warm, much less melt butter, it sure is hard for the average man to "get it down." And a religion of cold reason may be good food for artificial stomachs, but if you ever get it down the masses, God's masses, it must be hot enough to melt the frozen emotions, unloose the floodgates, sweep away rubbish. McIntosh will reach a thousand men, and restore a whole community to sanity while a mere theorist is trying to manufacture an icicle to let a ray of sunlight through.

Do other men sit occasionally in a quiet place, musing, dreaming, looking at such pictures? Pardon my chatter, but there is a foreign element in some of our clay. Glimpsing our cities that produce few preachers, teachers, missionaries or great religious leaders—and our country places with their simple ways and clean living, PRODUCING, AND PRODUCING SO WELL THAT SHOULD THEY BE DESTROYED WE WILL HAVE BARREN PULPITS OR WORSE, I just can't help thinking that the city gospel should produce more and better preachers, teachers and missionaries before we change the whole face of the country, making it like unto the city. Selah.

Such is life! We are brought near persons we love or who do us good for a time; and then they part from us, or we are parted from them. We gain friends, and lose them out of sight; we have blessings and forfeit them; all is change: . . . and all this to teach us, amid all which changes, to trust alone in Him who changeth not; to use faithfully all He gives us.—E. B. Pusey.

ADVANCE THE LINE.

By Arthur Madison Shaw.

Let me tell the sage of the Pelican Pines a story. It was a rural community in Western Arkansas, with about the usual contingent of Methodists, Baptists, "Camphellites," Cumberland Presbyterians, "Hardshells," and a sprinkling of Adventists. A great congregation—of all faiths and none—had gathered at a country church for a special occasion; Elder E. Z. Catchum, a missionary of the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" (shorten the line by saying "Mormons") was going to expound the full gospel and the perfect way of salvation.

The text was, "What must I do to be saved?" Acts 16:30. Of his line of discussion I shall give but a little, as a specimen. He said: "Let us suppose I am a sinner, seeking salvation. I ask Brother A, 'What must I do to be saved?' and he answers, 'You must repent.'" Then he quoted a scripture to prove that salvation is by repentance. "I ask Brother B, 'What must I do to be saved?' Brother B answers, 'You must believe'"—and again he quoted scripture." Brother C, 'What must I do to be saved?' He answers, 'Hope—we are saved by hope.' Brother D says it is by grace; Brother E, by baptism; Brother F, by 'calling on the name of the Lord.' etc." Thus he summoned the alphabetical brotherhood until all had testified, down to "Brother J," giving a different way of salvation, and each proving it by the Scriptures. Then our Mormon brother's task was easy: It was simply to show that each had named one of the ten conditions. So he eloquently summed up by pointing the Ten Steps to the Way of Salvation! When he had finished, he politely challenged any brother present to answer him, or point out a flaw in his logic.

A Cumberland Presbyterian minister arose, and said: "Brethren, this brother's version of the gospel has the merit of novelty, if nothing else. We have among us a sect who have been telling us about three "steps" to salvation and they've been over these steps so often that they have worn them as sleek as an otter slide. But here is a man who tells us there are ten steps into the Kingdom: ten steps before we can arrive at Jesus Christ!" Up to this point the Mormon missionary was smiling confidently. But Brother Burks went on: "He shows you a sinner seeking Christ. He asks 'Brother A' about it, and 'Brother B,' and 'Brother C'; and they all tell him a different thing. Now friends, if I were seeking salvation, I would not ask A, B, or C, anything about it. I should ask the Lord Jesus Christ. And his answer is in John 3:16—'Whosoever believeth on him shall not perish, but have eternal life.' Or, I should ask Paul—as the jailor did, in the text—and his answer is in the next verse, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.'" When this champion of the Scripture Way of Salvation had finished his remarks, the cocksure "missionary' was ready for the benediction.

Now, what had this Cumberland Presbyterian brother done? He had simply "shortened the line." That is just what Methodists have always done except when some of them have yielded to the influence of Calvanists, holiness cranks, Premillenialists, or self-styled Fundamentalists, who sought to tie their vagaries on to our theological battle-line, and make us fight for them! Let self-styled "Holiness" brethren have their two-step salvation, the "Disciples" their three-step, and the Mormon their ten-step! I suspect that when that safe and sane custodian of the faith of our fathers, for which the Pelican sage has such a tender feeling, had the "Monk of Wittenberg" climbing the stairs on his knees in penance, the stair case of Pilate was chosen because it had many steps. But when the Holy Spirit whispered to Martin Luther, "The just shall live by faith," he immediately shortened the line—and Protestantism was born of that shortened line! When Wesley came, the pulpits of the English-speaking world rang with the five points of Calvanism—when they rang at all. The Wesleyans shortened the line, and rescued Protestant theology from a revamped Augustinian Romanism, by preaching salvation by faith in Jesus Christ. Those who shout "Hold the Line," indicate that they are brought to a stand, and are wavering! We must bring the line to its maximum strength by reducing it to the minimum length—and then "charge!" The hosts of our King must not stand still, but must "Carry On!"

It is a pity that progressive preachers who, like Wesley, are interpreting the Scriptures and the implications of Protestantism in the light of the knowledge of their day, have peeved the oracles of traditionalism. Really I don't understand it. I have met Methodist preachers all the way from North Carolina to California, but have met none who wanted to surrender "doctrines that are cardinal in Christianity." Perhaps these brethren who are trembling for the safety of the ark are like the dear old sister, who, having heard the new preacher a few times, said mournfully, "He has taken away my hell." Some one remarked, "Perhaps he is right—maybe his ideas are best." She answered, "Well, that sort of a hell may do for this upstart generation; but the hell of my fathers is good enough for me!"

THE SEASHORE CAMP GROUND—SOME REMINISCENCES.

By Payton A. Sowell.

ARTICLE 4.

The "cottage owners" hardly enter into the theory of Hon. Stephen A. Douglas, and attain unto the privilege of "Squatter Sovereignty," for no number of years of dwelling on the property gives them title to the land on which their cottages stand. While many, many of the cottages are now old and plain, still in the 50 years if the average rents reach $400 or $500 they have paid several thousands of dollars to the Trustees.

After a number of cottages had been built, the spring on the beach became inconvenient and unsanitary, and two or more surface wells were made; then the first artesian well was bored, then the second, which furnishes fine water for the grounds now.

Felicity Hall for years stood near the well. Its lower floor was for a meeting place for prayer for the ladies, and the upstairs was for ladies to sleep—when no other rooms could be secured.

About fourteen keepers or managers have taken care of the grounds. Some of their names are: Charles Powell, Bob Price, Mr. Tharp, Rev. Mr. Jordan, Mr. Murphy, Mr. Bell, Mr. Blake, Mr. Everett, Mr. Via, Sid. Daniels, Robert G. Price, Ormond Van Hook, and Charles King, and perhaps others.

In the early days and years of the "meeting," the hospitable doors of the cottagers were open to entertain and feed the visitors, but in time, on the camp ground, as everywhere else, free hospitality ceased and arrangements were made, through boarding-houses. Perhaps over, or near twenty years ago, "Keller Lodge" was built. It faces a lovely campus, and also the beach. It has 30, more or less, rooms. Hon. Mr. Foster, of New Orleans, father of Rev. John F., and his brother, on Webster Street, was one of the earliest trustees, and President of said board, and was one of the "tenters" for many years. During a little storm, Mr. Foster, of Webster Street, then a young man, was shut in a dangerous place, between a house and a tree, but no serious harm followed.

At one of the testimony meetings a lady, Mrs. Thompson, spoke as a Christian witness, then went to Biloxi depot to leave on the train, and in passing through between the coaches on the train fell from the platform and was killed. She had just returned from a trip to the Holy Land, and had spoken of the scenes of the Life of Jesus.

The father of Hon. T. M. Evans, of Gulfport, who himself was deeply interested in the Camp Ground, and served it many years as trustee and by legal advice, was an attendant at the early religious services. His name was Rev. W. G. Evans. He lived north of what is now the flourishing city of Gulfport. He was an ardent Methodist. He was prominent, if not chief, in securing church property at Handsboro and Biloxi. He had an old friend, a sea captain, whose name was Parker. He made no pretense at religion. Mr. Evans was a local preacher; the old captain said to his friend Evans that he was sure there was no hope for religion on the "coast country." Said he, "The devil has laid an egg on the coast God cannot turn over." The first camp meeting Mr. Evans attended he realized the wonderful work of grace, and when he saw Captain Parker he said: "The camp meeting in God's hand can turn the devil's egg over." In a few years the captain sent for Rev. Mr. Evans to pray for him and help him prepare for eternity, and he claimed the peace of God.

I asked Mr. T. M. Evans, as he had been so intimately associated so many years, what were some of the real fruits of the camp meetings to this section. He said: "It was the chief instrument in the building of the beautiful coast highway, and in the construction of the Gulf Coast Electric interurban from Biloxi to Pass Christian; it was also the chief, most important and effective advertising the coast country ever had—it sent the news into the far north and northwest; and even in the south, it did more than all to secure the settlement of the coast by the fine people who constitute its population. I have heard in testimony meetings people speak who were from many, many States."

The Camp Ground is related to the very earliest history of the vast area between the Rocky and the Allegheny Mountains—dating back to 1699, and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. These great things are added to in the fact that the Camp Ground is identified with the wonderful work of foreign missions all through a tent owner and a "tenter"—Rev. Waldo W. Moore.

Brother Moore is pastor of "Wesley Memorial Mission" in East Biloxi. This charge includes in its pastoral duties service to "Wesley House," a mission plant of importance, owned by the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—and "Back Bay Church." The 'Wesley Memorial" was erected in 1919, the "Back Bay Church,'" 1921.

The most historic church (no doubt) of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is the "Back Bay" church. It is within 400 yards of the stone marking the landing of D'Iberville, 1699. This settlement was made 77 years before the Declaration of Independence, 100 years before Washington, D. C., was laid out. The settlement was four years old when John Wesley was born. It was 100 years old when Methodism came to Mississippi. In the corner-stone of "Back Bay" church are five bricks from the house of Rev. Peter Cartwright, and the lovely pulpit in the church is from a walnut tree that grew on the Cartwright home in Illinois, donated by A. L. Morton and W. Northingham.

Rev. Waldo W. Moore, from the Camp Ground, goes out in a Ford car (I believe Henry Ford would donate it if he knew the great historic value of the work), and serves these two, and the town of Mississippi, eight miles away; and the United States Veterans' Hospital, nine miles away, built three years since. And he carries good cheer and Testaments in many foreign tongues to the sailors on foreign ships anchoring in Gulfport. Certainly the light shines out from the Camp Ground.

The "Back Bay" plot of ground—so rich in historic wealth—contains 2 and 12-100 acres belonging to Mississippi and Southern Methodism at "Back Bay," deeded to B. Z. Welch, L. N. Dantzler and H. B. Rush, Trustees, costing $500. Brother E. Pringle donated $50 as a discount. About 140 contributors to the building of the chapel made it possible to house the "little flock" in this historic church north of the Bay.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

"Oh, for a heart to praise my God." No need to quote the stanzas that follow—you know them. It is true magnificat of adoration and praise. One is borne on the wings of real worship when this hymn is sung. That brings me to the thought which has been running in my mind this sunny June morning. After the Oriental style, my statement will assume the questionable or questioning form.

Do our elaborate and sometimes ornate processes of church service voice and express the real spirit of worship? This, to my mind, is the very life and spirit of our holy faith. In fact, divine fellowship—real communion—is indispensable in real worship. Nothing else can satisfy the soul of man. Music, however well executed, is only collateral or subservient. Its harmony is not the exquisite harmony of a heart set to the master key of divine holiness and joy in the Holy Ghost form—some method well tested and proven by experience—is necessary, but formalism overdone substitutes mere performance for life and essence. It is like casting aside the real meat and feeding on the shell. The lesson the Master gave to the woman at Jacob's well is one ever to be remembered. It should be written in letters of light and gold on every true believing heart—"They that worship God must worship Him in Spirit and in Truth."

One of the great problems in England to-day is that of the unemployed. Thousands of workmen, we are told, can find no work. This adds greatly to the uncertainty and restlessness of social and civic conditions, and perplexes their wisest statesmen. Since among them the church is more closely allied to the state than in our country, it bears in no small share the responsibility of this burden. Labor is ever a blessing, and idleness a curse. I think father Adam must have kept quite busy naming plants, beasts and flowers in Eden's happy valley before the primeval penalty was entailed upon him and the earth. If he had to classify them as does your modern botanist and biologist, he had a lifetime job. As I read this event in Scripture, it was the ground and the weariness that comes from toil that is and was the curse, not labor per se. This leads on.

I have before me the weekly bulletin of one of our great churches—one of the most aggressive churches in Southern Methodism. Yet it contains many unemployed.

According to it, less than one-third of our people are active contributors to church purposes. With all our seeming progress we are not even fifty per cent efficient. If other great churches can make better showing, why just publish the glad tidings—we will rejoice with you.

EDUCATION MOVEMENT OPPORTUNITY.

The General Conference of 1922 constituted a committee on correlation, to give direction to the movements of the church, with the purpose of avoiding conflicts. This committee has ordered that the Christian Education Movement shall have an open field from Aug. 1 to Dec. 1 to gather in the first three years' pledges. It has directed that the entire machinery of the church shall be enlisted in this effort. Presiding elders, pastors, lay organizations—all are asked to use every means possible to secure full payment of pledges.

We trust that presiding elders, pastors and lay speakers will keep the Christian Education cause before the people, that they will give every assistance to the church collector and the Christian Education Committee.

We urge the Education Committee to be diligent in putting literature into the hands of the people, securing students for our church schools and counselling with our young people about life service.

We confidently expect that each church collector, with collecting committee, shall vigorously prosecute a collecting campaign until all delinquent money is in hand. If any collector finds he cannot give the time needed to do this, now is the time to tell his pastor, that some one may be secured who can do the work. This is no time for halting and vasciliating, but for energetic work.

May we hope for united, vigorous action on the part of the entire church organization. These four months will mark success or failure for the movement. May we begin the work at once, and prosecute it with vigor.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION MOVEMENT

HAS THE RIGHT OF WAY

August - September - October - November

The Committee authorized by the General Conference to harmonize and correlate the forward movements of the Church has given the CHRISTIAN EDUCATION MOVEMENT from August to November, inclusive, for cultivation and collection of pledges. During this period all the general organizations and public agencies of the Church will be mobilized in the interest of Christian Education.

THE BISHOPS

have issued a strong address to the Church and are leading in the work.

THE PRESIDING ELDERS

will co-operate and direct the work in the Districts. A live Presiding Elder brings things to pass.

THE PASTORS

will give the message to the people and guide the efforts in the local churches. The wise pastor believes in Christian Education and shows his faith by his work.

THE CHURCH COLLECTOR

has a place of great opportunity and responsibility. It is harvest time. He thrusts in the sickle and gathers the golden grain.

THE SUBSCRIBER

is the most important of all. Money talks, and he has the last word. If he fails the efforts of all others are futile. But a true Methodist will not fail. His word is out. He has promised. He will pay.

"AFTER CENTENARY" PLEDGES

Many subscribers made their pledges payable "after the Centenary." This means the payments will begin November 1st, 1923, since the last payment on the Centenary was due January 1, 1923.

"After the Centenary" means November 1, 1923.

SPARK PLUGS THAT SPARK.

The old preacher has more real value to the square inch than any other of the nation's assets. Even as a student preacher he justified the expenditure of the Church in training him for service, and we began to get dividends on our investment even before he left college or seminary, and he has continued to be a dividend payer all through the years. Any proper appraisal will show a big balance in his favor.

He has made more good citizens out of bad citizens than all the political parties combined.

He has made more steady workers out of salvaged idlers than all the unions in his town.

He has given many a man the secret of character and an impetus toward a successful career. Chambers of Commerce might well elect him to honorary membership.

He has been a great preserver of the peace by crime prevention, and his influence has helped to keep people out of the courts.

He has saved many a home from disruption and taught young couples the secret of a happy home and guided hundreds of children into the ways of Christ. He has turned many young hearts toward the goal of their life's work, headed them toward college, braced them for the crises of life, and shepherded them to the end.

He has comforted us in sickness, tided us across the agony of days of suffering, and stood by us in sorrow when the foundations of our world seemed to be swept away. He put his strong hands upon our hand and slipped it into God's big hand, and we were steadied. We never thought of paying him for that, for there is no coin adequate for such spiritual service.

In the nation's dark hour he was worth more than committees of public safety and paid accelerators of patriotism. From his pulpit rang out a clear call for personal sacrifice.

In epidemics, sparing not himself, he was to the community as a pillar of fire by night and of cloud by day and an angel of mercy all the time.

He was not all saint, but the warp of his life's fabric was genuine saintliness, which went well with the woof of his humanity. For he was very human and had his own battles to win, his own temptations to fight. He was like the rest of us, only more so but he was enough like Christ to know him well enough to introduce us to him, and all we have been and are and hope to be we owe to this human ambassador of God.

To forget him in old age would be unexplainable thoughtlessness, plain selfishness. His right to our love and care is a "first claim" on us. He will not enforce it nor even so much as plead for himself but the claim is there, written in the bond of his rights, and God will certainly require its fulfillment at our hands.—W. H. Phelps.

UNCLE SAM'S WORTHY EXAMPLE.

There appeared in the daily papers this message from Washington: "Congress to-day passed a measure of unanimous consent providing for the payment of an annuity for life of $125 a month each to the widows of Surgeons James Carroll and Jesse Lazear, United States Army, in recognition of their discoveries in connection with the transmission of yellow fever by mosquitoes."

In 1900, when it was first suggested that yellow fever was caused by the bite of the mosquito.Surgeons James Carroll and Jesse Lazear, with some private soldiers, volunteered themselves as subjects on whom the experiment might be tried in Cuba.

Two trials were made. In one the men slept in beds and blankets used by yellow fever patients, separated from them by only a closely woven screen. They did not take yellow fever. The others slept in clean beds and fresh air, but with the screen removed.

It was a heroic movement when Surgeon Jesse Lazear, sitting by the side of a yellow fever patient, watched a mosquito he knew to be infected light on his hand and did not brush it off. In the expected time he sickened and died, and a year after as a direct result of the experiment Dr. Carroll also gave up his life.

It was not a charge of drums beating, colors flying, boom of cannon, rush of shot and shell; it was the steadfast facing of death, going to meet it alone and unafraid. Not on the battle field, but in the mosquito-infected hut they laid down their lives for the country and for their fellowmen; and Congress, speaking for the people, thought it only common gratitude that the widows of these heroes should have ease and comfort while they lived.

The widows of our old ministers—those faithful soldiers of the cross who for twenty, thirty, and forty years, at home and abroad, in city and country, through winter and summer, in joy and in sorrow, having fought the good fight, have fallen at last and left their wives and children to the mercies not of Congress but of the Church—these are our mercies to them: "I am alone in the world, a widow seventy-six years old, without any family or any property, and what I get from the Church is my only resource in my old age."

And another: "I am sorry to have to ask for at least a part of the spring check. I have been sick for weeks and so in need that I did not know which way to turn."

And this is one from the widow of a minister who served the Church for thirty-five years: "My husband now lies in an unmarked grave. I have nothing in the world."

It is true of most of us that we didn't know or think, but ought we not to be ashamed that these old ministers, changing Cardinal Wolsey's words, might truthfully say: "Had we but served our country with half the zeal we served our Church, she would not in our age have left us naked to our enemies"?—Mildred Welch.

A SOUND OF SOMETHING BEGINNING.

In every denomination of Christendom during the last several years there has been a movement looking to arouse Christian people to take better care of worn-out preachers and the widows of preachers. In the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, this movement has been more or less pronounced since the General Conference held in 1902, and especially since 1918 there has been an emphatic call to the conscience of Southern Methodism on this subject. The work has not been in vain, for there is evidence on every hand which proves that the people are awaking and squaring themselves to remove from the Church the reproach of not caring for her aged servants.

Not only are denominational boards and church members discussing this subject and spreading everywhere the startling facts concerning it, but also sceular newspapers, lawyers, bankers, farmers, and business men of every character are going out of their way to call attention to the Church's neglect with respect to those whom she has worn out in building up herself. It is not uncommon now for individuals who are not professed Christians and do not hold membership in any church to call attention to the neglect. Some of the most powerful articles that have appeared in magazines such as Collier's, the Literary Digest, and others of more or less recent issue, have had for their subject the Church's failure at the point of caring for her worn-out ministry. Surely in the light of these facts the time has come when every denomination is forced to give attention to this supreme duty, for any group of Christians will find it exceedingly difficult to maintain itself in the confidence of the people while failing to respond to this ringing call.

This is an age wherein millions of voices articulate clearly and speak loudly one fire-tipped word—namely, equity. It is the call of humankind for a square deal. If men in all of the relations in life hear the call and respond to it, it is possible to have an atmosphere of heaven even upon the earth. On the other hand, to ignore this call in any sphere of action is to invite teachings which have their end in the worst sort of socialism or in communism.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is fast approaching a day of opportunity to do for her worn-out preachers and widows of precahers what they have an unquestioned right to expect. Let us all pray earnestly that our conception of justice will send us into the field of our chance with a determination to win for our beloved Church the respect and confidence of all men everywhere concerning this matter.

Man must pass from old to new,
From vain to real, from mistake to fact,
From what once seemed good to what now proves best.
How could man have progression otherwise?

—Browning.

THE CIRCUS HORSE.

Born in a mountain pasture,
  Where star-eyed daisies grow
By streams of crystal water
  Fed by the melting snow;
Sired by a Flemish stallion,
  Foaled by an Arab mare,
Doing the will of my trainer
  Under the spotlight's glare.

Prancing around sawdust,
  Steed to a tinselled Thing!
Toy for the public fancy,
  I, who was born a king!
Slave to a piercing whistle,
  Gaud for the public eye,
Young, I was fed with kindness,
  Old, I am left to die.

Keeping time to the music
  With each of my dainty feet,
The big parade moves slowly
  Over the sweltering street,
Trained to obey the guiding
  Touch of my rider's knee,
Thinking, while I'm obeying,
  Thinking, if I were free!

Free in a mountain pasture,
  Tossing my chestnut mane,
Flinging my heels and snorting
  As though I were young again.
Only in dreams I wander
  Far fields of flower and gorse,
For the blare of circus music
  Is the doom of the circus horse.

THE PATH OF SILVER.

By Minerva Hunter.

Many long years ago when human beings understood the languages of animals, birds, and insects, a little boy named Raymond wandered into the great forest and was lost.

All afternoon he tried to find his way home, and far into the night he hunted in the moonlight for the path that led into the fields.

At last, as he sat on a stone to rest a little while, a bat flew overhead. "Oh, bat," Raymond called, "show me the path that leads to the fields."

"No, indeed," the bat replied. "Why should I be kind to you? I remember that one time a bat got into a man's house and the man killed it. I shall not kill you, but I shall not help you find your way out of the great forest."

Just then a nightingale began to sing, and Raymond asked it to lead him to the fields so he could find his way home, but the bird remembered that when it was a baby bird a man killed its mother and the little birds had nearly starved to death. "No," said the nightingale, "I shall not help you."

One by one Raymond asked the creatures of the forest that stay awake at night to help him. One by one they refused because at some time a man, a woman, a boy, or a girl had been unkind.

Raymond had about decided to go to sleep, when he heard a small voice near him saying, "I'll show you the way to the edge of the forest."

"You?" laughed Raymond. "Why, I shouldn't get out in a hundred years if I depended on you You are so slow!"

"Take a good night's rest," the snail answered, for that was Raymond's new, kind friend, "and in the morning you will find a path of silver leading to the fields."

"To think of depending on a slow, blackish snail," thought Raymond. "Something will step on you before you go far," he said aloud to the snail.

"Maybe so. Men and animals have crushed the life out of many of my relatives," said the snail, "but you are lost and I want to help you."

The next morning when Raymond awoke he was very hungry. He began to wander about the great forest, hunting berries which he ate for his breakfast. Then he began to ask the birds, animals, and insects that stay awake in the daytime to show him the way out of the great forest. Each one refused to help him.

Not once did Raymond think of the snail. He was so sure that a little, slow, helpless thing like a snail could never help any one.

Toward the middle of the day, as Raymond still roamed about trying to find the path that led to the fields, he came to a large flat stone, and by the side of it lay his cap.

"Well, well," he thought, "here is where I slept last night. I forgot my cap when I started out to hunt berries this morning"

He sat down on the stone to rest, and there between the bushes he saw a narrow path of silver about half as wide as his little finger. "The snail's trail," exclaimed Raymond. "I had forgotten to look for it. I shall follow it now and see where it leads"

Through the great forest he went, following the tiny path of silver. Thinner and thinner grew the underbrush. Raymond knew he would soon see the fields and then he could find his way home.

"Luck to you!" said a small voice, as Raymond neared the edge of the great forest.

"I thank you for helping me," Raymond began, and then paused. "Can this be my friend the snail?" he asked, looking at the little creature beside him.

"Yes," said the snail, happily.

"What is that on your back?" asked Raymond.

"A shell house of my very own to carry with me everywhere I go. A good fairy was in the great forest last night, and heard the other creatures refuse to help you. She gave me this house to protect me because I helped you find your way home."

"I'm glad the good fairy rewarded you," cried Raymond. "I never could have rewarded you for the wonderful path of silver."

"Do some good deed for the other creatures of the great forest," the snail suggested.

"I will," Raymond promised. "And I am ashamed that I called you slow," he confessed.

"That is all right," said the snail. "I really am slow."

"It is not your fault that you are," said Raymond, and your very slowness makes your kindness to me greater, for it took you much longer than it would take a bird to fly to the edge of the great forest."

All that summer Raymond worked making boxes which he fastened to the trees near the forest's edge. When the deep snows of winter lingered on the ground for many months, he kept the boxes filled with food for the creatures of the great forest, so that not one of them starved to death.

Thus it was that the snail's path of silver brought a winter of peace and happiness to the creatures of the great forest.—In the Christian Register.

THAT SILVER LINING.

I found the silver lining
  To the cloud they talk about,
And I stepped up very boldly
  And ripped the lining out.

"You cloud," I said quite firmly,
  "You now may go your way;
Your lining is the only part
  Of you I wish to stay."

And from that silver lining
  I made two wondrous cloaks—
One to wear myself and one
  To lend to other folks.
—Elsie Parrish.

THE SMILE THAT COUNTS.

'Tis easy enough to be pleasant
  When life flows along like a song,
But the man worth while is the one who will smile
  When everything goes dead wrong.
For the test of the heart is trouble,
  And it always comes with the years,
And the smile that is worth the praise of earth
  Is the smile that comes through tears.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Dr. Briscoe Carter, of the Louisiana Conference, called last Friday at the Advocate office.

Rev. W. L. Duren, D.D., pastor of Rayne Memorial Church, of New Orleans, plans to leave soon on a vacation trip through New England.

Rev. and Mrs. O. A. Clark, Cedar Bluff, Miss., are happy over the arrival of a fine baby girl, weighing nine and one-half pounds, who came to the parsonage home on July 26. Congratulations!

Rev. Dan Kelly recently assisted Rev. J. H. Moore, the pastor, in a good meeting at Picayune, Miss. Brother Moore is happy in the possession of a new Ford touring car, which the congregation gave him recently.

Rev. George Tucker, railroad evangelist, will conduct a revival campaign in Shreveport, La., Aug. 12 to Sept. 2. His services have been secured for this meeting through the Texas Avenue and Mangum Memorial churches.

Rev. L. Carley, of Ellisville, Miss., preached on a recent Sunday, both morning and evening, at Kingston Church, Laurel, Miss., for the pastor, Rev. T. A. Ferguson, who was away assisting in a revival meeting.

Mr. Paul B. Habans, who was recently elected secretary of the New Orleans School Board, succeeding Mr. Bauer, who was made superintendent of schools, is a member of the Board of Stewards of the First Methodist Church and superintendent of the Sunday school.

Rev. H. E. Raley, pastor at Osyka, Miss., called recently at the Advocate office. He reports that he and his people are now worshiping in their new church. The building is free from debt, and Bishop Ainsworth is expected to dedicate it at an early date.

The Cleveland Holiness Camp Meeting will be held Aug. 9-19. Rev. G. S. Harmon, of Poplarville, Miss., and Rev. O. C. Seevers, of Corbin, Ky., will be in charge. The Rev. Mr. Seevers will conduct the singing. Any further information desired concerning this meeting may be had by writing Mrs. S. C. Taylor, Cleveland, Miss.

Last Sunday, though there was a steady downpour of rain all the morning, and the attendance upon the Sunday school was small, the First Church school, New Orleans, raised $60, and completed their Centenary pledge of $1,500. This is a fine achievement, and we congratulate Mrs. R. H. Harper, the Missionary Superintendent, and all the members of the school. Now that the Centenary pledge is paid, the First Church school will at once take up some other special.

The Junior Epworth League of McDonoghville church gave a Missionary Pageant on the parsonage lawn last Friday. The little folks acquitted themselves in fine style; each part was well done. The net proceeds realized amounted to $40. They wish to buy a pulpit Bible for the church, and to improve the parsonage.

Rev. R. L. Myers, preacher in charge of the Lucedale circuit, Mississippi, reports his work in good condition. The work was small at the beginning, but has been steadily growing. Three churches have been organized and one Epworth League. Five meetings have been held to date, and sixty-five have been received into the church.

Rev. J. W. Thompson, of Collins, Miss., will hold a meeting at Bethel, one of his churches, embracing the third Sunday in August. Bethel is one of the historic churches of Covington County, having had an honorable history for the greater part of a century. Brother Thompson will do the preaching himself—which means that it will be well done.

Rev. R. S. Walton, Texas Avenue Church, Shreveport, La., recommends to the pastors of the Louisiana Conference Mrs. Olive Millsaps as an evangelistic singer. She has been in the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago, but will be in Shreveport during August and September. Pastors desiring her help in revival meetings may address her at 1601 Fair Place, Shreveport, La.

Miss Clara Chalmers, who has been teaching in our mission school in Matanzas, Cuba, arrived in New Orleans on the steamship Excelsior last Tuesday. She is at home on a month's vacation, and is now spending a few days with her parents at Biloxi, Miss. At the close of her vacation she will take up her duties in her new appointment, Colegio Buenavista, Havana.

Rev. J. W. Faulk has recently conducted two meetings within the bounds of his work, the Dubach charge, Louisiana Conference, the pastor himself doing the preaching. At Harmony Chapel there were twelve additions to the church, and at Dubach, eight. Since Brother Faulk took charge of the work thirty-five have been received into the church.

Mrs. J. A. Leach, who has been a resident of Durant, Miss., since the death of her husband, a former member of the North Mississippi Conference, was surprised on Monday afternoon of last week with a "friendship birthday party." Her daughter, Miss Annie Laurie Leach, of Greenwood, was visiting her, and she, with several friends and neighbors, planned the happy occasion.

The editor of the Advocate had the pleasure of preaching last Sunday morning at a union service at Ellisville, Miss. The local pastors were all absent. Rev. J. B. Cain, of the Methodist church, being engaged in a meeting on the Leakesville charge, Rev. D. P. McIntosh, of the Presbyterian church, being at home convalescing from a recent operation for appendicitis, and the Rev. Mr. Austin, of the Baptist church, being away in revival work.

A helpful revival was recently held in the Methodist church at Richland, Miss. The preaching was done by the pastor, Rev. Julian S. Duncan, whose home is at Pickens. The congregation at Richland is small. A notable fact about the meeting was that more adults were received than young people—five of the former and three of the latter. The total number received was thirty per cent of the present membership.

Rev. J. D. Simpson, pastor at Shaw, Miss., reports a gracious revival recently held at Litton church, seven miles from Shaw. Great numbers attended the meeting and much good was done. Thirty-two persons, ranging in age from ten to forty-five years, were received into the church upon profession of faith, the membership of the church, by these additions, being more than doubled. Rev. T. E. Gregory, of Leland, Miss., did the preaching. On two nights of the meeting the Boyle Quartette sang.

The Grenada District Standard Training School will be held in the Methodist church of Durant, Miss., Aug. 6-11. The courses offered are as follows: "The Pupil," Mrs. J. B. Randolph, instructor; "Principles of Religious Teaching," Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, instructor; "The New Testament," Rev. E. S. Lewis, instructor; "The Methodist Church and Its Work," Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, instructor. Rev. R. A. Tucker is Educational Director, and Dr. R. C. Elmore is chairman of the Board of Managers. Those desiring to attend should address the registrar, Rev. R. P. Neblett, Durant, Miss.

Epworth Church, of this city, Rev. J. B. Grambling, pastor, has begun to collect a new church building fund. At a recent church conference the stewards recommended the plan of observing a "Sacrifice Day" in each quarter, at which time every member of the congregation and friends would be asked to place upon the altar a sacrifice offering for the building fund. Five per cent of one's earning is set as the minimum gift. The last Sunday in January, April, July and October will each be observed as Sacrifice Sunday. This is a good plan and we trust it will result in the raising of adequate funds for the church building enterprise.

Rev. John L. Sutton, State Superintendent of the Mississippi Children's Home Society, recently assisted Rev. Dan Anders in a meeting at Bethel church, near Minden, La. Bethel church is a new building, but not large enough to hold all the people who came to the meeting. Fortunately most of the people came in automobiles, and those who could not find room in the church drove their cars up to the windows and thus enjoyed the service. People came from Minden, Haughton, Doyline and from all around the adjacent country. The majority of the people in the neighborhood were already members of the church, but much good was done in building up the faith of those who were already in the Master's service. This was the third meeting Brother Sutton has held at Bethel church. On July 22 he preached for Brother Bennett at Haughton, and writes that he enjoyed this very much, as he had attended that church twenty-three years, before he was a minister and while he was working at Allentown, and also that it was a great pleasure to him to meet with old friends in Louisiana.

THE SOCIAL OPPORTUNITY OF THE CHURCH.

From the first to the eighth of July, at Lake Junaluska, N. C., under the direction of the Commission on Temperance and Social Service of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, there was assembled a body of earnest-minded men and women, including the Commission and representatives of fifteen of our Southern States, to consider together the Opportunity and the consequent Task of the Church.

It was a body of seekers after the truth concerning this social Task of the Church. It was not an aggregation of dogmatists; it was a conference of inquirers. If the Conference were seeking a design for a seal, it would be an interrogation point in the center with the pros and cons chasing each other around the enclosing circle.

Has the church a Social Task? Is there a Gospel for a social group, composed of two or more individuals with a common purpose, apart from, or in addition to, the Gospel for each individual composing the group? Are there group sins as well as individual sins? Is there a group or social conscience to be reached and converted, as well as an individual conscience to be reached and converted? Can we reach the group conscience through the individual only or can we help the individual also through an appeal to the group?

Have we a single-footed Gospel only (according to an apt illustraton of one speaker), leaving one foot planted or dragging behind; or a two-footed Gospel going forward with both feet in bold succession? Is the message of the church to the individual only, or to the group also?

Then a group of subsidiary questions: Are there actually group sins? Do men and women in groups do things and commit sins, as groups, that they would not do as individuals? Do men and women do things backed by the force of social or group custom that the individual would not do on his own initiative, if left to his own individual conscience? Do men as business corporations do things to their fellow-men that they would not do as individuals? Is the Golden Rule good for an individual, but bad, because supposed to be impracticable, for a corporation?

Are there groups that, because of their united strength and power, neglect and prey upon other groups because of their unorganized helplessness and need? Are there groups that exploit the infirmities of other groups and fatten on the appetites and passions of their fellows?

In order to find itself and be able to guide the thought of the church in its answer to these and other imminent and pressing questions, the Commission prepared a comprehensive program of themes and assembled a company of speakers that for wide range of thought and clearness and force of expression has rarely if ever been equaled in any similar conference in the church.

The themes treated were such as: "The Home, the Child, the Family"; "International Problems"; "Race Relations"; "Christian Principles in Industry"; "Prohibition, Law Enforcement"; "Moving Pictures, and Sabbath Observance."

The discussions by invited speakers were marked by intelligent grasp, clear, concise expression, and almost utter absence of bitterness of spirit and harshness of speech. As an aside, one can but wonder what would have happened if a similar number of "Fundamentalists" and "Modernists" had got together on the same platform under similar circumstances.

Among the "Findings" or conclusions reached through listening to the various speakers and a system of somewhat careful digesting by a select committee were these:

That there is a social Gospel, and the church is under a divine compulsion to study it and teach it.

That there are social or group sins, and that it is the duty of the church to point them out and call for social or group repentance as preliminary or group regeneration.

That the church, symbolized by the white-horse rider of the Apocalypse, is the living, militant champion of the rights and interests of all men everywhere.

That there are no foes too great for her to engage, and no human interest too small for her to consider; no human ills too insignificant for her to attempt a cure, and no human oppression too powerful for her to challenge.

More specifically:

They found that just now certain great influences abroad among us are making a determined and successful assault on that fundamental institution—an American home. The influences are complex and varied, but none the less deadly. They are moral, economic and legal. They are economic in that the high cost of housing, feeding and clothing, makes it increasingly difficult for men to maintain families in reasonable comfort. They are moral because the exploiting of sex and sex problems undermines sex integrity. They are legal because of the easy access to the marriage altar, and still easier access to the court, through our divergent marriage and divorce laws.

The church, through its conferences and ministry, must speak its protest against all agencies that over-stimulate the sex emotions of children and youth; and insist on better legal regulation of both marriage and divorce. It must study living conditions in both country and city, together with hours of labor and wages paid, in order to protect the weak against the strong, and help by every sane means to restore the integrity of the family. It is an encouraging fact that the American Hygiene Association is carrying on its work with such success. Dr. T. W. Galloway, Associate Director of the Department of Educational Measures, was in attendance upon the Conference for the first three days, and was exceedingly helpful in leading the discussions on that vital topic.

While assuming no partisan attitude, and offering no partisan criticism concerning our international relations, and even refraining carefully from the use of terms that have unfortunately degenerated into mere party slogans, the Commission believes that as a people we are missing a great and pressing opportunity to help our neighbors across the seas out of their hate and bitterness of feeling toward each other, as well as out of their economic necessities. And we feel that there ought to be enough, both of statesmanship and real Christian brotherliness, among us to find a way by which America can minister to the pressing needs of the Old World. International war is a state of mind long before there is an appeal to arms, and war is the unpardonable sin of nations until at least everything possible is done to establish good feeling and allay bad feeling.

An International Court of Justice may not be a positive preventive of war, but it ought to be the first line of defense against the inevitable barrage of bad feeling that always precedes actual hostilities; therefore, we favor our representation in the International Court already functioning.

In the section of our common country to which we as a church especially minister, we have always present with us a state of mental uneasiness, sometimes breaking out into open conflict—a race issue. It is an issue the origin of which neither we nor our colored people are responsible. They did not come of their volition; neither did we of this generation bring them here.

Both they and we must forget the unhappy past and address ourselves to clear thinking and considerate dealing in the future. There appeared on our platform two representatives of the colored race—the widow of Booker T. Washington, of Tuskegee, and Rev. Channing H. Tobias, of the International Y. M. C. A. Their pleas for kindly treatment, mutual respect, and consideration for the less fortunate by the stronger race were heard by the Conference and the Commission with the utmost sympathy. There was unqualified condemnation of mob violence against the Negro as not only violative of his rights as a citizen, but a still greater violation of our own integrity as a law-abiding people.

The migration of the Negro to the North raises not only the question of our treatment of him here in his homeland of ours, but another far-reaching question of the kind of people we will have to let in, or to bring in, to take his place.

Of the complex industrial relations presented to us by various speakers, it is impossible for us to speak with any degree of particularity. We were greatly pleased by the spirit of conciliation and even Christian brotherliness that breathed in the deliverance of the labor leaders who appeared on our platform, as well as the open-mindedness of the men who represented capital before us.

We find that over and above all we must all approach the intricate problems in the spirit of love and sacrifice, which is at the root of our Gospel. We must preach it everywhere, not as a convenient platitude, but as a vital truth, for, after all, the industrial problem is both psychological and economic. It depends on how men feel toward each other as well as how much money they get out of each other.

It is recommended that our preachers read and expound the Social Creed of the churches in all our congregations very much as they are supposed to read the General Rules.

On the preservation of our Christian Sabbath the Commission recommended that our churches ally themselves with the Lord's Day Alliance as they have been working with the Anti Saloon League.

The Commission warns against the widespread and insidious evils of indiscrimate and constant attendance on the moving pictures by our children, young people, and even adults.

The action of the Commission on the subject of Prohibition and Law Enforcement was in thorough keeping with the long established and best traditions of our church on that subject. There was not the faintest hint of fear for the outcome of the conflict, nor the slightest suggestion of letting up or backing down. Our attitude was by no means a lack of appreciation of the magnitude of the undertaking, or shutting our eyes to the persistent aggressiveness, not to say the ferocity of our wet and dry greedy foes, for we have the utmost confidence in the righteousness of our cause and faith in the enlightened conscience of our people.

There was a note of unmistakable resentment at the gratuitous insult flung at the South in the published declaration of Mr. Norman E. Mack, a New York politician, to the effect that the South will give its solid electoral vote to any man whom the Democratic party may nominate, regardless of his attitude toward this greatest of all moral issues before the American people at the present time.

One of the notable addresses of the Conference was by Honorable Roy Haynes, United States Commissioner of Prohibition. Mr. Haynes does not and would not have us blink the unmistakable gravity of the situation and the need of full active co-operation of all moral forces along all lines of approach to this most important issue. But his resume of results left every hearer cheered by the assurance of the real progress that has been made and is being made every twenty-four hours toward as complete a mastery over the defiant enemies of Prohibition as over the defiant enemies of any and every other law for the protection of society.

The Commission comes to the close of this Conference with a distinct sense of positive achievement and with a forward look and maturing plans for future enlargement and usefulness.

J. H. LIGHT, Secretary.

"WHERE TWO OR THREE ARE GATHERED."

We count it a precious promise, and so it is. We always quote it when the meeting is small. Isn't it true we often turn to it to justify the absent sinners, as well as to recognize the presence of the Lord? It is fine to remember that the Lord meets with two or three, but we ought to do something to get hold of the two or three hundred who were somewhere else but at the Lord's meeting. But please do not scold the faithful few for the absent many. Either start something that will make the absent come or go out to the highways and bring them in. "Where two or three are gathered together" the Lord is in the midst to bless them, but where two or three hundred are gathered together, He is present for greater blessings.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

JOHN R. WOOD was born Feb. 7, 1833, and died at Franklington, La., June 4, 1923, aged 90 years and 4 months. He was married March 22, 1854; to this union eight children were born, five of whom are living. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in early life, and always took an active part in church work, helping in every way for its advancement. He donated the lot where the old church stood and helped to build it. He often remarked that he hoped to see the new building erected on the same plot; this he was deprived of, but his wishes and prayers are being carried out, as the new building is being erected as he wanted it. He was a Confederate veteran, and often spoke of its hardships and struggles, of which he bravely bore his share. At the age of 44, he was elected Representative of Washington Parish, in which position he served his parish well. In 1905 he had a stroke of paralysis, which made him an invalid the balance of his life, but did not affect his mental faculties. He had to use crutches and a rolling chair to get around, but he seldom failed to attend church so long as he could possibly get there. Brother Wood was blessed with a cheerful disposition; notwithstanding his affliction, he was always happy, and met his friends with a smile. He had a kind word for all. The little children loved him and he loved them, and was always glad to have them around him. He was strictly a temperate man—never drank intoicating liquors, never used tobacco. In his last days he was tenderly cared for by his sister, Mrs. E. A. Bell, who was ever ready to minister to him day and night. He was ready when the summons came. What a blessed thing it is to lead a life we can look back upon as well spent in the service of God! Such was his "Thou shalt come to thy grave in full age like a shuck of corn cometh in its season, ready for the harvest." He leaves a large number of relatives and friends to mourn his going away. We shall meet him again if we are faithful to the end. His old friend,

F. N. SWEENY.

WILMER A. (MIKE) WARD, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Ward, was born Sept. 24, 1905, and departed this life May 21, 1923. He joined the Methodist church when quite a child, and was a bright Christian boy. It was thought by some that he would be a preacher. He would have finished at our Mississippi Conference Training School at Montrose next term. After getting out of school he went to work, but got hurt, from which he died. Mike took heed to our Master's injunction, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and, like him, finished his work on earth while quite young. However, he lived longer in the kingdom here than many who live to old age; and his work was all constructive; he did not have to waste precious time trying to undo evil, like so many who live a life of sin before seeking God. If his young friends will follow his example in this they will do well. Mike leaves a host of friends and loved ones in this land of tears. Weep not as those who havo no hope. He cannot come to you, but you can go to him.

His Pastor,

M. R. JONES.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES IN ROME.'

By Rev. F. B. Hill.

Since sending you the last article on Methodism in Rome, at the beginning of June the Bible was publicly burnt in the square in front of the Church of Saint Maria della Navicella. It was a part of a sacred function, in which the clergy participated. The facade of the church was illuminated, and a big bonfire was lit. To quote the words of the Observatore Romano, the official newspaper of the Vatican: "There were thrown into the flames many licentious books, immoral periodicals, and Protestant Bibles which had been taken from the hands of the young. They were consumed in the fire to the honor of the Madonna."

We should be only too happy to believe that this was merely a sporadic incident; but, alas! we have to recognize that it is symptomatic of an attitude not new in the Romanist church, but not displayed of late for political reasons. The church is today sunning herself in the smiles of the Government and feels herself strong enough to show that the old feelings still move her.

This disgraceful auto de fe is an unseemly sequel to the recent visit most graciouly paid by the King of England to Rome. He is the official head of the British and Foreign Bible Society and of the Protestant Church, whose subjects reverence the Bible as a most sacred Book; yet this insult and outrage in the streets of Rome by priests of the Roman Church is defended by the Vatcan. One clerical paper says: "It is necessary that there should be an uprising of the masses of all the Catholic people of Rome to let the hated enemies of the Papacy and of Italy know, 'Further than this you shall not go.'"

One might fill columns with such quotations. In spite of it all, our preaching halls are being fillod and many are being born again. In England and America, Romanist propaganda is allowed the utmost freedom. Monasteries and convents, cathedrals and churches are built with the greatest liberty. Orators are allowed freedom of speech in the open air, which is being denied to Protestants in Italy. But the great Protestant nations must insist that if liberty of thought and acton is demanded by Romanists in England and America, it must not be denied to Protestants in Italy. Free and fair play is due to all.

THE OXFORD CAMP MEETING.

Dear Brother Carley: The fifty-second session of the Oxford Camp Meeting convenes Saturday before the first Sunday in August, and runs through a period of ten days. Indications are very flattering for a helpful, successful season from the standpoint of attendanco and spiritual interest. Every camp has been spoken for, and will be occupied by people who have the interest of God's kingdom at heart. If you have never visited the Oxford Camp Ground, you have missed a rare treat, and would stand amazed at its rustic beauty and charm and the simple elegance and genuino hospitality of its people.

Our hosts, Brothers L. M. Lipscomb and R. G. Lord; are in perfect harmony with the wholesome atmosphere of tho encampment, and are a blessing to any community, both in and out of the pulpit, and are indispensable as generals of righteousness wherever they move.

They have for this meeting secured the services of Dr. H. F. Tolle, of Capital Street, Jackson, as pulpit leader, and his reputation as a true friend of God and a blessing-dispenser precedes him. He brings his singer with him, and this fact, with the addition of good local help, assures this feature, which is always essential to a great meeting.

Messages by letter and otherwise inform us that many old friends from a distance are planning to attend and renew the Christian associations of other days. To these we extend a most hearty welcome, and take this opporunity to cordially includo all of of the ex-pastors of Oxford and Abbeville, and our own Brother Carley, whose sermons to us each week strengthen and hearten us greatly for the battles of life. Come with us, all of you, and we will do you good! and, in the words of another, assure you—

"There is room enough, Brethren room for us all,
Room in the greenwood, if not in the hall!"

We beg that each interested reader of these lines breathe a prayer to God that lasting good may result from this meeting in the birth of many souls into the kingdom and in the catching anew tho vision splendid of obedient service of those already enlisted therein.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

RICHLAND REVIVAL.

On Friday night, July 20, was closed one of the greatest revivals that was ever known in Richland. We had made preparation, through prayer, for our meeting, and then on July 15 our dear pastor, Rev. Julian Duncan, began the revival services. Brother Duncan is indeed a fisher of men and women, and, being so consecrated, God uses him to do big things in his name.

Our forces were well organized. The personal workers' band got some genuine pleasure from their work, and we never saw a junior choir enjoy singing the gospel more than ours here.

A very unusual feature of the meeting was that out of eight members on profession of their faith in Jesus Christ four were grown, three were fathers or mothers. The remaining four were twelve years old and older. Five were received by letter and renewal vows, making a total of thirteen.

We still rejoice over our blessings, and will strive to move forward to broader fields of labor in his name.

MRS. LINDQUIST TELLS WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did for Her

Kansas City, Mo.—"I was left in a very serious condition after childbirth and no one thought I could ever be any better. Then came the 'Change of Life' and I was not prepared for what I had to suffer. I had to go to bed at times to be perfectly quiet as I could not even stoop down to pick anything from the floor. I did not suffer any pain, but I was decidedly nervous and could not sleep. For nearly two years I was this way, and the doctor was frank enough to tell me that he could do no more for me. Shortly after this I happened to see in a newspaper an advertisement of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. In a few days the medicine was in the house and I had begun its use and I took it regularly until I was well. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to others when I have the opportunity."—Mrs. MAY LINDQUIST, 2814 Independence Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

THE PRODIGAL GIRL.

(Dedicated to the Memorial Home, New Orleans.)

By Rev. F. B. Hill.

We all have a heart for the prodigal boy
Who was caught in sin's mad whirl,
And we welcome him back with songs of joy;
But what of the prodigal girl?

For the prodigal boy there's an open door
And a father's bounteous fare;
And though he is wretched, sick, and poor,
He is sure of welcome there.

But what of the girl who has gone astray,
That has lost in the battle with sin?
Do we forgive in the same sweet way
As we have always forgiven him?

Does the door stand ajar, as if to say,
"Come, enter, you need not fear;
I've been open thus since you went away,
Now close to the second year?"

O Christ—it seems we have never learned
The lesson taught in the sand;
For even yet is the woman spurned
And stoned in a Christian land.

We all have a heart for the prodigal boy
Who was caught in sin's mad whirl,
And we welcome him back with songs of joy;
But what of the prodigal girl?

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

We had the pleasure and profit of teaching a class with Brother Beasley at Washington from July 15 to 22. In spite of the rain and politics and other things we had a good class and good attendance. I am hopeful that this will be a start for larger service and usefulness of the church in and to the community.

There is an unusually attractive number of young people; if they can be harnessed to the work of the kingdom it will mean a great future for them and the church. One young lady came for membership upon profession of faith. Many asked for prayer. God gave us some very precious services.

Brother Beasley has some choice people to serve. They were so kind and thoughtful to us and endeared themselves forever to me and the cause. Brother Beasley is doing good and faithful work.

Meridian was visited in the interest of the Standard Training School. We have launched the second school. I trust that it will be larger and better than last year, and from the start it seems it will. From reports heard the work moves well.

Vicksburg is to have a Standard Training School the last week in August, beginning Sunday the 26th. Won't the praying people pray that the Holy Spirit shall use this effort for a mighty victory for God at this time? This is a large undertaking for this district, and I am so anxious for God to get the glory as well as the victory.

We trust to have a course for Beginner teachers and Junior teachers in Story Telling. A course for Primary teachers in Organization and Administration; a course for pastors and superintendents in Organization and Administration of the Sunday School; a course for teachers, and all other church workers and interested parties in "The Methodist Church and its Work."

The following circuits are 100% on Sunday School Day offerings: Adams, 4 schools, $30; Barlow, 2 schools, $11.45; Bayou Pierre, 4 schools, $19.93; Fernwood, 3 schools, $41.51; Wesson, 2 schools, $16.30.

Hattiesburg District—Eucutta, 4 schools, $21.30; Prentiss, 4 schools, $21.05.

Jackson District—Brandon, 3 schools, $36; Harrisville, 4 schools, $12.95; Rankin Street, 2 schools, $16.87; Madison, 4 schools, $22.50; Terry, 4 schools, $22.25; Vaughn, 4 schools, $33.

Meridian District—Waynesboro circuit, 2 schools, $10.16.

Seashore District—Wiggins, 2 schools, $14.40.

Vicksburg District—Harriston, 3 schools, $16.60.

There are 82 schools that reported $558.37. None of these schools have been heard from as yet. If they would report the same offerings they reported last year we would have the largest Sunday School Day offering we have ever had.

Brother Hull is doing a fine work. The Lord is using and blessing him and his efforts. Please hold him to the throne in your prayers. He is willing and loyal.

Pray for all the work.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

THE SWORD TURNED UPON ONESELF.

The late John Lanahan, of the Baltimore Conference, a giant in his days, was accustomed to say: "Envy is a gun that kicks. It always harms the one that aims it more than the one at whom it is aimed." Deep meditation upon these words reveal in clear light their accuracy. Many can well bear testimony to their truthfulness in personal experience. The envious heart is a sordid nest. It produces misery and inconvenience, contracts vision and reach, and brings obloquy and defeat upon the one who indulges in the vile thing.—Washington Christian Advocate.

THE GRAVE SITUATION AT TUSKEGEE.

(By Special Request from Nashville.)

A situation which seriously threatens the welfare, not only of the Negro race in the South, but also the future of Christianity and our cherished civilization, has developed in connection with a Federal Hospital recently established in Tuskegee, Ala., for disabled Negro war veterans. Tuskegee Institute, an institution of world-wide fame, founded and controlled by Negroes since its very beginning, has in Tuskegee an investment of about ten million dollars. This institution gave four acres of land adjoining the Institute for the establishment of the Veterans' Hospital.

The controversy which now exists concerns the staffing of the Hospital, the question being shall the staff be all white, all Negro, or mixed white and Negro. An effort to secure a white staff by demonstrations seems to have as an aim the intimidation of the Negroes of Tuskegee Institute in order to influence the Government to concede to their demands.

On July 3 a group of masked men paraded the highway leading around the Institute. The Christian leadership of our Church has been strong in the denunciatoin of this demonstration of implied force against Tuskegee Institute, an institution which has always worked for peace and good will between the two races living side by side in the South. They feel that the present strife is striking at the very root of Christianity, and that it is jeopardizing the message of our missionaries in every foreign land where we seek to proclaim the gospel of Jesus Christ. In view of the gravity of the situation, the different agencies of the Church have spoken in protest as follows:

General Conference Commission on Social Service.

(Paper adopted by the Commission on Temperance and Social Service of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in session at Lake Junaluska July 1-7, 1923.)

Inasmuch as there has come to us, through newspaper reports and private sources of undoubted reliability, information that the interests of that great institution for our colored people at Tuskegee, Ala., are seriously menaced by threats of organized interference—

Resolved, That this Commission put on record our appreciation of the incalculable value of that institution for the training of our colored fellow-citizens and declare our unalterable conviction that any invasion, or threatened invasion, of its rights, or interference with the orderly pursuits of its lawful and benevolent labors, would be a calamity to the institution and a lasting disgrace to our civilization and people.

BISHOP JAMES CANNON, JR.,
Chairman.
DR. J. H. LIGHT, Secretary.
July 14, 1923.

Commission on Race Relations

The Race Commission of the Woman's Missionary Council of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has released the following statement concerning the recent threatened mob violence against Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala.

For many years Tuskegee Institute, a Negro institution in the heart of the South with an entire Negro administration, has stood for the best development of the Negro within his own race. Its marvelous achievements have attracted the attention and won the appreciation, not only of our own nation, but of other nations and peoples around the world. Its unique educational achievements have been acknowledged in educational conferences throughout the world. It has been cited as an outstanding demonstration that the Negro has an opportunity for achievement within the South.

Therefore, we register our strong moral protest against any act of intimidation or terrorism affecting this institution, realizing that such methods are considered by all Christian powers as foes to civilizatoin and orderly government.

Mass Meeting, Women in Attendance, Mt. Sequoyah, Ark., Assembly, Including Woman's Missionary Council Leaders.

Whereas, the women of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have for many years been vitally interested in the welfare and progress of the Negro race at home and abroad and have aided in establishing and maintaining religious, educational and social service institutions for the Christianizing of the Negro; and,

Whereas, it has been reported through the press and other reliable sources of information that Tuskegee institute, of Tuskegee, Ala., a Negro college which has always stood for the best development of the Negro race in the South, has been menaced in its welfare and activities by a lawless element in the State of Alabama; therefore—

Resolved, That the women attending the Western Methodist Assembly, Mount Sequoyah, Fayetteville, Ark., in mass meeting assembled, express our confidence in the aims and ideals of Tuskegee Institute and our appreciation of the great contribution it has made to the Negro race in America.

Resolved further, That we go on record as entering a vigorous protest against any act or influence calculated to injure the reputation, hinder the activities, or menace the existence of this worthy institution.

MRS. FRED LAMB, Chaiman.
MRS. JOHN S. TURNER,
Secretary.

July 14, 1923.

Executive Committee, Board of Missions, July 20, 1923.

We have learned with deep regret through the press and other trustworthy sources that the work of Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala., has been seriously jeopardized not only by threats, but by acts of intimidation.

Whereas, we are deeply concerned for all that looks to the intellectual, moral, and spiritual development of our colored citizens; and whereas, any interference with this great institution, for many years an outstanding example in our Southland and before all the world of what can be done by and for the Negro race, constitutes a blow at all like efforts; therefore—

Resolved, That this committee hereby records its earnest protest against any act or threat of intimidation or interference with the peaceful and orderly pursuit of the conspicuously useful work that this institution is doing and expresses its deliberate conviction that any such interference is not only unchristian and unpatriotic, but also a shameful contradiction of the best and noblest traditions of the South.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE EPWORTH LEAGUE.

We are still hearing from every corner of our Conference of the great things our Leaguers are doing as a result of the inspiration gotten at our second Assembly. Somehow when you meet a Leaguer any time or place the conversation turns to the Brookhaven 1923 Assembly. Old Chapters are taking on new life and new Chapters are being organized in almost every district. Miss Lilabec "Full-o-Pep" Phillips advises us that three new Chapters have been organized in the Meridian District since the Assembly. She also states that there is now a League Chapter in every pastoral charge in that district. And wants to ask "Who can beat that?" We don't know of another district who can equal it. If there is, speak up. Thirty of the fifty-three Chapters in this district are Senior Leagues. Mr. Ralph Hayes, we understand, has been re-appointed Secretary of the Meridian District. Ralph certainly has made a very efficient secretary and he and his assistants did great work last year. Judging from the start they are making, it seems they are determined to "repeat the dose."

Mr. Sharmon Phillips, who graduated at Millsaps the past year, called all the League volunteers together on July 17 for the purpose of orgnizing a Volunteer Band. This we understand is in connection with the Meridian City Union, which certainly is a very fine organization.

Miss Hoskin takes exception to what we said in our column as to her eating so often at the Assembly, but admits that although she has been putting in good time since, she has not been able to get enough to eat yet. Miss Hoskin writes us about a very fine picnic given by the Capitol Street Chapter, July 17. She says there was plenty to eat and drink and lots of fun, and states that she nearly got enough to eat, but that President Hawkins was there, and when she got to ice cream she discovered that Mr. Hawkins had eaten it all, while Mr. Hawkins claims that it was necessary for him to eat the cream because Miss Hoskin beat him to the sandwiches. However, those who were at the Assembly remember both Miss Hoskin and Mr. Hawkins, and we leave it to you to judge for yourselves.

Those Chapters who did not make an African Special Pledge at the Assembly are urged to make your pledge at the very earliest possible date and advise your District Secretary and the Commisioner of Missions the amount you pledge. Please let every Chapter pledge something.

We understand a very fine Chapter has been organized at Wiggins, Miss. Although we have not been furnished a report of it, we understand they have already made a pledge to the African Special. Brother Campbell is pastor at Wiggins. Those who were at the Assembly cannot help remembering him. We predict for Wiggins the Banner Chapter of the district under his leadership.

We have several letters from the different pastors who attended the Assembly, and because they are all so fine we expect to publish them for the benefit of those who were not permitted to attend. And the following is from the oldest and one of the best loved Leaguers in our Conference:

The Epworth Legue Assembly at Whitworth College.

It was beyond all question the gretest ever held by the Mississippi Conference Leaguers. There were two hundred and fifty in attendance. They were earnest seekers after truth. Besides the teachers and officers of our conference, Dr. J. A. Burrows, of Nashville, Tenn., and Bishop Dubose, of San Francisco, were present to lecture and preach; and their messages were great.

The interest in the matters studied in the various classes was so manifest and general that we who taught were thrilled immensely. There were about sixty attending the lectures in "Methodist Doctrine," delivered by the writer. They were boys and girls out of Junior Leagues, Senior League, preachers and others. Some of the youngest passed well the quiz at the close of the term and received well deserved certificates.

The most beautiful occurrence, however, marked the morning Vesper services, led generally by Leaguers, when the spiritual tide rose to most glorious heights, as fine young people gave themselves to definite Christian service, pledging themselves to go to any field to which God should call them, to Foreign or Home Mission field, saying by act or word:

"I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord.

"I'll do what you want me to do."

I have been connected with Epworth League work for more than twenty years, but I have never seen anything so inspiring and thrilling, so sweet and joyous, as I saw at Whitworth College, in June, 1923.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

Those District Secretaries who have already been appointed and whom we know of are: Meridian District, Ralph Hayes; Jackson District, Miss Emma Taylor Hoskin; Seashore District, O. J. Power; Vicksburg District, Wray Bowie; Hattiesburg District, B. F. Harrell (better known as Benjamin Franklin Hattiesburg Harrell). We will publish the names of the others as soon as they have been appointed. We should like to have the names of all assistant secretaries.

We understand the word has been passed around that Whitworth College will not be able to accommodate the Assembly next year. It is true we expect four hundred next year, but don't you stay home; Whitworth officials will make arrangements for you. And the city of Brookhaven has said to us that we should bring all we can get and they will see that we are taken care of. So make your arrangements to be there. We have learned that Brookhaven is "strong for us." But they may be assured that the Leaguers are just as "strong" for Brookhaven and Whitworth.

"Did Everything You Said It Would"

Mt. Pleasant, Utah, Box 151,
February 9, 1921.

Dear Mr. Brooks:—I am writing this letter to let you know that your Appliance has completely cured me of my rupture. I wore it for one year and it did everything that you said it would. I have recommended your Appliance to several of my friends for I am sure it would do them as much good as it has done me. If you wish to use my name for advertising you have my consent.

With Kindest Regards,

J. C. Christensen.

The Above is C. E. Brooks, Inventor of the Appliance. Mr. Brooks Cured Himself of Rupture Over 30 Years Ago, and Patented the Appliance From His Personal Experience. If Ruptured Write Today to the Brooks Appliance Co., Marshall, Mich.

Ten Reasons Why

You Should Send For Brooks Rupture Appliance

1. It is absolutely the only Appliance of the kind on the market today, and in it are embodied the principles that inventors have sought after for years.

2. The Appliance for retaining the rupture cannot be thrown out of position.

3. Being an air cushion of soft rubber it clings closely to the body, yet never blisters or causes irritation.

4. Unlike the ordinary so-called pads, used in other trusses, it is not cumbersome or ungainly.

5. It is small, soft and pliable and positively cannot be detected through the clothing.

7. There is nothing about it to get foul, and when it becomes soiled it can be washed without injuring it in the least.

8. There are no metal springs in the Appliance to torture one by cutting and bruising the flesh.

9. All of the material of which the Appliances are made is of the very best that money can buy, making it a durable and safe Appliance to wear.

10. We guarantee your comfort at all times and in all positions and sell every Appliance with this positive understanding.

BUY AT MOUNT SEQUOYAH.

Several fine lots have recently been sold at Mount Sequoyah. A summer cottage for three families is nearly finished. It belongs to Mr. Ward, of Fort Smith. Judging from inquiries the lots will sell rapidly this summer. Those who expect to buy should immediately correspond with Superintendent J. L. Bond and make selection. The lots are all desirably situated and are around the Assembly grounds, fronting on the drives. They have connection with water and sewer mains, and have every advantage of a lot in town with the altitude, scenery, and attractions of the Assembly. Friends are urged to buy now to secure the best locations and to help promote the Assembly. Every dollar put into the lots goes into improving the Assembly. Everything now indicates that there will not be enough lots to supply the demand when the Assembly is better known. Buy now and get what you want and help the enterprise, which Bishop Atkins has pronounced the greatest in possibilities west of the Mississippi.—Arkansas Methodist.

HANDS ACROSS THE SEA.

Through their Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations representing them in the World's Student Christian Federation, students of America are again providing funds for aiding thousands of their unfortunate fellow-students in Russia, Central Europe, and the Near East. Up to April, 514 schools and colleges had given to the current year's "Student Friendship Fund," and from outside sources $183,547 had been received. Besides these amounts, representatives of the Fund are administering in Russia a gift of $50,000 from Jewish students in America, given through the Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, and $10,000 given by the Baptists. For four months to come 30,000 students in Russia will be cared for, and many hundreds in Central Europe and the Near East are finishing their year's work because of the generosity of students in thirty-five different countries.

THE DEATH OF PRESIDENT HARDING.

The sudden and unexpected death of Warren Gamaliel Harding, President of the United States, at a hotel in San Francisco, at 7:30 o'clock on Thursday evening, August 2, was a shock such as the nation has seldom experienced. The President had been seriously ill, but he was making fair progress toward recovery, and his physicians held out the hope that he would soon be able to return to Washington to carry on his official duties. According to an official statement of the attending physicians, the death of the Chief Executive was not due primarily to his illness, but to a stroke of apoplexy, which came without warning and which might have occurred independently of his illness.

It is not within our province to undertake to give an anlysis of the character of the deceased President, or to attempt to point out the significant achievements of his administration; but we do feel constrained to join in the general sorrow occasioned by the passing of one of the most greatly beloved leaders the nation has known. In spite of the high position he occupied and in spite of the heavy responsibilities that rested upon him in these difficult times, he maintained and exhibited a friendliness and cordiality that greatly endeared him to those with whom he came into close contact. What he may have lacked in picturesque traits that characterized some of his predecessors was offset by his simple, unassuming manner and his straightforward adherence to the great principles of good government that make for the welfare of all the people. From every section of the country tributes of appreciation have been paid his memory and expressions of sorrow over his sudden taking away have been heard. It is a beautiful tribute to the great-heartedness of the American people that some of the most touching expressions of sorrow have come from the South, which is overwhelmingly of another political faith from that of the late President.

The accession to the Presidency of Calvin Coolidge, Vice President, brings into international prominence a man who is believed to possess the essential qualities of a great executive. The destinies of the nations are in God's hands—and we pray that His blessings may rest upon the new President of the United States.

GOOD PREACHING.

Ex-President Woodrow Wilson, in an article in the August number of the Atlantic Monthly, does some mighty good preaching, to which the world may well give heed at this time. Under the caption, "The Road Away from Revolution," the former President declares that spiritual redemption is the world's greatest need. He says: "The road that leads away from revolution is clearly marked, for it is defined by the nature of men and of organized society. It therefore behooves us to study very carefully and very candidly the exact nature of the task, and the means of its accomplishment. The sum of the whole matter is this, that our civilization cannot survive materially unless it is redeemed spiritually. Here is the final challenge to our churches, to our political organizations, and to our capitalists, to every one who fears God and loves his country."

The emergence of the spiritual seems to be clearly marked in the thinking to-day of all those who are able to grasp the world significance of events. Business men and professional men, as well as preachers and religious workers, are coming to see that apparent material prosperity is but a hollow mockery without a substantial foundation of morality and religion, only upon which can an enduring civilization be erected. They are not wrong in this day who are laying the emphasis upon religious activities and spiritual forces. The pessimists, cynics, materialists, infidels and atheists may still contend that God is far away; but profound thinkers are reverently declaring that the spiritual is the most real thing in the universe. Let him who "fears God or loves his country" take heed.

SCHOOL TIME IS COMING.

Almost before we know it, the time for our boys and girls to go to college will be at hand. Tremendous issues hang upon the choice of the school to which they will go. By all means, they should go, if at all possible, to an institution that is definitely and unreservedly committed to the inculcation of the Christian faith. As a rule, such institutions are under the auspices of the church. In Louisiana and Mississippi, parents have access to schools that are, in every way, worthy of their support. Centenary College and Mansfield Female College in Louisiana, and Millsaps College, Grenada College, Whitworth College, Port Gibson Female College, Seashore Camp Ground School, and the Mississippi Conference Training School in Mississippi afford opportunities and privileges that meet all requirements. Send the young people to college—and send them to our own institutions.

GOD BLESS THEM.

The simple, quiet, unassuming men and women who are striving day by day to live a genuinely religious life are the salt of the earth—God bless them! We were talking the other day with a man who is not especially known for his religious activities, but who has deep convictions and an earnest desire to do right. In speaking of his own life, he said, in effect, that his work brought him into contact with a great many men who are utterly irreligious and whose conception of their mission in life seems to be to get as much as they can and give as little as possible in exchange. Some of these men are his own employees, and he said that many a day he gets down on his knees and asks God to help him restrain his temper and his tongue in dealing with them, lest he bring repoach upon the faith he professes. This man is a member of the church, but he is on no official board, he is not connected with any of the organized activities of the church, he does not pray in public—he is just a plain layman who thinks seriously and acts conscientiously. There are thousands like him men and women who are never spoken of, or even thought of, as the leading Christians of the community; but they are the very backbone of all our churches. Again we say, God bless them!

THE RURAL CHURCH PROBLEM.

We are hearing a good deal nowadays about the rural church problem. Articles on the subject frequently appear in the church press, summer schools are held for the benefit of rural pastors, and the topic is almost certain to be discussed in any gathering of church workers. We do not profess to know more about the subject than anybody else, but we think we can suggest the quickest solution of the problem. When an inexperienced, untrained man is put in charge of a country charge with from four to six appointments, upon a salary of from $600 to $1,000, out of which he is to support his family, meet all the expenses incident to his position in the community, and buy the books and periodicals he ought to have, it is pretty certain that the "rural problem" in his case is not going to be solved. Anyway, the rural church is turning out some pretty good material every year. Most of our preachers—even those who have attained "high-steeple" rank—came from the country.

WORTHLESS MONEY.

It seems that the German people are now trying to do business with a currency that is practically worthless. The mark note has become so depreciated that 5,000 of them are worth less than one cent. The banks are unable to furnish change for a ten-dollar bill. A special group of waiters in the hotels and restaurants are assigned the duty of figuring the amount of each customer's bill—the charges run into millions of marks. This German money is worthless because it will buy practically nothing; some American money is worthless because of what it does buy.

NOT THE QUESTION NOW.

We read the other day a rather lengthy article under the heading, "Where the Cold Waves Come From." It was interesting, to be sure; but what we should like somebody to do is to tell us where these hot waves come from, and why. We are in perfect sympathy with the colored brother who, on a bleak February day, exclaimed, "Look a here, win', whar was you las' Augus'?"

FUNDAMENTALS OF METHODISM: ARTICLE III.

A Gracious Experience of Personal Salvation.

By Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

I propose writing in the present communication about that gracious experience of personal salvation out of which Methodism originally sprang and to which Methodism bears witness the world over. I am doing this because of the joy I have in bearing testimony to my own faith and in order to draw the thought of my brethren back to the viewpoint of Wesley and the early Methodists. For the most essential thing in Methodism is a personal experience of salvation. To preach the great doctrines of personal experience and to bear glad testimony to salvation from sin—it was for this that God raised up the Methodists.

Let no one suppose that we Methodists are indifferent to matters touching fundamental orthodoxy. Throughout all our history the trumpet we have sounded has given forth no uncertain sound. However, our Methodist way of approaching the whole matter of orthodoxy has from the very beginning been quite different from that usually followed. The unusual method of those who "contend for the faith" has been to write down intellectual propositions, to draw up long articles of belief, and by threat of excommunication insist that they must be accepted. This method of intellectualism Methodism has never followed. The historic position of Methodism is not that you make men Christians by first making them orthodox, but that if you can succeed in getting people converted and can lead them on to deeper experience of divine grace you will keep them sound in the faith.

And the things I am saying to the church are said because I am interested in keeping Methodism true to her early experience and her apostolic testimony. I do not believe that this can be done by dogmatism and denunciation. I know that it can be done by calling sinners to repentance, by living a Christian life, and by exhorting our people to go on to perfection. I could easily load this paper down with quotations to show that this is the position of the fathers and founders of our great church. Take just one quotation from Dr. Abel Stevens:

> "Methodism reversed the usual policy of religious sects which seek to preserve their spiritual life by their orthodoxy, it maintained its orthodoxy by its spiritual life, and it presents to the theological world the anomalous spectacle of a widespread church which for more than a hundred years has had no serious disturbance from heresy. Wesley seems to have perceived that unnecessary discriminative theological requirements of opinions are the most effectual means of provoking heterodoxy into existence by challenging the doubts or curiosity of speculative minds, that the continual scenting out of heresy by the church is the surest means of producing it, as the persecution of doubtful opinions has usually strengthened and spread them. ('History of Methodism,' Vol. II, page 445.)"

Let us recall, then, that epoch-making experience out of which came Methodism. Many circumstances had led up to that hour in Wesley's experience. The influences of the parsonage at Epworth, the life spent at Oxford, the humbling and chastening effect of his experience in Georgia—all these brought him to that culminating hour. In language which has become classic in Methodist circles Wesley describes what happened at the prayer meeting in Aldersgate Street:

> "About a quarter before nine, while one was describing the change which God works in the heart through faith in Christ, I felt my heart strangely warmed. I felt I did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for salvation, and an assurance was given me that he had taken away my sins, even mine, and saved me from the law of sin and death. I began to pray with all my might for those who had in a special manner despitefully used me and persecuted me. I then testified openly to all there what I now first felt in my heart."

John Wesley was not alone in this experience. Whitefield had entered into a conscious experience of divine grace. Charles Wesley had also found the peace and joy which come from personal trust in Christ. Presently numbers of others had found the "pearl of great price." And in a little while there came from God the greatest revival of evangelical religion the world had ever seen. Out of this came Methodism and the Methodist Church.

Methodism, then, is emphatically the religion of Christian experience. As everybody knows, among the doctrinal standards of Methodism are reckoned Wesley's "Notes on the New Testament" and Wesley's "Standard Sermons," these all written to explain and expound the doctrines of Christian experience. What, then, are the doctrines which from the first have been considered of central importance in Methodism? They are the following: (7) The Universality of the Atonement, (2) Salvation through Faith in Jesus Christ, (3) The Witness of the Spirit, and (4) The Possibility of Christian Perfection.

1. The Universality of the Atonement.

From his college days Wesley had believed in the universality of the atonement. He held to the faith which he had received from his wise mother that "the doctrine of predestination as maintained by the rigid Calvinists is very shocking and ought to be abhorred because it directly charges the most high God with being the author of sin." But in the glowing experience of Wesley and those associated with him this truth that Christ died for all men took fire. It became something more than a doctrine handed down from the fathers and held by the intellect as a truth made necessary by the character of God. It became a fact of experience. They themselves had been redeemed. The worst men that they knew were being saved by the power of Christ. None were so lost but Christ could find them and bring them back to the Father's house. And so, to quote Green, the historian of the English people: "Their voice was soon heard in the wildest and most barbarous corners of the land, among the bleak moors of Northumberland, in the dens of London, or in the long galleries where in the pauses of his labor the Cornish miner listens to the sobbing of the sea."

And it was not long before revival fires were kindled on this side of the Atlantic. What Wesley and his associates did in England, Francis Asbury and his coajutors did here in the wilds of America. And they did even more, for their hardships were incomparably greater. Among all those early heroes, Jesse Lee, of Virginia, stands out as easily one of the first. It was he who carried the gospel of Methodism into Calvinistic New England. They would not let him preach his Methodist "heresy" of the love of God to all mankind in their churches. So, like Wesley before him, he took to the open fields. When he came to Boston, he found a table, and, placing it under an elm tree, he began to sing:

"Come, sinners, to the gospel feast;
Let every soul be Jesus' guest;
Ye need not one be left behind,
For God hath bidden all mankind.

"Sent by my Lord, on you I call;
The invitation is to all:
Come, all the world! come, sinner, thou!
All things in Christ are ready now."

This is the gospel which did more than any other one thing to lay the foundations of Christian civilization in this New World. It is a blessed gospel we preach, and a glorious inheritance of faith and heroic service is ours. But what does it all amount to if we do not do our utmost and our best to follow in the steps of our fathers and give the gospel to the lost men and women of our cities, our towns, and our rural districts? The compulsion of a great message is upon us. We must be missionary or we are not Methodists.

God pity us if, sent as we are upon a great mission, we fall out among ourselves by the way and take to disputing about things which are not essential to the gospel and have no relation to the great facts of Christian experience and life!

2. Salvation through Faith in Jesus Christ.

All his life long, until he felt his heart "strangely warmed," Wesley had been on the wrong track. He had tried almost everything—sacramentarianism, asceticism, reliance on good works—and all in vain. Then and there he discovered for himself what it was to trust in Christ, Christ alone for salvation. And this is how Wesley describes the faith that saves:

> "It is not an opinion or any number of opinions put together, be they ever so true. A string of opinions is no more Christian faith than a string of beads is Christian holiness. The faith by which the promise is attained is a power wrought by the Almighty in an immortal spirit inhabiting a house of clay to see through that veil into the world of spirits, into things invisible and eternal. . . . It is the ear of the soul whereby the sinner hears the voice of the Son of God and lives, the palate of the soul (if the expression may be allowed) whereby the believer 'tastes the good word of God and the powers of the world to come,' the feeling of the soul whereby 'through the power of the Highest overshadowing him' he perceives the presence of Him in whom he lives and moves and has his being and feels the love of God shed abroad in his heart. It is the internal evidence of Christianity, a perpetual revelation, equally strong, equally new, through all the centuries which have elapsed since the incarnation and passing now, even as it has done from the beginning, directly from God into the believing soul."

Concerning this description of faith, Coleridge is quoted as saying: "I venture to avow it as my conviction that either Christian faith is what Wesley here describes or there is no proper meaning in the word."

Let us rejoice that there are many of us who know from personal experience that "a string of opinions is no more Christian faith than a string of beads is Christian holiness." We have found out for ourselves that saving faith is an intensely personal affair. It is a relation between souls, between my soul and the living Christ. It is like forming a new friendship. It is like falling in love. We have formed a new friendship with Him who is the sinner's Friend. We have fallen in love with Him who loves us and gave himself up for us. The trust we have in Him is like the trust a child has in his father.

My exhortation to all Methodists who have entered into the experience described above is this: Do not let the clamor of confused and confusing voices make you timid or afraid. If you have come in touch with reality, if you have learned to distinguish the things that differ, the essential from the non-essential, then tell it out to all the world. Speak out the things which you have found out for yourself. Dare to be a witness to the reality and power of that living faith which never mistakes the husk for the kernel and which never confuses the changing form with the abiding reality.

3. The Witness of the Spirit.

Possibly more than any other Christian denomination has Methodism preached this doctrine. God has enabled Methodism through all these years to testify with St. Paul: "The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." Methodists around the world unite in singing:

> "My God is reconciled;
> His pardoning voice I hear;
> He owns me for his child,
> I can no longer fear:
> With confidence I now draw nigh,
> And, 'Father, Abba, Father,' cry."

What gave special form and expression to this doctrine was the deistic philosophy which was prevalent in the eighteenth century and the personal experience of Wesley and the people called Methodists in reaction against that form of skepticism.

Deism was the doctrine of an absentee God. It taught that God had once done something but that he could not do anything any more. He had once created the world and ordained certain laws. Then he had left the world to the running of these laws just as a watchmaker, to use the favorite illustration of the eighteenth century, might make a watch and wind it up to run of itself. God was not present in history; there could be no such thing as personal providence over human lives; there could not possibly be any such thing as revelation, since God could not speak to men; God could not come in touch with the human soul; men could not possibly have present and personal knowledge of God. God had given men the light of human reason. By this light they could discover that God exists, that he had ordained certain laws of morality, and that the soul is immortal. That was enough; man needed no more. Such in brief was the philosophy of the eighteenth century. And it was everywhere triumphant; practically all preachers and teachers had come under the influence of it. It weighed heavily upon them like the pressure of the atmosphere. They could not escape from it. And I may add that this is the philosophy of many people today. Indeed, in some of its forms it still passes itself off as orthodox theology. Religion in Wesley's century was, therefore, a cold and dead affair. It had neither life nor enthusiasm in it.

On the intellectual side Bishop Butler did a work without parallel when he wrote his "Analogy." It is a mistake to underestimate the influence of that notable book on the religious and philosophical thought of the century. But it is simple truth to say that it was not Butler's "Analogy" and the writings of other thinkers that destroyed deism. It was the Methodist Revival that did the work. It was not reason that overturned that philosophical system; it was experience. Deism was silent in the face of the facts of Christian experience. The answer of Methodism to the doubts and denials of the deists was just this: God is not absent but present. Here he is now, moving mightily in the hearts and lives of men and working powerfully in human society. God does speak to men, for God has spoken to us. "The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." Methodism was a movement that came from God; it was a gracious dispensation of Divine Providence; it was an invasion out of the other world. When one reads Wesley's Journal, one finds himself in the atmosphere of the New Testament. The supernatural was revealed in the hearts of men and before their very eyes.

4. The Possibility of Christian Perfection.

We will let John Wesley say exactly what Methodism means by this doctrine. He writes: "I mean loving God with all our heart and our neighbor as ourselves. I pin all its opposers to this definition. No evasion. No shifting the question." A short while before he died Wesley said: "This doctrine of full salvation is the grand depositum which God has lodged with the people called Methodists, and for the sake of propagating this chiefly he appears to have raised them up."

Now, as everybody knows, this doctrine has been the cause of much difference of opinion among Methodists. In recent years it came near creating a schism in the church. In consequence one seldom hears "entire sanctification" mentioned from our pulpits nowadays. It is my own opinion that the time has now come when, with the heat of controversy behind us, in the light of New Testament teaching, and with the assistance of a more adequate psychology than our fathers had, we are prepared to restate our great teaching concerning the possibility of Christian perfection and to proclaim it to all the world.

That the New Testament teaches a doctrine of perfect love is as clear as anything can be. That the early Methodists taught such a doctrine and that through their preaching many men and women were lifted from the lowlands to the sunlit plains is also as certain as anything can be. It is believed that in the light of modern psychology the doctrine of Christian perfection can find a restatement which will commend it to all thoughtful and aspiring souls. Our present-day psychologists have much to say about "the divided self" and "the unified personality." Now, the end of all religion and of all Christian education, so far as personal salvation is concerned, is to enable one to say: "This is one thing I do; this one thing I am." This process of unification begins in conversion. Perfect love completes it. What our modern psychologists mean by "the unification of the personality" exactly that Wesley meant by Christian perfection, and exactly this the New Testament means also. Here, then, is an experience to be sought after! Here is an attainment to be reached this side of death. For so far as the teachings of the New Testament guide us and so far as experience leads us there is no reason why as a result of full consecration and perfect faith one may not attain it in one supreme and glorious moment.

It is interesting to know that Wesley did not himself profess it. To one who had objected to the doctrine Mr. Wesley wrote: "I tell you flat, I have not attained the character I draw." The nearest he is known to have come to professing it was when to the question whether he had ever experienced the blessing of perfect love he replied by quoting Charles Wesley's hymn:

> "Jesus, confirm my heart's desire,
> To work, and speak, and think, for thee;
> Still let me guard the holy fire,
> And still stir up thy gift in me;
>
> "Ready for all thy perfect will,
> My acts of faith and love repeat,
> Till death thy endless mercies seal,
> And make the sacrifice complete."

If the present writer be asked, "What have you to say concerning your own experience?" I reply: "Not as though I had already attained. . . . but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth into those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." And I will add this also: In the providence of God he broke me in pieces like a potter's vessel and made "another vessel as seemed good to the potter to make it." Temptations which once were fierce are fierce no longer. Certain battles which once occupied a great part of the field of life have now passed to a large degree out of sight, having rolled on down beneath the horizon where sometimes I hear the distant sound of artillery and the retreating steps of a defeated foe. There have come to me a deeper appreciation of the things that really matter and a larger indifference to things, whether of creed or of practice, that make no difference to the Christian life. A deep and abiding sense of certainty touching the things of the spirit has brought me a peace which once I did not have. I am ashamed beyond measure that my Christian experience is still so poor and my attainments in divine grace so small. But I am able to make Andrew Rykman's prayer my own:

> "Other lips may well be bold;
> Like the publican of old,
> I can only urge the plea:
> 'Lord, be merciful to me.'
> . . . . . . .
> If I may not, sin defiled
> Claim my birthright as a child,
> Suffer it that I to thee
> As an hired servant be:
> Let the lowliest task be mine,

The most fundamental [illegible] then, is a [illegible] tion. Nothing [illegible] just now, and I think [illegible] God, than a fresh [illegible] a fresh quickening of [illegible] ence. Let our beloved [illegible] the experience and [illegible] What does Dr. Stevens say [illegible] the great passage already quoted [illegible] of Methodism" "In this [illegible] to Methodism's insistence [illegible] and a holy life rather than on [illegible] "Methodism may [illegible] religious world and [illegible]

And I [illegible] it this present agitation [illegible] heresy, in which [illegible] logical questions that [illegible] centuries and preachers [illegible] tists while [illegible] matters they [illegible] little about the Bible and [illegible] ophy join in and [illegible] I am greatly afraid that [illegible] to stop this agitation [illegible] into the camp of the "liberalists" [illegible] be driven into actual infidelity. And I [illegible] that if we Methodists will [illegible] standards and our own [illegible] what Methodism is and [illegible] Methodism the [illegible] opportunity that ever [illegible] history. Proclaim the gospel, and the Holy Spirit will [illegible] method: "By the [illegible] commending ourselves to [illegible] man's [illegible] in the sight of God." When the truth is proclaimed, it takes hold of the [illegible] man. The Methodist gospel of [illegible] ence is the [illegible] for all men. ## LOUISIANA CONFEREENCE.

Alexandria District Notes.

Rev. O. W. Bradley, of Alexandria, and Rev. C. K. Smith, of Pineville, left on July 31, with their families, in their cars for Mount Sequoyah. They expect to be gone for several weeks and have provided for the filling of their pulpits while away. Rev. O. W. Bradley has recently had an operation for the removal of tonsils and the doctor advises that he not preach for several weeks.

Attendance at church services in Alexandria has been fine for the hot summer weather. Rev. E. C. Gunn, who was attending the encampment of the Louisiana National Guard, preached at the evening hour in Alexandria on July 22.

* * *

Financial conditions at Opelousas are in good shape. This charge has lost some of its very best members recently. Rev. S. L. Riggs and his people are doing a good work here.

* * *

Progress is satisfactory on the new church at Coushatta. The pastor reports that it is going forward well.

* * *

During this present week Rev. Louis Hoffpauir is assisting Rev. H. W. Rickey in a meeting at Oak Grove, a country church near Natchitoches attached to Natchitoches as an afternoon appointment.

* * *

Rev. W. W. Perry, of the Rochelle charge, reports most successful revival meetings that have added a large number to the church on his charge. Brother Perry has been giving attention to some points about him that have been without preaching. The family of Brother Perry have recently been afflicted with a siege of the measles.

Shreveport District Notes.

Our new church at Logansport has been completed, with only a small indebtedness to be carried. It is a beautiful structure, and well planned for modern Sunday school work.

* * *

The meeting in Mooringsport, of which mention was previously made, resulted in thirty-four accessions to the church. Free transportation is provided by the Mooringsport Sunday school for pupils who live at a distance.

* * *

Dr. H. F. Brooks and Dr. R. E. Smith assisted Brother Neill in a meeting at Belcher that was very beneficial to the church. The churches of the Belcher charge are seriously considering the building of a new parsonage in the near future.

* * *

In the absence of the presiding elder, Rev. W. F. Henderson, Sr., preached and presided on the occasion of the recent quarterly conference of Longstreet and Keatchie charge, held at Bethel church. Dr. H. F. Brooks recently assisted the pastor in a successful meeting at Keatchie.

* * *

Brother Akin, of Ida charge, reports a very successful revival service at Hosston, resulting in thirteen accessions to the church. In this meeting he was assisted by Rev. D. L. Griffin. At Ida the meeting, begun with bright prospects, was interrupted by illness in the family of Brother St. John, which called him away. At Munnerlyn's Chapel, on Ida charge, a meeting is in progress, in which Rev. George D. Anders was expected to assist.

* * *

The third quarterly conference of the six churches of Shreveport, including Cedar Grove and Bossier City, will be held in joint session at First Church Friday evening, July 27.

Texas Avenue and Mangum Memorial churches will conduct a revival meeting under a large tent Aug. 12-Sept. 3. Rev. George Tucker, evangelist, who successfully held a meeting in Shreveport in 1921, will again lead in these services. The other Methodist churches in Shreveport will co-operate.

The death of Rev. J. M. Brown has brought sadness to our hearts. He lived, during these last years, with his son and daughters in Belcher. He was a preacher of the gospel for sixty-three years and a noble Christian man. The funeral service was in charge of the pastor, Rev. A. S. J. Neill, and was conducted in the Belcher church, the interment taking place in Forest Park Cemetery, Shreveport. The following brethren participated in the service: Dr. Briscoe Carter, Rev. W. W. Holmes, Rev. S. J. Davies, Rev. J. O. Bennett, and Rev. B. T. Crews.

* * *

One of our strong Shreveport laymen, Mr. F. M. Ragsdale, of First Church, has been critically ill.

* * *

Rev. B. T. Crews preached the Old Folks' sermon at Texas Avenue Church Sunday, July 15.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Aberdeen District.

The "Bob" Jones revival at Houston closed Sunday night, July 22. It was a great revival, reaching, to a large degree, the whole county. It is reported that about three hundred people were converted, and there was a general "toning up" of the citizenship of the county.

* * *

A fine revival, conducted by the pastor, assisted by Rev. J. O. Haines, of Birmingham, Ala., closed at Pontotoc on Sunday night, July 29. A large number were saved, and the church was thoroughly revived. So Brothers McKeithen at Houston, and Mounger at Pontotoc are happy in the midst of a most prosperous year.

* * *

Brother Lawhorn, our pastor at Matheston, has just closed a fine meeting at that place. He was assisted by Brother Driskell, of Buena Vista, who assisted in the meeting for the first five days, then the pastor did the preaching for five days. The church was completely revived and eight people united with the church upon profession of faith. Brother Lawhorn is doing a fine work on that circuit.

* * *

Rev. W. L. Atkins, our energetic and most efficient pastor on the Algoma circuit, has been on the sick list for a week, but is improving now and will be at his work again in a few days.

* * *

A revival meeting will be started at Okolona on the first Sunday in September, conducted by the pastor, Rev. E. H. Cunningham, assisted by Evangelist Dan Kelly. A great meeting is expected.

* * *

Practically all the circuit pastors are in the midst of their revivals, and reports that reach me lead me to believe that this is to be our banner year in revivals throughout the district.

I am about to finish the "third round," and I have seen evidences of progress in many places. Now for the last and best round. We crave the help of everybody to make this a 100% year.

SARDIS DISTRICT.

An Open Letter to the Pastors and Officials.

To the Pastors and Members of Official Boards of the Churches of the Sardis District, North Mississippi Conference.

My Dear Brethren and Co-Workers: Early in September, we shall begin the last lap of our work for this Confreence year 1922-3. In just a fey months more our record for the year will be written. After it is written, we shall not be able to change the least item, no matter how much we may regret what has or has not been done. Personally, I cannot be satisfied with the record that we are together writing, except upon the ground that both you and I have done our dead level best as God's stewards. I believe that you feel the same way about our Master's work committed to your hands, hence this letter.

At Conference, Bishop Ainsworth will have put upon a blackboard (so that he who runneth may read) the record that we have this year made. It will look us in the face and declare in a loud voice just what we have or have not done with the great trust which God and the church committed to our hands for the year 1922-3. The trust committed to us is a sacred one that should stir us to the greatest efforts possible in behalf of the extension of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ.

What we have done concerning the following interests will be displayed upon the blackboard: 1. Additions on profession of faith; 2. Pastor's salary, whether or not paid in full; 3. Presiding elder's salary, whether or not paid in full; 4. Benevolences, whether or not paid in full; 5. Centenary, how much paid; 6. Education, how much paid. Our record on six great interests of our church will be read by God and man, as your pastor and presiding elder make their reports upon the Conference floor at Greenville in November. I am sure that every official member of the Sardis District is interested to see that our district stands out with level columns on each of these great interests of the church. I know the stewards will see to it that their pastors' and presiding elder's salaries are paid in full. I appreciate more than words can express their loyalty along that line. However, I am interested in having the official Boards of each church get behind every interest of our great church with their pastors and see to it that no interest of Christ's Kingdom lags behind. If we do our duty, the next few weeks of this Conference year are going to be strenuous days for all of us. I shall not expect you to work while I play; therefore, I shall be out over the district almost constantly, in behalf of the great interests of the church.

I am confidently expecting each pastor and layman to give himself earnestly, prayerfully and devotedly to the proper winding up of the year's business, so that we may go to Greenville with a record of which we may be proud before God.

With all good wishes and praying God's blessing upon your and yours, I am

Your brother and co-worker,

J. TILLERY LEWIS, P. E.

A NOTABLE SERVICE AT LELAND, MISS.

A letter, then a telegram, gave me notice to attend the service Wednesday morning, Aug. 1, 1923, at the Leland, Miss., Methodist Church. I conferred not with any conflicting interest and made haste to get the place designated. The thoughtful pastor had arranged for an informal exercise in honor of the going out of Dr. W. B. Lewis and family to Africa as a medical missionary. There were songs, Scripture lesson, prayers, and talks. Brother T. E. Gregory was very happy, and his spirit flowed through his words as he spoke of his answered prayers for God to call workers from this church, give a great revival, and a new church. His faith has been rewarded in two parts, and the old church has been rolled aside to let the new building be started.

Very interesting talks were made on various phases of the work of missionaries by Dr. E. H. Berry; Mr. Alfred Stone; Rev. W. H. Morgan, pastor of the Baptist Church; "Sunshine" Hawks, for the Presbyterian Church; Mr. J. T. Mathis, Sunday school superintendent, and Ben P. Jaco. Then came the clear, courageous words of both Dr. Lewis and his wife. In humility a definite call from God for this service was declared. So, not only shall our State have the benefit of the consecrated labors of this large connection of ministers and laymen, but another continent shall participate with us. God bless all the Lewises!

The congregation lingered, for the Holy Spirit was there to warm human hearts. So Leland joins that long list of churches following Antioch in praying and having the Holy Spirit to separate workers for other fields. Let Leland cultivate the presence and voice of the Holy Ghost, and rich will their church life be. It was good to be there.

BEN. P. JACO, Missionary Secretary.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES—LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Christian Education Movement will have the right of way from August to December. This ought to be a period of cultivation, inspiration and dissemination.

The Christian Education Committee in every church can secure interesting tracts for distribution. Possibly your preacher did not send in your name, so write to us for this literature to pass on to the people.

The local church that has no interest in Christian Education will soon die out. This accounts for the number of lifeless, aimless and headless organizations encumbering the earth. It is time for the trumpet to sound and usher in a resurrection of the dry bones.

The question of the ethics of a pledge constantly arises in our church affairs. God wants us to be honest first, last and always in meeting our obligations. A dishonest Christian is no credit to Christianity, no matter how eloquently he may preach, nor how generously he may give, nor how zealously he may labor. Honesty is better than popularity, wealth or success. Honesty is not only most pleasing to God, but common honesty is the best for us. It pays the largest dividends in the long run. It is like granite that stands the test when the strain comes. It has dignity, grandeur and influence. One mission of the Gospel of Christian Education is to people the world with honest men and women. Honesty will not save you, but you are not saved until you are honest.

For the last five years the voice of Europe has been calling to America for help. Cynical recipients of that message have said the call was for American dollars. But recent investigations show that continental Europe is imbibing the spirit of America with all the eagnerness and enthusiasm of converts to a new religion. It is a challenge to our country to produce the best type of manhood and educate the rising generation for world leadership in Christian service to humanity. Our colleges have the responsibility for producing this high type of leadership.

ALERT S. LUTZ.
Conference Secretary of Educatoin.

THE RELOCATION OF THE TRAINING SCHOOL, AGAIN.

By Bishop W. F. McMurry.

Information reached me about July 7 that the President of the Board of Missions had been requested to call a special meeting of the Board on Aug. 9, to act upon the proposition to relocate the Training School. It appears now that the President of the Board did not believe that a meeting called, after the manner proposed by the "Chairman of the Committee," would be legal, and, therefore, declined to call it.

A communication was sent to the members of the Board of Misions, under date of July 11, signed by "Edwin D. Mouzon, Chairman of the Joint Committee," containing a blank form to be used in requesting Mr. Perry S. Rader, President of the Board, to call a special meeting of the Board of Missions on Sept. 12, "to consider plans for relocation, both as to place and relation of other institutions of learning," of the Training School. Among other reasons suggested for requesting the President to call the special meeting is the following:

These young ladies have had two years of work in the Department of Religious Education, Grenada College, Grenada, Miss. They are working this summer, under the direction of the Sunday School Board of the North Mississippi Conference, in teaching training classes and helping to organize departmental Sunday schools. They are (left to right) Hazel Holley, Kate Payne Owens, Ernestine Barnes, Virginia Thomas, Amy Lyles, Martha DuBerry, Edna Lock, Rubye West.

"In this judgment, the Secretaries of the Board concur."

It now appears that the "Chairman of the Joint Committee" had been misinformed.

In less than an hour after receiving the communication, two secretaries of the Board came into my office and both said they did not "concur," and would vote against the call of the meeting proposed. I communicated this fact to the "Chairman of the Joint Committee," and under date of July 18 he sent out a letter correcting the statement appearing in his first communication, and quoted above, saying:

> "I was not aware of the fact that two secretaries of the Board, namely, Drs. R. L. Russell and J. W. Perry, did not concur in that judgment."

A few days ago it was my pleasure, in St. Louis, Mo., to have a conversation with two of the secretaries for Woman's Work. These ladies insist that there is but one place within the bounds of our church to locate the new Training School, and that is at Nashville, Tenn., near by a well-known institution of learning. In a very illuminating and straightforward way they gave me their reasons for this conviction. I said to them, as I said in writing to Mrs. F. F. Stephens, the President of the Woman's Missionary Council, and to Miss Mabel K. Howell, Secretary of Oriental Fields, under date of May 11:

> "It is my judgment that the proposition in detail should now be given to the church through the church press, thus anticipating objections at any point on the part of the church at large. When information is given in detail as to a proposal of this sort opportunity is afforded to register objections, and failing to do that, opposition to the proposition is neutralized. We can only accomplish the larger good by having the support of the whole church, etc."

This has not been done, and it is now proposed to hold a special meeting of the Board of Missions in Nashville on Sept. 12.

Why this haste? Let the advocates of the relocation of the Training School set forth in the church press their reasons for so doing. If they are agreed that there is only one location, let it be named and let the reasons for going to that place be given.

Why seek to bring the Board together at a heavy expense and without having given to the members of the Board in advance of the meeting a single fact for consideration? It is doubtful if anything like a full meeting can be secured. Certainly the Bishops in charge of the Foreign Fields cannot be there. We need them in determining so vital a matter.

I sincerely hope no special meeting will be held on Sept. 12. We should take time to consider the proposal from every angle, and after due deliberation and careful consideration of all the facts, meet in annual session next April and determine the whole matter once for all; and having determined it, unite in making the greatest Missionary Training School in the South.

MOW MANY TAKE CHURCH PAPERS?

Editor Wareing, of the Western Christian Advocate, has delved deep into church newspaper statistics. He finds that in his own church—the Methodist Episcopal—one member in every fourteen subscribes to a denominational weekly paper. In the Southern Methodist fellowship the ratio is one point better—one in thirteen. But Presbyterians are either poorer readers or else they don't like religious weeklies, for the proportion among them (taking North and South together) is one in seventeen. The Lutherans are on the same basis exactly. But the most creditable record does not lie even with the Methodists; it belongs to the Disciples, among whom one in every nine members pays money for a church paper, and (best of all) to the Evangelical people, where the total church membership is less than six times the combined subscription lists of church journals. The worst off are the papers representing Episcopalianism, which command the patronage of only one in forty-four among the members of their churches.—Continent.

Just as the automobile has brought greater congestion in downtown sections of cities, so the radio will tend to scatter people into small units in their homes.—Selected.

THE FEMALE OF THE SPECIES.

By One of Them.

Ever since Biblical days when Martha stayed in the kitchen and took liberal doses of hard work while Mary sat in the parlor and entertained the guests it has been the lot of many Marthas to do the drudgery and bear the brunt of things in this world.

A new movie house, wishing to do a clever piece of advertising, secured a picture called "What's the Matter with Mary?" and through the papers a general invitation was issued to every person by that name to attend the show as a guest of the company.

Since my name was Martha instead of Mary, it set me to thinking that there must always be some Marthas in every calling in life, somebody who will stay by the stuff and make fifty cents cover a dollars' needs. There must be Marys and Marthas enough for every job.

When I set out hand in hand with my young preacher husband, I wondered if I could measure up to all the expectations of a critical congregation. After forty years of itinerating I believe I can substantiate the claim that I made good. I am now a graduate of the highest college of parsonage experience, besides having a postgraduate diploma in the art of making a dollar stretch out like the rubbers on a boy's bean shooter. I am entirely familiar with the ups and downs of the ministry which in parsonage parlance means keeping appearances up and expenses down.

Recently our church papers have printed much about the "forgotten man," and I'm glad the subject is receiving long overdue consideration; but I find myself asking: "What about the 'forgotten woman'?" She who stayed at home on scant fare and minded the stuff while her good husband went over the circuit getting three square meals a day. Yes, what about her? What about the Martha who not only reared a large family of children and did all her housework, but was president of the Woman's Missionary Society, teacher of a Sunday school class, superintendent of the Devotional Department of the Epworth League, corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U., treasurer of the local fund of Circle Number Four, and the Lord knows what else.

I have often felt that the women in the church "put off" on the willing preacher's wife. They expect her to read the Scripture lesson, lead the prayer, play the organ, and do the shouting if she can find time. This often leads to many of the women taking a secret course in back-sliding; but this would make another story, and I must not sidetrack.

A country minister has precious little time for his family, and his wife has too many demands on her time to allow her to give her children the attention and training they need. So when their boys slip off and go swimming with the crowd on Sunday, it is heralded over the circuit that "the preacher has the worst children in the country."

In my young days when my husband rode the circuit it meant leaving home with horse and saddlebags on Friday and returning Monday or Tuesday, for the country members must be looked after, no matter how much his boys needed his firm hand or how much his garden and patches needed working.

In the absence of the minister in those primitive days the wife was called upon to do much of her husband's work. She must visit and sit up with the sick, shroud the dead, assist the doctors gratis with all the village births (there were no storks in those days), bake the wedding cake, help to furnish and serve at church dinners, pink teas, pie suppers, and in everything the mind of woman could concoct to make hard work for raising little money. She was about as busy as the man in the orchestra who plays the kettle drum, the cymbals, the hoof beats, and also shoots the pistol.

For thirty years she continues this program and, besides, gives birth to a new baby every two or three years; no rest, no exemption, over and over the same tasks; four years in this town, three in another, and then four again, on and on till time drags to the end of her itinerant life or a well-earned rest comes to her tired hands and back by an edict from merciful Providence.

Personally I know hundreds of preachers' wives, and many are the times I have tried to comfort them and wipe away their tears when they have just heard the reading of the appointments at Conference. Many times I have wept with them as they thought of a poor appointment, a long move, almost no school for the children, and a shabby parsonage away down under the hill in a thicket of blackjacks. How could a timid little woman refrain from weeping when she knew her husband must be away from home three week-ends in the month and she would be alone with a crowd of little ones? But there was no use to fret, for the appointments of the Conference were like the laws of the Medes and Perisians. The only thing to do was to hurry home, pack up, and get out before the successor came with his load of things.

Then after more than a quarter of a century of this life, when she has passed her Cape Hatteras by oft-repeated tacking, she suddenly faces the beginning of an experience more dreadful than all the heartaches and hardships through which she has passed. She is told by those in authority: "Your husband is too old to do effective work and must superannuate."

After she has moved hundreds of miles from the north to the south of the Conference, then from the east to the west of it, she is finally dropped out. Out of what? Out of the parsonage, out the hearts of the members who claim her no longer as "our preacher's wife," out of contact with those she has known and loved, out off the invitations received as a preacher's wife, and out of the scant salary which means bread and butter. Out! Yes, down and out!

It is no wonder she sits alone in the evening of life with eyes bedimmed by long years of patching and darning by lamplight and with a lump in her throat that refuses to go up or down as she longs for the husband of her youth who has now gone to his well-earned reward and yearns for the children who are scattered and gone, some in homes of their own, some in lands far away. O, yes, to be sure she could live with some of her children, but there are in-laws to be reckoned with, and she does not always feel welcome.

Sometimes I wonder if the coming years will furnish any relief to the rising generation of preachers' wives, and then it is that I wish I had the miracle-working rod of Moses, so I might help to set things right. It is a great satisfaction to know that the Great Evener still has control of things and the star of hope arises in our desolate souls.

But, after all, it is a great life, and if I had it to do over, I would make no change in my selection. However, there are times when I sit alone in my little rented rooms and think of all the girls in my class at school who have splendid homes and temporal blessings then it is that I am tempted to—no, I'm not. I'm glad it all happened just as it did, for I have been instrumental in helping hundreds of souls to be born into the kingdom of my Lord and Saviour. I'm not afraid to trust God for the future. I'm glad there is a brighter day dawning for the wives of our active ministers as well as for the "forgotten man and woman." Relief is in sight. God speed the day! The special effort for superannuate endowment, soon to be launched by the Board of Finance, is a challenge to every red-blooded Southern Methodist.

"MAKING GOOD."

This is making good in life:
Being patient through the strife,
Being glad that you can bear
Now and then the touch of care;
Being cheerful day by day;
Being careful not to say
Bitter things which leave a sting—
This, for laborer or king,
When the record's understood,
Is the depth of "making good."

This is making good on earth:
Being glad to prove your worth,
Being kindly, being true,
Doing what you find to do,
Even though your strength is faint,
Without whimpering or complaint;
Doing little, doing much
With a brave and manly touch,
Drawing water, hewing wood—
Cheerfully—is "making good."

This is making good with men:
Standing up to service when
It were easier to stop
And to let the burden drop;
Doing more than is your share,
More than you were asked to bear,
So, when finished is the test,
You may say you've done your best—
This, in every neighborhood,
Is the depth of "making good."

A SUNBEAM.

If I were a sunbeam
I know what I'd do:
I would seek white lilies
Rainy woodlands through;
I would steal among them,
Softest light I'd shed,
Until every lily
Raised its drooping head.

DAFFY LEARNS SOME TRICKS.

Two of the happiest chums to be found anywhere are little Nita Hayner and her collie puppy, Daffy. Wherever Nita goes Daffy follows her. They play together for hours at a time. When Nita takes her afternoon nap Daffy lies down near her bed and sleeps as long as she does. Every one who knows them calls them "lively chums."

One cold day when they could not play on the lawn Nita threw a beautiful rubber ball across the sitting room. Daffy ran after it, barking gaily, and brought it back to her in his mouth. This pleased Niea so much that she threw the ball away again just to see Daffy bring it back. Every time she threw it away he quickly brought it back to her. Nita was laughing so heartily and Daffy was barking so gladly that Mrs. Hayner came into the room to see what they were doing. She was so delighted that she joined in the frolic with them.

Nita's brother Fred said that he was going to teach Daffy to catch a ball in his mouth. Nita's ball was so big Daffy could hardly get it into his mouth, so Fred bought a smaller one. When Fred first pitched the ball to Daffy he would only run after it and bring it back. After a long time he caught it in his mouth and carried it to Nita. She gave him a great big hug and patted him on the head. Fred gave him a big chocolate. When Daffy ate the chocolate Fred pitched the ball to him again and he caught it. He soon learned this trick. Nita was overjoyed when she pitched the ball and he caught it. Nita wanted Fred to teach him more tricks.

Fred told Miss Moore, his Sunday school teacher, about Daffy's tricks. She said: "Fred, I have a nice little book that tells all about training dogs to do tricks. I will lend it to you."

"Oh, will you, Miss Moore," cried Fred.

"Yes, indeed, I will."

"Then I will train Daffy."

Miss Moore gave the book to Fred and he ran home with it. He soon found that if he wanted Daffy to learn tricks he must be kind to him. His mother told him to read all the book very carefully, and he did. Then he began teaching Daffy easy tricks.

In just a few days Daffy had learned to shake hands with people. When callers come he goes to them and holds out his paw to shake hands with them. It was easy to teach him to lie down and roll over when he wanted food. One day he saw Fred eating bread and he wanted some of it. He rolled over several times. But Fred did not notice him. Then he rolled, and rolled, and rolled. And what do you think he did then? He sat upon his hind legs and looked at Fred and whined. When Nita saw him do that she clapped her hands and laughed merrily. She had never seen a dog do that before. Fred then gave him some of his bread.

Nita wanted Daffy to do that again.

Fred got some more bread and soon had Daffy sitting up to eat it. He liked to be fed that way. When his food was brought he would sit up and wait to be fed.

Nita wanted Daffy to have a red high chair as she had, and sit by her at the table. She wanted him to wear a nice white bib just as she did. She did not know that he could not hold a spoon and feed himself. Mrs. Hayner would let Fred put a bib on Daffy and put him in a high chair, but not very close to the table. Sometimes he would sit there a long time.

Fred said he was going to teach Daffy table manners. One day he put a dress on him. Daffy liked that. Then Fred put one of Nita's baby caps on him and put him in a very small chair at Nita's little table. Fred had prepared Daffy's food so he could give him one bite at a time. At first this was too slow to suit Daffy, but Fred was kind to him. It took a long time to teach Daffy to eat slowly, but finally he learned. Fred was so kind and gentle that Daffy seemed to know that it was best to obey him.

Mrs. Hayner gave Nita and her little friends a Christmas party. Fred had Daffy do all his tricks for the children. They had never seen a dog do such things. Each one thought he was the finest dog they ever saw. Most of the little children asked their papas for collie dogs when they went home.

All the children who live near Nita like to visit her. They think Daffy is the finest play-fellow in town. He has learned to play hide and seek with Nita. She does not understand why he can always find her, but Fred knows. Dogs can follow people just by smelling where they have walked. This is why Nita cannot hide so Daffy cannot find her.

Fred says he is going to teach Daffy every trick in the book Miss Moore loaned him. He knows a great many good tricks now. Fred wants to make him a real show dog. He is a big fine fellow now and growing fast.

The very best trick Daffy knows he learned all by himself. When Mrs. Hayner dresses Nita for bed she always kneels at her mother's knee to say her evening prayer. Daffy often watched her do this. One evening, not long ago, what do you think he did? When Nita knelt at her mother's knee to pray, Daffy walked slowly to Mrs. Hayner and placed his paws on her knee and laid his head on them. Every one thought this was his very best trick. Now he does it every evening. Mr. Hayner had a fine picture made of them at prayer and named it "Chums at Prayer." Each of his friends wants one of these pictures. Wouldn't you like one?—William James Robinson, in Word and Way.

WORKING TOGETHER.

One very cold winter night old Northwind and Little Jack Frost had a long talk, and I happened to overhear them.

Northwind called Jack Frost to see a snowdrift which he had blown into a [illegible] and it certainly was a beautiful [illegible]. Jack Frost turned up his nose [illegible], saying, "I can make just as pretty things. Just watch me."

Northwind decided to see what Jack Frost could do, so he wrapped his cloak about him and went to see Jack Frost work on a pond not far away.

As they flew on and on, Jack Frost peeped in a window and saw a little boy sleeping. "Let's do something for Jackie Boy," whispered Jack Frost.

"We will!" shouted Northwind, and soon they were hard at work, Northwind puffing little flakes of snow against the window pane while Jack Frost fastened them on and at the same time drew pictures of trees on the window. Then Jack Frost hurriedly tasted the water in Jackie Boy's silver cup, which turned the water into ice, and crept out at the keyhole.

When Northwind and Jack Frost passed a tiny pond old Northwind fairly held his breath a moment with delight. Then he, being older, said: "Let's work together this winter."

"Agreed," laughed Jack Frost. "Will you ripple the top of this water while I freeze it?"

"That I will," answered old Northwind.

As Northwind and Jack Frost were going home next morning they saw Jackie Boy looking at the pretty pictures on his window. They tried to talk to him, but they rattled the window so noisily that Jackie Boy ran away to sit by the fire.

After breakfast Jackie Boy begged to go outside, and Jack Frost and Northwind were waiting to play with him. One pinched his nose and the other blew off his hat.

When he went in the house his cheeks were as red as roses and his fingers as purple as Jack Frost could make them, and he said to his mother, "I guess Jack Frost and Northwind do their work so well because they work together."—Iowa Story-Teller.

THE PLAN OF UNIFICATION.

We gave in last week's issue of the Advocate the proposed Plan of Unification of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Episcopal Church. The Plan was adopted by the Joint Commission by an overwhelming majority, thirty-nine voting for it and three against. The three negative votes were cast by members of the Southern Commission.

With reference to the name of the united church, the Joint Commission took the following action: "That the selection of a name for the united church be referred to the first General Conference of the united church."

The Plan as thus proposed by the Joint Commission will go first to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which will meet in Springfield, Mass., in May, 1924, for action; if it should be adopted by that General Conference, it will then go to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, probably at a called session, for action; if approved by both General Conferences, it will then go to the Annual Conferences of both churches and, if approved by them, the union will be consummated, other necessary steps in the procedure following in due order.

The Plan as proposed seems to be simple and feasible. Its simplicity may have the effect of obscuring the real significance of the proposed union; and its apparent feasibility may be seriously affected by the analysis and discussion to which the Plan will be subjected. A first careful reading, however, seems to indicate that a basis of union has been found—or that none will ever be found. By the establishment of two Jurisdictions, with corresponding Jurisdictional Conferences the practical autonomy of the two churches as at present constituted seems to be almost wholly preserved, the General Conference having only such powers as are specifically delegated to it in reference to matters that are purely connectional. The proposed Judicial Council, made up of an equal number of members from the two Jurisdictions, would pass on constitutional questions, try appeals, and arrest, upon certain conditions, acts of connectional boards. So far as we can see, the only possible embarrassment that could arise over the position of the Negro in the unified church would be in the application of the provision that "The bishops shall select by a majority vote of the bishops of each Jurisdiction one or more of their number from each Jurisdiction to preside at the sessions of the General Conference." There would probably be a small Negro membership in the General Conference, but under conditions that need not bring about embarrassment.

There will doubtless be much discussion of the proposed Plan, and we suggest that readers of the Advocate preserve last week's issue in order that they may have the Plan easily accessible. Propriety would suggest that there be a certain measure of reserve in discussing the Plan before it is acted upon by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, though this does not mean that it should not be critically studied and thoroughly understood. There is plenty of time for the whole matter to be considered by our own church and, at the proper time, as much space as may be needed will be given to its consideration in the Advocate.

Rev. Roy H. Kleiser, formerly of the Mississippi Conference, is in the fourth year of his pastorate at the Scott Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Covington, Ky. The church has experienced marked growth during Brother Kleiser's pastorate, and there is a strong desire that he be returned for the fifth year.

The board of stewards of the Methodist church at Vivian, La., has voted the pastor, Rev. R. T. Ware, a month's vacation. The action of the board was conveyed to Brother Ware in an appreciative letter signed by the members, accompanied by a check for $150. We commend this beautiful act to the attention of other official boards.

There arrived at the parsonage at Oak Grove, La., on July 25, a fine infant boy, son of Rev. and Mrs. George Fox. The editor of the Advocate feels highly honored that his parents have decreed that he shall bear the name, "Henry Carley." We trust the name will not be a handicap as he runs the race of life, and we pray the richest blessings of Heaven upon him.

Dr. J. R. Countiss, president of Grenada College, recently spent two weeks in Hot Springs, Ark., resting and recuperating. He feels much improved in health, and is busily engaged in promoting the work of Christian education. Brother Ramsey reports that Brother Price is in high favor with his people.

The publishers, Messrs. Lamar and Barton, announce that the first installment of the Aftermath Series, a symposium of discussions of the problems of Biblical criticism, edited by Bishop H. M. In returning from Ellisville, Miss., last week, it was our privilege to spend Wednesday night at Foxworth. We attended prayer meeting and were impressed into service for the occasion. There was a very fine attendance, which the pastor, Rev. J. W. Price, said was not unusual. We greatly enjoyed meeting with tho good people of Foxworth.

The revivals held this year have been good, 33 members having been added to the membership of the church. The parsonago has been improved by the addition of a porch, painting and papering, and the addition of needed furniture, $600 being expended for these purposes. This is Brother Clegg's third year on the charge.

We learn with sorrow of the death of Mrs. Mary Warren at Mendenhall, Miss., on July 4, 1923. She was the widow of Dr. J. L. Warren, who died on October 8, 1922. She was tho mother of nine children—three daughters and six sons—threo of whom preceded her to the better land. Before her death she talked freely of the futuro and gavo every assurance that all was well. One of her daughters is Mrs. J. N. Reddick, of Jacksonville, Fla., and she left sons in Mendenhall, Pickett, and D'Lo, Miss., to whom the Advocate extends sincero sympathy.

At the Methodist Preachers' Meeting of this city on Monday morning, it was decided to have a union memorial service in honor of the late President of the United States, the service to be held at the First Methodist Church on Friday, at an hour to be designated. Dr. W. Winans Drake, presiding elder of the New Orleans District of tho Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was appointed to deliver the address. Provision was also made for a memorial service across the river, to be held in the Algiers Methodist Church, the address to be delivered by Rev. F. B. Hill, pastor of tho McDonoghville Methodist Church.

CHINA'S CHRISTIAN GENERAL.

By Shrewood Eddy, in the Christian Herald.

I spent four days with General Feng Yu-hsiang and his far-famed "Christian Army." He is perhaps the Chinese Gordon or Andrew Jackson of China. He has been the Governor of two provinces and commands an army in which nine thousand men have already been baptized and received as Christians into the church, while more are waiting on probation, being prepared for admission.

I had several hours with him the night after he had been ordered to leave Honan to take command of his army in Peking. He is a man of impressive presence, over six feet in height, of powerful build, every inch a soldier. His face combines strength and charm. Like Chinese Gordon, he is a stern disciplinarian but a passionate lover of men. His face, normally grave, lights up with strong feeling or kindles with his keen senso of humor. He impresses one as a man of great reserve strength. He is a far stronger man than the President of China or the leaders of any of the present contending factions. He might well become China's first Christian President, though such a thought would be far from his desire, as he has no personal ambition to weaken his master passion.

No sooner had Feng become a Christian some ten years ago than he began to work earnestly among his fellow officers and soldiers, and in time conceived the project of building up a Christian army. After defeating his enemy in one battle, instead of beheading his prisoners according to the ancient custom, General Feng forgave them, gave each one some money and sent them to their homes. After his victory and his efficient administration in Shensi, he was made Governor of the province, where he built up the best army in China. It is made up of some twenty thousand men who are disciplined, men who obey orders, who will not loot and who are fearless in the face of death.

It is the first Christian army I have ever seen. I have read of Cromwell's Ironsides entering battle with prayer and psalms, but I question whether his Puritan army was more Christian than this one in China. These men, too, are "round heads" and ironsides. Every man, from the general down to the latest recruit, has a close-cropped head and is trained as an athlete. It is a superbly drilled body of men if you watch them in military review, though they are clad in home-spun and make their own clothes, shoes and other necessities. General Feng entered the province on foot and sets the example of daily manual labor. He leads the most democratic army in the world to-day.

In the first place, this is a sober, efficient, hard-working army. All the officers and men pattern their lives after the General. From 12 to 1 each week day he works with his own hands in the iron foundry. Every officer and man in his army must learn a useful trade, so that when he retires or reaches tho youthful age limit, ho may successfully enter civil life. Like General Armstrong and Booker Washington, he believes in the dignity of labor, in learning by doing and in work as a great character-building force.

We were awakened at 5 o'clock in the morning by the bugles which called his men to early drill. We saw some of the troops drilling again after nightfall by moonlight. Never have I seen such a working army.

The general himself leads the way in his earnest work for a Christian army. He preaches occasionally with great force and fervor and with impassioned feeling. Regular Biblo classes are held for his officers several times a week, and they in turn teach classes for their men. Fifty of the officers are organized in an evangelistic band.

The leading generals have caught the spirit of their chief. All four of them desired at one time to give up their places in the army and become Christian workers, but each is held in his present placo by a sense of duty. In the present chaos of China some force is needed to maintain law and order, to put down banditry, opium smuggling, lawlessness and crime. What Cromwell's army was in the dissolute reign of the Stuarts, what Washington's unpaid army at Valley Forge was to America, the Christian army of General Feng may yet prove to be in the approaching crisis in China.

CLARITY IN THE PULPIT.

An exchange has the following story: A minister preached on 1 Cor. 13:1. The reporter for the daily paper, strangely enough, got it right, but the linotype operator, in setting the word "charity," made the mistake of using an "l" instead of an "h," and the proofreader overlooked it. So the minister was reported in the morning paper as having preached from the following text: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not clarity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." Commenting on the story the editor says: "As it appears in print it was not New Testament truth, but it was truth, nevertheless. The peoplo want the preacher to be luminous rather than voluminous, and the preacher who is without clarity will soon be without a congregation. So, whether we like it or not, such are the conditions which confront us in these busy days with their many duties. And we must either meet the conditions of our own generation or fail to serve it."—Watchman-Examiner.

Tho country church is a panacea, but has it a program? The panacea is the gospel of Jesus Christ, who is the Saviour of men and of society. But just how will this gospel he applied to the conditions of rural life? The question intimates the need of a program. If a church is conscious of a program, and works it, then that people have the feeling of getting somewhere.—Selected.

On the 23rd of April last, I was called to the Baptist Hospital in Alexandria by Rev. D. B. Boddie, of Glenmora, with the information that his father, BROTHER W. D. BODDIE, was dying in that institution. When I arrived at 4 p. m. I learned that my honored friend had passed away at 2 o'clock. We laid him to rest the next day in the Methodist Cemetery, at Jena, La., the writer conducting the service.

In April, 1919, Rev. D. B. Boddie assisted me in a revival at Trout. I was a stranger in this State, and during that meeting a friendship began between us that has steadily grown. One day I went with him to his old home, and there first met his father and mother. More princely Christian people I have never known. I became a sort of "adopted son" to them, and thenceforward I could always find a home and welcome beneath their hospitable roof.

Brother Boddie was a man of earnest convictions, sterling manliness, and solid Christian character. He loved the church and its ministry; and for many years served in such capacities as that of steward, Sunday school superintendent, trustee, or upon any committee where there was work to be done. He loved the hymns of the church, and was for fully twenty-five years the song leader of his community. His home was the preachers' home; and he was often a delegate to one of the conferences. In quarterly and district conferences he made an efficient secretary. The influence of his radiant life will linger long like the afterglow of a western sunset, and the memory of his genial friendship will abide like the odor of precious ointment.

Wyatt David Boddie, son of Rev. D. A. and Hepsie Boddie, was born in Edgefield District, South Carolina, July 22, 1852. His father was later an itinerant preacher in Louisiana, and here the son grew up. He married Miss Sarah Jane Baker, Oct. 24, 1877, who survives him. Five daughters and one son, born to this union, are living: Mrs. T. J. Drewett, Mrs. W. S. Ezelle, Mrs. Moses Walker, and Mrs. W. H. Dayton, all of Jena, La.; Mrs. F. C. Adams, of Blue Grove, Tex., and Rev. D. B. Boddie, a member of the Louisiana Conference. He is also survived by two brothers and three sisters, all of whom live in Louisiana, and there are a number of grandchildren.

Brother Boddie belonged to the Old Guard of Methodist laymen; men who were preachers' friends in a day when friends were few, and who stood by the church when it cost something to do so. He rests from his labors and his works follow him. May the God whom he loved and served keep and guide the dear ones left behind, until they meet in the great unending family reunion.

When God called the spirit of BROTHER SAM CARSON from earth to heaven there was left a vacancy that will be felt in so many ways. Not only in the home where he was so dearly loved, but the entire community will feel the loss of this dear man. He was born Aug. 19, 1851; died Dec. 28, 1922. A period of seventy-one years, spent in the service of our Lord, has come to an end. This good man labored for his Master as few labor; always ready for service, great or small, always happy when serving his Master. The writer has known Brother Carson forty years, and knew him to be a Christian. He never faltered, or shirked a duty; lived at peace with his fellow-man, and was true to every cause. He was married to Miss B. Scott in December, 1875. To this union were born nine children, two of whom preceded Brother Carson to heaven. The wife, with the other children, know they are denied his earthly presence, but he is with them daily in the spirit, and they know he is with his Master that he served so faithfully here, and with the loved ones gone on before, and that he is awaiting their coming. The waiting time won't be long, and there will be a joyful meeting when friends and loved ones are reunited again.

The church and Sunday school at Conehatta will feel the loss of this good Christian worker. He was the life of the church, and was always there when he could go. May God bless the companion and children and help them to lean on him. He has told them to cast all their burdens on him and he will help them. We know we shall meet him again.

MRS. MOLLIE C. SHELLEY was born in Claiborne County, near Hermanville, Miss., Jan. 30, 1858, and died at Gloster, Miss., in the home of her daughter, Mrs. L. N. Whittington, April 10, 1923. Her husband left her for his heavenly home twenty-one years ago. When she left earth for heaven she left three daughters and three sons to mourn the death of the mother. She was a patient sufferer for four years, ever looking forward to the time when she could go home and be at rest. She was one of the most devoted mothers the writer has ever known, ever thoughtful of her children and their very best interests. She was in reality a consecrated Christian, so kind, tender and sweet-spirited. It was an inspiration to be in her company. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, early in life, and was ever true to the vows assumed. She left this testimony: "There isn't anything in the way. All is clear and beautiful. I will soon go home."

Sons and daughters, mother is at home at rest with God. May God deal very graciously with you.

The funeral was conducted in the Methodist church at Hermanville by the writer, assisted by Rev. M. K. Miller.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, on the 6th day of July, 1923, the gentle, loving spirit of our friend and co-worker, MRS. J. W. WEILENMAN, was taken from her suffering to enter that heavenly rest above, since the all wise and all loving Father thought best to take her from our midst therefore, be it Resolved:

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Gleanings from Meeting of the Meridian District.

One of the best district meetings ever held in the Meridian District of the Mississipi Conference was held, in East End Church, Meridian, Miss., July 10-12, with Mrs. W. I. Denton presiding.

From the opening session Tuesday evening till the close Thursday noon, there was that interest and zeal manifested which come only from those who are striving for the upbuilding of God's kingdom. Auxiliaries had met together to study God's word for guidance and to plan for a greater service for him.

East End Auxiliary proved an ideal hostess. The beautiful new church, with its lovely decorations, was a splendid setting for this gathering of Christian workers; the music was an inspiration to all. At noon each day lunch was served in the sub-story of the church. Everything possible was done for the comfort of the guests.

At different times during the conference we were honored by the presence of four of our Meridian ministers, Presiding Elder P. D. Hardin, Rev. W. H. Lewis, Rev. J. L. Sells, and Rev. J. L. Decell. We had two conference officers—the president, Mrs. H. L. McClesky, of Hattiesburg, and the recording secretary, Miss Ella Wayne Ormond, of Meridian.

At the opening meeting the devotional was led by Rev. P. D. Hardin. The welcome address was delivered by Mrs. J. M. Harwell, of Pachuta. The address of the evening was made by Mrs. McClesky, which proved both pleasing and inspiring.

Impressive was the opening of the Wednesday morning session. Rev. W. H. Lewis, pastor of the church, assisted by Rev. J. L. Sells and Rev. P. D. Hardin, administered the Lord's Supper.

After the regular organization of conference, Mrs. McClesky talked on "The Council and Conference Outlook." She stressed the doubling of membership and subscriptions to the Missionary Voice. She insisted that our Auxiliaries encourage the young people in volunteering for definite Christian service; that we select two prayer specials—one home and one foreign. She suggested the circuit circle plan, and explained in detail, hoping to have an Auxiliary in each of the eighty-six churches of the Meridian District.

Mrs. W. I. Denton gave "The District Outlook," reviewing past work, encouraging the Auxiliaries to a broader, richer service. Among other suggestions, she asked that the larger and stronger organizations help her with the smaller and weaker ones, and that throughout our district more Bible and Mission Study classes be organized.

West End Church has something to be proud of, that five of its young girls have volunteered for definite Christian service. They were introduced to the conference as follows: Misses Ethel and Mabel Graham, Mattie Lou Davis, Ida Philips, and Margaret Lewis.

On Wednesday afternoon there were several subjects presented—all full of interest.

Mrs. Leon Eilzy gave a most excellent paper on "Social Service," a work becoming widespread in our Auxiliaries.

Mrs. R. O. Dobson, president of the City Mission Board, told of its organization and work, and Mrs. Irene Boaz told of the great work she and Miss Constance Palmore, deaconess at the Wesley House, Meridian, are doing.

Miss Ella Wayne Ormond told "How the Adult Societies can Sponsor the Young People," causing all to feel deeply the duty toward our young people.

The visitors were given a drive over the city, and later a visit to the Wesley House.

We were indeed proud of our children and young people on Wednesday evening, for their entertainment was splendid. The Junior Society of Fifth Street Church conducted the devotionnals; a special program was given by "Central Lights," of Central Church, which enjoys the distinction of being the banner society of the Mississippi Conference. As a concluding number the young ladies of East End presented a beautiful pageant entitled "A Missionary Clinic."

During the Thursday morning session "The Belle H. Bennett Memorial" was explained, the plans for procedure put before the conference, and a prayer was voiced for the success of this great and noble work.

There was a round table discussion of best methods of conducting Mission and Bible study classes, Week of Prayer, and for the observance of Harvest Day.

Mrs. J. M. Harwell invited the conference to meet at Pachuta next year, and the motion carried unanimously.

These points given are the principal ones of this splendid meeting, which gave fresh inspiration to the Auxiliaries of the Meridian District.

Mrs. Denton, in conclusion, summed up the conference and gave words of encouragement that His work may go forward as it has never gone before

"By all the memories of the past, by the glorious hope of the future, we dare not falter or fall."

MRS. J. H. RUSH, Secretary.

FROM DUBACH, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: We have just closed our second meeting on the Dubach charge, at Dubach. We had a real good meeting. Eight were received into the church and the work strengthnned.

Harmony Chapel meeting closed last Sunday night, with twelve additions. At many services spiritual fervor ran high; even shouts of praise were heard, and the work seems to be much revived. The pastor did the preaching at both meetings, and the members took the lead in the work.

Since coming here, we have received thirty-five into the church, and we have one more meeting to hold. It begins on Aug 6; after that I will have some dates which I may be able to give in revival effort to anyone needing help.

Yours fraternally,

J. W. FAULK.

Why Take Laxatives?

Discovery by Science Has Replaced Them.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

As Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, it cannot gripe and, like pure water, it is harmless and pleasant.

98 OUT OF EVERY 100 WOMEN BENEFITED

An Absolutely Reliable Statement Important to Every Woman

Remarkable Results Shown by a Nation Wide Canvass of Women Purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. 50,000 Women Answer

For some time a circular has been enclosed with each bottle of our medicine bearing this question: "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

Replies, to date, have been received from over 50,000 women answering that question.

98 per cent of which say YES. That means that 98 out of every 100 women who take the medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

This is a most remarkable record of efficiency. We doubt if any other medicine in the world equals it.

Think of it—only two women out of 100 received no benefit—98 successes out of a possible 100.

Did you ever hear anything like it? We must admit that we, ourselves, are astonished.

Of course we know that our medicine does benefit the large majority of women who take it. But that only two out of 100 received no benefit is most astonishing.

It only goes to prove, however, that a medicine specialized for certain definite ailments—not a cure all—one that is made by the most scientific process; not from drugs, but from a combination of nature's roots and herbs, can and does do more good than hastily prepared prescriptions.

You see, we have been making, improving and refining this medicine for over 50 years until it is so perfect and so well adapted to women's needs that it actually has the virtue to benefit 98 out of every 100 women who take it.

Its reliability and recognized efficiency has gained for it a sale in almost every country in the world—leading all others.

Such evidence should induce every woman suffering from any ailment peculiar to her sex to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and see if she can't be one of the 98. The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The third session of the Corinth District Standard Training School for the benefit of our leaders was held at New Albany, June 25-30. We had an enrollment of 57, representing 18 schools. We issued 42 credits. There were ten pastors who did earnest work. Brother Randolpb, the presiding elder of the district, never fails to take one of the courses with his preachers. The proverblal hospitality of the New Albany peopie was enjoyed by all who took part in this school.

The third session of the Sardis District Standard Training School was held at Sardis, July 5-11. We had an enrollment of 61 and issued 29 credits. During this week the weather was intensely hot, which accounts for the small number of credits issued. We nad only two pastors to attend this school.

Our next school will be held for the benefit of the churches near Durant, Aug. 6-11. The last standard school for tbe year will be held at Booneville, Aug. 27 to Sept. 1. One liberal, wise man at Booneville has agreed to meet the expenses of this school. There are other laymen in the church who would be willing to make a like investment if some tboughtful preacher would lay the matter before them.

The General Sunday School Board has suggested that we should not hold standard schools unless we secure an enrollment of about one hundred. We shall be forced to persuade a larger number of our teachers to attend these schools or else hold non-standard schools. The non-standard school may serve our purpose better, as we can hold more of them and at less expense.

Fourteen of our North Mississippi people attended the first term of the Leadership Training School at Lake Junaluska, July 13-26. A few are in attendance for a second term. Personally, I got more out of this school than any I have attended in the past. The quality of the work done by the faculty and the student body ranks with the best that is being done anywhere. Students were required to devote two hours' study on each lesson. Many of them put twice that amount of time on each lesson for two weeks. After my two weeks' stay up there I am more impressed with the necessity of continued prayer for the power of the Holy Spirit upon our leaders and upon the followers as well.

THE LEADERSHIP OF JESUS.

Such a miracle was Jesus. Let us go a step further and say such a leader is Jesus. Let us study the Leader at work gathering about him a few kindred spirits in the early days of his public career. First, he was not a radical innovator. John the Baptizer dlrected men's attention to him. John, wbo so believed in his nation's past, would not have polnted men to Jesus had he thought Jesus would ignore history and its teaching. Here, indeed, is tbe first trait of every leader. He is conscious that he is a child of the past. He may differ from it, criticize it, go beyond its views, but he does this in loving acknowledgment that the imperfect past made possible the more perfect present. Again, he was a hospitable person. Andrew and his fellow disciple were attracted to him so much that they started to follow him to see where he stayed and ascertain who he was. When Jesus suddenly turned and accosted them with his question, "What do you want?" tbey asked him the first question we today would ask a stranger, "Where are you from?" "Where do you live?" Jesus invited them to join him, and they spent the day in his presence. It was this in Jesus that drew men to him. He never seemed too hurried to talk. He had time for the individual. He was at bis best when surrounded by folks.—Dr. E. A. Leslie.

RELIGION AND THE NATION.

Tbe force of religion on a nation's destiny was empbasized by Calvin Coolidge, now President of the United States, in an address in April before the New York State Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association. The strength of America, the strength of all civilized society, he asserted, was in its religious convictions.

"They are not a power which is diminishing," he said, "but a power which is increasing. The standard of conduct which they require was never before so universally recognized and accepted. It sanctifies every place of worship, it is revealed in every institution of learning, it supports every activity of government, it sustains every economic structure. In domestic affairs, in international affairs, it is more and more the reliance of mankind. The evidences of it are increasing, the results of it are accumulating. More and more the people are living under the conviction that it is righteousness alone which exalteth the nation.

"Surely the recognition of this fact, which stands out above all others, ought to make these days of abiding satisfaction and of continuing faith and determination for the American people.

"It is not in the results of a day or a year that the Eternal Purpose is revealed. If we are to avoid being dismayed by the accidental, and if we are to contribute anything, it is necessary to take a larger view, to make a wider survey, and work in harmony with these ever invincible forces which are always advancing the base line of progress."

A FRIEND TO ENEMIES.

In the Near East the American Y. M. C. A. is serving as an intermediary between the Greek Red Cross and the Turkish Red Crescent societies for the exchange of letters, money, and clothing between the families in Asia Minor and their prisoners in Greece, and between the families in Greece and their prisoners in Asia Minor.

Secretaries have been given full liberty by the Greek military authorities to visit and serve all Turkish prisoners. While permission has been more restricted on the Turkish side, one of the workers is now visiting prisoner camps in Asia Minor. A visit to prisoners in the vicinity of Smyrna resulted in the release of seven prominent Turks from Greece for which the Turks released fifteen Greeks. The names of these latter were sent from the Athens office of the Y. M. C. A. with the request that the names be published in America, where most of the men have relatives with whom they have had no communication since the Smyrna disaster. As a result, the cables have carried news of reunited families.

SAVE THE COUNTRY CHURCH.

By Rev. H. W. Ledbetter.

Any church to continue in first rank must be a country church. The Baptist and Methodist churches are the leading Protestant churches of our nation. Why? Because they have operated in the country. The Baptists are operating more thoroughly in the country than the Methodists (seemingly). That is the chief reason for their rapid growth. When a church ceases to work in the country it will not be long before it will do but little in the city. In the large towns most of the members who are of spiritual value to the church got their faith in the country.

The country church has borne a certain relation to the church at large. It has furnished a large per cent of the ministers. It has given a large per cent of the membership to the towns and cities. Where were most of our city doctors and lawyers reared? Inquire into every vocation. Yes, were the members of the city churches who were reared in the country to withdraw from the church, what would be the result? The country church has undeniably built up the large town and city church. Is it not a good plan to help the country church to exist that the city church may still exist from its fruit? Then gratitude should enjoin us. The movement to the large towns and cities is a sore trial to the country church. Now, what must be done?

We care for city missions; we aid in building town and city churches. What do we do for the country churches? The accomplishments in the country are unobserved. That boy who has gathered faith unto himse'f says but little. His growth follows. He makes a man and blesses the city. He may be called to preach. He loves sympathy. He dreads strangers. It would be an advantage could he bo licensed at his home quarterly meeting. The district conference is held too far off and too many strangers are there. You can hardly get local preachers to send a report there. Tho Baptists put it over us here. They will be the leading denomination of the nation because they are now leading in the country.

This is a new age. Schools are consolidating. The church might be wise to take observation here. Cars are here. People can go farther. Let the country church itself be more alert. I've aided in meetings in the country church where a singing teacher carried on a singing school. He would receive more remuneration than I. That is almost invariably the case. The country pastor can apply tactics used elsewhere. I have my people do everything on a large scale. Then they cannot be little with me. It has always been that the more I had them do for other things, the more they did for me. All preachers should adopt that philosophy.

Times have changed, and country churches should give better support to their pastors. Better support means better pastors. The country is full of high schools, and the young people demand an intelligent ministry. First things are not being put first. In some places in the country, it may be the rule, the ministry ranks behind the intelligence of the young people. Something should be done. Better plans should be made and a better support given the country ministry. Can the Mission Board not do more? Let interested parties think on these things. Presiding elders can handle this problem. It is their opportunity. They are not needed much elsewhere. Beloveds, work it out—you can do it.

FROM LAFAYETTE, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: Our church at Lafayette has made considerable progress in the past year and a half. The membership has increased 50%; the mid-week prayer service, which had been discontinued for years, has been resurrected, and is now, perhaps, the largest in the Conference; the Sunday night preaching service, discontinued for two years, is now one of the largest Sunday evening services, in point of attendance, in South Louisiana. The offerings at Sunday services have increased 400%; the pastor's salary has been raised $900, and the pledges and gifts to our new church movement increased about $25,000.

God has blessed and prospered us financially, numerically, and spiritually.

LEON I. McCAIN, P. C.

FROM PICAYUNE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: I am writing to say that everything is moving along nicely with us at Picayune. Our revival meeting, led by Brother Dan Kelly, did quite a bit of good; and since then the Baptists have held a splendid revival, led by their pastor, Rev. O. P. Estes. The Lord is evidently moving the hearts of the people here there is one of the finest community and church spirits here I have ever known. Last but not least, the people have recently given expression to this fine spirit in giving the writer a brand new Ford touring car, up-to-date in every detail, for which I thank every one who helped to make it possible for me to have such a splendid car.

Again, I must not forget to tell you about the Baptist pastor's present. It seemed that somebody felt that the Methodist preacher must not be the only one to receive a present. So, on the last night of the revival forty-three men marched into the church and presented Brother Estes with a note of thanks and commendation for his faithful preaching and good work in our city. Along with the note was a package containing a beautiful Hamilton watch; so we have two of the proudest preachers in Picayune of any place I know—one with a new Ford and the other with a spank-fire new watch.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: In the past few months my heart has been rejoiced by the uniformly enthusiastic tone of the letters received from the volunteers of several years ago. From some of these young people I had had no word for a year or more; therefore it was particularly encouraging that, without exception, they are remaining true to their original decision to prepare themselves for special service in God's Kingdom.

I give below extracts from these letters. I think the spirit of them is ideal and is to be heartily commended.

Sincerely your friend,
MRS. R. H. WYNN,
Life Service Superintendent.

"Dear Mrs. Wynn: I have not made up my mind just what my life work shall be. I am trying to live the Christian life, and am trusting God to show me my life work. I am going to Centenary next year and will give God a fair chance to show me the way. Pray that I may live so close to him that when he shows me the way I will be able to go where he wants me to go."

"I am going to graduate from High School in June. I feel that this is one more step to the goal I some day hope to reach. Sometimes temptations come and I think it is only ambition, but a still voice whispers to me that it is God's will that I climb as high as possible, and if I am never able to go to foreign fields as a missionary I can work here in my own country and be a missionary every day of my life. I am the Fourth Department Superintendent in our League, and have a class of Juniors in the Sunday school. I shall never forget how wonderful it is to attend the Epworth League Assembly and mingle with people who are all Christians, and I could not find words to express to my fellow Leaguers the inspiration I received while there. I gave myself into God's keeping when I signed the card declaring my intention to do some definite work for him, and he will use me where he sees fit."

"I am closer to my Master than ever before. I realize more what life service means. It means not just service in later years, but even now. Wherever we may be, if we follow our Saviour's leadings each day we need not worry over what kind of work we are going to do. After all, service on the foreign mission field or home field is only a continuation of work begun at home, is it not?"

"Although you have not heard from me, I am still interested in doing some work for my dear Saviour, and am busy in preparing myself for his service, which is no doubt the best work any person can do. When I was at Mansfield the summer of 1920 I gave my name as a volunteer for Africa, but since then the dear Lord has spoken to me about the dying millions in China, where I intend to go in about three years to labor for Jesus, my coming King. I can't do anything that would compare with what he has done for me, but give him this old unworthy broken vessel for him to use as pleases him best. I've fully consecrated my life to him, and my greatest desire is 'to do his will and stay ever close to him and follow, no matter what the cost.' To China I must go. I do not want to go to the easiest place, but where the hardest work is to be done, to prove my love for Jesus."

Below are the names of volunteers at the 1923 Assembly:

FROM ROSE HILL, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: We are glad to report from the Rose Hill charge that we are moving forward. Never in the history of the charge has there been a greater fight made for the church of God. Our pastor is a real leader, a man of five talents, and he has energy and ability to use them all and gain other five talents. He is a man who rules his family and brings them up for service in the church of God. They are all gifted church workers, and one of the reasons for the great throngs of people who go to hear Brother Yeager preach is that he and his whole family are good musicians, and all have fine musical instruments and know how to use them for the glory of the Master. Another great drawing card of Brother Yeager's is that he is a preacher of the Gospel; he knows and preaches the Bible, and practices it in his every-day life before the people. It is generally said that Brother Yeager is one of the greatest preachers in our church.

We have just closed a great meeting at Homewood church, in which many were saved to lives of service, and many joined the church.

We are glad to say that we appreciate the kindness of the bishop and presiding elder in sending up a man of such godly character and ability, and in token of same we assure them that we are standing by Brother Yeager in his powerful fight to save the lost and bring the church at this place to the godly state it should be.

Pray for us.

Signed by: D. A. McKinnon, Charge Lay Leader; W. P. Lewis, President Board of Stewards; C. M. Davis, Sunday School Superintendent.

REPORT OF BROTHER ASSAF.

Dear Brother: I have been asked to put my report in this form and send it to the brethren in order that they may know about my work.

I have preached 94 times this year; 129 have joined the church as a result of these services; 68 of these were Syrian, the rest American. Seven Syrian women have joined the Missionary Society.

A large number of Syrians, men, women and children, have been out to hear me preach in the different places. A large number have joined the Sunday school.

I have visited Jackson, Hattiesburg, Gulfport, Biloxi, Meridian, Newton, Canton, Yazoo City, Vicksbury, McComb and Columbia, and several other places in Mississippi. I also visited Monroe, La.

The following unusual cases are cited to show the work: An old soldier going back to the Old Soldiers' Home was led to profess faith for the first time while on the train; he gave his name for church membership. Nineteen inmates of the Old Ladies' Home have united with the church. Eight inmates of Oakley Farm professed faith and gave their names for church membership. A man converted in Monroe burned his cards and poker chips and joined the church and Sunday school.

So the work goes. Pray for me that I may honor my Master and do his will.

God bless you.

CHARLES ASSAF,
Missionary Evangelist.

FROM SENATOBIA, MISS.

My Dear Doctor: I just want to give you a short account of my movements of late. Was with Brother Augustus at Byhalla last week. I count myself fortunate to be associated with one so wise and sane as N. G. Augustus. Then his great people, what a privilege to preach to that fine folk! They are so appreciative that they make you pull until the backband stands up. I was with them just a year ago, and spent a most delightful week.

I have just closed also a meeting out in the country, at old Malmaison, one of those old, almost deserted churches, but we finally got them to coming, and closed with a shout of victory. Rev. T. H. Porter did most of the preaching. Tom Porter is a fine preacher, and his splendid record with this people, lasting for about sixty years (for here he was reared), was the occasion of renewal of old acquaintances, and was a joy to all.

I am just now starting out to Tyro to assist the pastor in a week's effort for higher and better things for our Lord. The second Sunday in August I go to assist Brother T. H. Porter at Fredonia, six miles east of Como, where we hope to have the power of the Lord manifest as in the olden times. We can not do the work of evangelizing this world without power from above. My meeting here is to open the third Sunday in August, with Kelly to lead. He was here some years ago and the people want him to come again. We are hoping and praying for a great meeting.

Dr. J. R. Countiss is to preach for us at Senatobia next Sunday morning and night. Our people like Dr. Countiss; they seem to think his preacning has many teeth. Well, it should have when he comes here.

So you see, Doctor, that "Mister" Shipman is a very busy youngster this summer. Come to see me, Doctor, and preach for us; we like you pretty well. I hear some of our preachers are going off on a vacation; say they want to take a rest; well, they may be tired, but if they have ever done anything to produce such a feeling I know nothing of it, but you know some folk were born tired, and then had a relapse.

Well, I guess I had better call a halt, or I will have some of these well rested divines trying to find hair on my old bald head. May the blessings of the good Father rest upon your work.

Very cordially,
"MISTER" SHIPMAN.

FROM LUCEDALE CIRCUIT.

Dear Brother Carley: We want you to know we are still living over here on the Lucedale circuit. We are having a real good year over here. We had a very small work to begin with, but we are coming now. We have organized three churches and one Epworth League. We have transferred and received into our churches about sixty-five members. We have had five meetings, the result of which was most of the above report. We are expecting to go to Conference with a good report.

Best wishes for a good year.

ANNUAL MEETING OF GENERAL HOSPITAL BOARD.

Many Methodists do not know that Atlanta, Ga., is headquarters for one of the General Boards of the Church—the General Hospital Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

This Board held its annual meeting at its offices in Wesley Memorial Church, July 25, 1923, at 9:30 a. m. All but three members of the Board were present, and the sessions were full of the spirit of hope and determination to put this big new enterprise on its feet.

Bishop Candler, the chairman, presided over the meeting, and gave evidence that his heart and brain are enlisted in the ministry of healing. The Vice-President, Dr. T. A. Smoot, of Danville, Va., was present; Dr. C. C. Selecman, President of the Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Tex., was present, and Mr. L. M. Stratton, of Memphis, Tenn.; Mr. J. B. Ivey, of Charlotte, N. C.; Dr. J. R. Jones, of Vicksburg, Miss., and Mr. Walker White, Superintendent of Wesley Memorial Hospital, Atlanta, who appeared to read his report as Treasurer of the Board.

The morning session was taken up in hearing from delegates representing hospital enterprises in various places, and in hearing the Treasurer's report, and in hearing the report of the Executive Secretary.

There are openings in many places where promising hospital enterprises could be inaugurated or carried on if the Board had been provided with sufficient funds by the General Conference.

The Secretary, in his report, reviewed the status of the various hospital enterprises now operating or in course of construction in the church: Wesley Memorial, Atlanta; the Barnes Hospital, St. Louis, Mo.; Methodist Hospital, Memphis, Tenn.; the Dallas (Texas) Sanatorium; the Fort Worth (Texas) Sanatorium; Hattiesburg (Miss.) Hospital; Montgomery (Ala.) Memorial Hospital; and Houston (Texas) Hospital. Dallas, Fort Worth and Memphis are erecting institutions that will worthily express the ability and purpose of the church.

The Board was very much interested in a proposal that has grown out of the visit in May of the Secretary to Roswell, New Merico. Mr. Will Lawrence, a Methodist steward of Roswell, appeared before the Board and made a telling argument why the Board should locate its western tuberculosis sanatorium in that beautiful little city in the desert, made fertilo and beautiful by artesian wells. The citizens of Roswell authorized him to make the Board an offer which was generous and quite creditable to that community. It was the belief of the members present that no cause would appeal to the church more quickly and acutely than this tuberculosis sanatorium. Accordingly, a committee was appointed to visit the various sections of the West with a view to selecting a site and preparing the way for such an enterprise at an early date. This committee consisted of Dr. Selecman, Dr. C. C. Jarrell and Dr. A. F. Smith.

It was evidently the mind of the Board to develop its resources and set on foot the Golden Cross Society, rather than load itself down with hospital enterprises at the present time. It was settled on as a policy that except in emergency cases the proper procedure was for hospitals to be owned and controlled by local holding boards.

The Board adopted the recommendations of the Secretary in reference to making the Golden Cross enrollment more effective. Some changes were made in the memberships of the Golden Cross, so that they now stand as follows:

| | |
|---|---|
| Junior members ........... | $ .25 |
| Student members .......... | .50 |
| Adult members ............ | 1.00 |
| Active members ........... | 5.00 |
| Supporting members ...... | 10.00 |
| Sustaining members ....... | 25.00 |
| Service members .......... | 50.00 |
| Comrade of the Golden Cross | 100.00 |
| Life member ............. | 500.00 |
| Life Patron ............... | 1,000.00 |
| Knight of the Golden Cross. | 10,000.00 |

Those plans, when carried into effect throughout the whole church, will write the name Golden Cross on the heart of the church; enroll the majority of our members in this practical expression of Christianity and raise hundreds of dollars a year for the church's ministry of healing.

The mind of the church is ready; the spirit of the age is with us. The same Lord who said, "Go, Preach, Teach," said "Heal." He led the way by his example. Methodism must follow and complete her apostolicity.

FROM SHAW, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: We have just closed a graet meeting at Litton church, out seven miles from Shaw, in the country. Great crowds attended the meeting, great interest was manifested, and much good was done. The preaching was done by Rev. T. E. Gregory, our pastor at Leland. His sermons were great in simplicity, earnestness, and truth. We had the assistance of the Boyle quartet for two of the night services. They are a bunch of splendid men, as well as good singers.

The church membership was wonderfully benefited, and thirty-two were added to the church on profession of faith, ranging in age from ten to forty-five years. Our membership was more than doubled.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

WHAT A RECORD!

"Consider 'Pop' Bowler! 'Pop' is—or was—an engineer on the Pennsylvania Railroad. He traveled one million, seven hundred and forty-six thousand miles during fifty years of continuous service, without accident, loss of life, or injury to any one in his charge. For the past ten years he has been engineer of the Congressional Limited between New York and Washington. Now 'Pop' is retired. He looks back on a lifetime of modest and unassuming achivement, and tells his friends happily of his boys and girls, college men and successful wives, of his well-to-do estate, and his willingness to bow to the rule of the road which puts an age limit on engineers." So runs a news item. As we read it, we thought of the hundreds of superannuated preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who, for as many years as "Pop" Bowler—and some of them for more—have been a blessing to the world. They, too, are "retired"—but mighty, mighty few of them have a "well-to-do estate" about which they may talk happily to their friends; the most of them, rather, are barely able to make ends meet on the bare pittance the church gives them. Thank God, a better day will soon be at hand through the special effort in behlf of these retired veterans of the Cross!

A CONSTITUTION WEEK.

Under the auspices of the Citizenship Committee of the American Bar Association, the week, September 16-22, has been set apart and designated as "Constitution Week." The announced purpose of this observance is "to re-establish the Constitution of the United States and the principles and ideals of our Government in the minds and hearts of the people." While the multiplicatoin of "days" and "weeks" has just about worn out the patience of the American people, we venture to suggest that the observance of "Constitution Week" is well worth serious consideration. Most of our people are lamentably ignorant of the provisions and significance of this historic document; and there be many among us who seem deliberately to have set themselves in opposition to a particular provision of the Constitution because, forsooth, it runs counter to their mercenary interests and selfish desires. One of the surest signs of the decay of national strength is disregard of fundamental authority; if our Constiution has become a mere "scrap of paper," we have entered upon the decline that will result in ultimate national failure. We do well if, in our churches, schools, press, community organizations, and in every other way possible, we inculcate respect for and obedience to the document which Gladstone declared to be "the greatest piece of work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man."

RIGHT OF WAY FOR THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION MOVEMENT.

The committee authorized by the General Conference to harmonize and correlate the forward movements of the church has given the Christian Education Movement right of way from August to November, inclusive, for cultivation and for the collection of pledges. It goes without saying that those officially in charge of the Movement will be diligent in their efforts to make the best possible use of this specially designated period; it remains for those who have made pledges to the support of our educational work to co-operate with them loyally and heartily in meeting the obligations they have assumed. We are in great error if we allow ourselves to feel that these pledges were made simply at the request of the church for enterprises in which we are not vitally interested, and that their payment or non-payment has no special bearing upon our religious welfare. There is, of course, the serious matter of meeting our personal obligations, voluntarily assumed; but there is the greater thing of maintaining those educational institutions without which the church would be unable to do the work it ought to do in ministering to the religious needs of the age. Christian education is not an incidental in the work of the church—it is an essential; and every member of the church is directly and vitally interested in the success of this cause. Let us, then, do our full duty during this special period.

A STARTLING FACT.

Dean Walter S. Athearn, of the Boston University School of Religious Education and Social Service, has recently concluded a strictly scientific study of the age of conversion as indicated by the age of joining the church. He secured the names, dates of birth, and dates of joining the church of 6,194 persons in 43 States for a given calendar year, all the dates being verified by court records, church registers, or other methods of guaranteeing exact information. The names were taken from different churches, as follows: Methodist Episcopal, 2,231 persons, from 29 States; Congregational, 1,490 persons, from 17 States; Presbyterian, 1,183 persons, from 14 States; Baptist, 712 persons, from 18 States; Disciples, 515 persons, from 11 States. The study revealed the fact that the period of greatest frequency in church-joining falls within a short age-range, and that the peak, or age at which the largest number of persons join the church, varies but slightly among the denominations studied. The following figures show the range and the peak: Methodist Episcopal, 9-14 years, inclusive, peak at 10-11 years; Congregational, 12-15 years, inclusive, peak 13-14 years; Presbyterian, 12-14 years, inclusive, peak at 12-13 years; Baptist, 10-13 years, inclusive, peak at 11-12 years; Disciples, 9-13 years, inclusive, peak at 11-12 years; all denominations, 10-14 years, inclusive, peak at 13-14 years. These figures, which may be taken as at least fairly representative, show that only 25 per cent of those joining the church joined after they were 21 years, 4 months and 22 days old. 75 per cent joining before that age. The startling fact revealed in this study is, if a person has not joined the church before that age, the chances are three to one that he will never join. We venture the assertion that an equally careful study would show a rapidly increasing chance against joining the church with each successive five-year period after the age of 21. What stronger argument do we need to make us realize the value of our Sunday school work and of evangelistic efforts among our young people?

CONSISTENT, AT LEAST.

In a recent issue of a denominational newspaper of the Baptist persuasion, a writer, presumably a Baptst preacher, in an emphatic protest against "union" meetings, closes his article with these words: "The preaching in union meetings is usually done either by a pedobaptist or an apologizing, compromising Baptist. One cannot conceive of Dr. E. Y. Mullins, L. R. Scarborough, R. B. Gunter, T. T. Martin, J. W. Porter, or the late J. B. Gambrell doing the preaching in a union meeting. These brethren have a complete Bible message. They are loyal to the Bible and the Author of it. They would not be suitable in a 'union meeting.'" The sentiments expressed sound like those of the Middle Ages—but they at least have the virtue of being consistent with the view that the Christ is a Baptist Christ and that a Baptist crown must rest upon his head. "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are."

MAKE THE WAY PLAIN.

Travelers by automobile along public highways would be greatly helped and comforted if at convenient intervals, especially at "forks" and cross-roads, they could find sign boards giving specific information as to mileage and destinations. Unfortunately, the traveler does not always find these, and he has to depend upon information picked up along the way to guide him in his course. What a blessing it is that upon the High way of Life the signs are all up, so that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein.'

SIMPLY A MATTER OF BUSINESS.

A press dispatch the other day announced that a great business corporation in Chicago has decreed that sleeveless dresses and an excessive amount of "make-up" will mean the dismissal of its women employees. Thus business undertakes to do for the sake of business what parents ought to do for the sake of propriety and good morals.

THE MOVING OF SCARRITT.

By Mrs. F. F. Stephens, President, Woman's Missionary Council.

It is the judgment of those who are responsible for the control and maintenance of the Scarritt Bible and Training School that the time has come when the institution will be able to serve a larger purpose in the Kingdom if it is moved to a different location, enlarged and reorganized. Those interested in the plans for a New Scarritt have not gone into press heretofore. One reason was the belief that time should first be spent in most careful thought and study before coming to a decision, and some years have now been given to prayerful endeavor to find the best place in the work of the church for this School. Another reason has been that the Board of Managers failed to realize that the church is widely interested.

For the thirty years of its history the Training School in Kansas City has been one of the most quiet and self-effacing church institutions. Colleges become known through their graudates and the grateful, enthusiastic publicity given by their alumnae. In the case of Scarritt, many of the graduates have gone immediately after finishing the course to far-off lands. It is just possible that the name and spirit of Scarritt are better known to-day in the city of Shanghai, where the leading school for girls in the Orient is staffed by its graduates, than it is in some of the cities of our South. It is possible that the name and spirit are better known in the city of Rio, where points of contact have been established with thousands of homes through the daughters who have been taught by Scarritt alumnae, than they are by many members of the home church. Further, the Scarritt-trained women who have remained in the homeland have not spent their lives among such friends as read this paper. Their mission has been to the little children and to the under-privileged industrials in the cities, to the Oriental on the Pacific Coast, to the Mexicans on the southwest border, to the Cubans who come and go like the tides in Florida, to the retarded people of the Louisiana parishes, to the stranger everywhere within our gates, always a quiet, consecrated, unheralded service.

However, the women who have loved and supported the School are glad to find that the church is interested in its welfare and progress. They are grateful to the cities which are now reaching out a generous helping hand with offers of financial aid and educational affiliation. Regardless of where the School may be in the future, its friends will always hold in kindly remembrance the invitations which have come at this time. They are glad of an opportunity to give the church the facts. The plans relative to the moving and reorganizing of the School have been worked out in the hope of rendering the largest possible service, and there is an earnest desire that the leaders of the church shall assist in reaching a wise conclusion at the earliest possible moment. To delay much longer will be hurtful not only to Scarritt but to the cause of missions.

Reasons for Moving.

The suggestion to move the Training School took definite shape at the meeting of the Scarritt Board of Managers in January, 1921, though much discussion covering a considerable period of time had preceded the decision. The reasons for moving may be briefly given as follows:

The School is far removed from the center of its constituency. Two-thirds of the students come from the territory east of the Mississippi River, and the other third largely from the South. Very few come from the region to the north and west. The present location, therefore, involves a large unnecessary expense to the student body. Since the School is the only one of its kind within the bounds of the church, the Board felt that it should be located where it may be of the largest service to the church as a whole. Its presence in Kansas City is undoubtedly a blessing to that city, and its removal will be some loss to our work on the border, but thoughtful study has convinced the Board that the greater efficiency possible in some other location will much more than offset this loss.

A second reason is because of the embarrassment in which the School finds itself in regard to its charter, which has been adjudged by the courts to be illegal. The Constitution of the State is such as to make it impossible to secure a legal charter, and yet, without it, financial and educational development are practically impossible. No degrees can be granted. (A Constitutional Convention is now in session trying to frame a new Constitution for Missouri, and it is possible the charter regulations may be changed. This is by no means a certainty, and in any event may be far in the future.)

The third, and by far the most important reason for moving, one sufficiently important to be named as the basis of the entire decision, is the need of having a neighboring institution of learning in which Scarritt students may take certain courses not furnished by the Training School. Many a student comes to Scarritt lacking in one or two preparatory subjects. If a Teachers' College, a nurse-training school, a Kindergarten Training School, were at hand, these lacking courses could be taken along with the Scarritt training, and a possible year saved in the time of the student. None of these advantages are open to the students at the present location.

Even students who have had full preparation find that special courses offered only by secular colleges are needed for special fields of service. For example, two or three students each year are preparing for work in Africa. Because of the needs of those primitive peoples, the missionary should know something of elementary agriculture, poultry raising, and similar topics. At present these cannot be secured without an additional year in some other school. Many other subjects would be valuable to one, two, or possibly a dozen candidates each year. The expense of adding them to Scarritt curriculum is too great to be justified by the small number needing them. A good near-by normal school would supply them at small cost.

Certain departments, such as English, Bible, Church History, Sociology, Missions, Evangelism, Practical Efficiency, will still be carried on within the Training School itself. The particular emphasis given those studies makes the spirit and atmosphere of Scarritt. They are the heart of the teaching needed by the missionary at home and abroad. There has not been any thought of placing Scarritt students in any other college to study those subjects.

The Larger Program

The Board of Managers of the Training School and the members of the Woman's Missionary Council have taken counsel with many church leaders before reaching any conclusion about the place of Scarritt in the future program of missionary preparation. The result is a joint decision participated in and agreed to by representatives of all the Boards and Schools involved.

A preliminary report, framed by a committee of these representatives, which included three things: a definite classification of the various types of religious workers needed by the church at home and abroad, a minimum standard of preparation to be required of each type of worker, and some suggestions as to the facilities for training such workers, was prepared and presented to the Woman's Council and to the Board of Missions in their sessions of 1922. Each body adopted the proposed classification of workers, and also the standards of preparation, and authorized its Executive Committee to give further consideration to the facilities for training. The printed annuals of both the Board and the Council include the copy of the report.

Pursuant to the action of these bodies, a joint committee of nineteen persons representing the Executive Committee of the Board of Missions, the Exective Committee of the Woman's Missionary Council, the Candler School of Theology, the School of Theology of Southern Methodist University, the Scarritt Bible and Training School, and the Administrative, Candidate, and Educational Secretaries of the Board of Missions, both men and women, was appointed for the purpose of formulating a plan of training. The essential features of that program, which were adopted by the Woman's Missionary Council and the Board of Missions in the sessions of 1923, provide a unified missionary plan for the church as a whole based upon the three existing institutions mentioned above. The plan is to make adequate provision for developing the two schools of theology as the centers of missionary training, primarily for the ministry. The plan further utilizes Scarritt as a training center for lay workers.

That a school which will train lay workers, whether they are to serve in the mission fields at home and abroad, or whether they are to serve the local churches as volunteer workers in Sunday schools and other church organizations, is greatly needed, no one who knows the church will deny. Scarritt, as a small institution with little room and little money, has been obliged in the past to limit its training to the few who specialize in missions. As an enlarged school, it may open its doors to such lay workers as wish to prepare for various forms of service. Undoubtedly, most of these workers will be women, though men will not be excluded from the new Scarritt. In addition, experienced workers on furlough from the mission fields will be given opportunity for further specialization, and that in their own denomination, instead of being obliged to seek such study under other influences outside the bounds of our Methodism.

As a professional school for lay workers, the new Scarritt will differ on the one hand from the typical church college, which is primarily cultural, and on the other hand from the school of theology, which is designed for the professional training of the ministry. It will not interfere with, but will supplement our educational system. It will develop and utilize a school which has been faithfully and effectively serving the church for many years.

The question of the location of the new Scarritt has received and is receiving most careful consideration. As already stated, the plan, so painstakingly formed, provides for three schools of missionary preparation: the one at Atlanta, one at Dallas, and the third presumably at some central point. There is no question that the Woman's Council believes Nashville the best location for this third school. The women would prefer to have their funds invested there. The headquarters of the great Boards of the church are there. The Administrative Secretaries who exercise oversight over the candidates in training for missions are there. One of the finest teachers' colleges of the South is there. It will be a location from which the institution can serve the entire church and retain the undivided support of the women upon whom it will be dependent for maintenance. No effort has been made to keep this fact a secret, but the statement could not be made public until Nashville Methodism had offered a location.

One fact should be kept clearly in mind, and that is that wherever Scarritt locates it will be an institution with a separate entity. It seeks only to be close enough to a school from which it may secure, by purchase or by exchange of credits, such courses as its students may need which are not in its own curriculum. It will have its own Board of Managers, as heretofore, its own funds, its dormitories, its faculty, and its courses of study.

Above all, it has no thought of affiliation with any school not in harmony with the church. It has neither made nor received overtures from any institution which the church has disapproved. Scarritt has always been entirely loyal to the church, and wishes now, in its new plans, to merit the earnest good wishes of the best thought of the church and to carry out as effectively as it can, the desires of the constituency. It has been the heart of the Woman's Work in the past, a much loved institution, its welfare is the daily thought and prayer of thousands of women the world around. In its enlarged field of endeavor may it merit the blessings which many, far and near, are praying upon its efforts.

THE NEXT CHURCH "OVER THE TOP."

In our list of churches given recently in the Advocate which had paid their five years in full, the question was asked, "Who will be the next church?" I am glad to say that this week brought a check that paid up in full for the five years for Andrew's Chapel Church, Fannin charge, Jackson District. This good work is appreciated, and we are now repeating the question, WHO WILL BE THE NEXT CHURCH TO GET ON THE HONOR ROLL?

Yours for service,
W. D. HAWKINS,
Field Secretary-Treasurer.

IN RESPONSE TO DOCTOR STEEL.

By Rev. M. B. Sharbrough.

This is not in any sense a reply to any of the Doctor's letters, but is only an acknowledgment of the fact that it is called forth by a rather recent communication of his in the Advocate, and in some respects covers common ground with said article.

I will first say that I have always read everything from the Doctor's pen in the church press that has come before me since the days when he was Editor of the Epworth Era; and while I have not always agreed with him, I have been sufficiently interested each time to read his next article. Like the Doctor, I always have a good garden which I cultivate with my own hands, and from which I eat a vegetable dinner almost every day in the year. Withal, I keep well, and have no need to play golf or anything else for exercise. Indeed, I have a conviction which, like Banquo's ghost, won't down, that the garden with its varied exercise would keep up the health and prolong the life of many a man whose regular business requires a sedentary occupation. Besides, it ought to afford a great deal of pleasure to any one not naturally feeble or lazy, as well as some profit. We had berries throughout the season, have feasted on cantaloupes and melons of our own raising for the past month, and the end is not yet.

I can certainly appreciate the Doctor's theological situation, being somewhat in the same condition myself. While not so strictly conservative as some, I am by no means a radical. I continue to believe in a supernatural Christ, the redeemer of a sinful humanity made originally, in God's likeness, above and apart from the beasts that perish. I further believe in a supernatural preparation for the coming of the supernatural Christ, through the Hebrew people. Hence I believe in the miracles of the Old Testament and the New, as a process in this supernatural redemption. I believe in the Virgin birth, and the resurrection of our Lord, also in the general resurrection of the dead as the culmination of redemption on the earth.

I believe in the Trinity interpreted in harmony with the Divine unity, and, properly viewed, I consider it essential both to a true theology and a sound philosophy. Withal, when I cannot accept the gospel fairly interpreted, I will certainly surrender the position which requires that I lead the congregation in its recital Sabbath after Sabbath, since not to do so I would regard as hypocrisy worse than skepticism.

Yet I do not go all the way with the so-called Fundamentalists. I do not like the term "verbal inspiration," of which they make so much. Nor do I like the term 'physical resurrection,' as applied to Christ, since his body was spiritualized in the rising, just as ours will be in the resurrection. And I certainly do not believe that Christ will ever come in physical presence to reign physically upon the earth. Indeed, I believe such teaching is based on the misinterpretation of Scripture and on a mere literalism from which the gospel was intended to deliver us. "The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth Life." I believe that when Christ comes again other than through his Spirit, by whom he is always coming, it will be at the close of the dispensation of Grace as the Judge of men, and with the awards of eternity in his hands.

Unlike the Doctor, I have never ventured far into the lecture field. I have heard him, however, with great pleasure on "Home Life in Dixie," and on the "Heroes of Methodism," and I would like to hear him on Genesis and Geology, now that the radicals are giving such radical treatment to the earlier chapters of Genesis.

We used to hear certain portions of these chapters called allegorical, and while we might not extensively accept this theory, yet as allegory is a form of truth, and not a term for error, we might not find it seriously objectionable if kept within rational bounds.

But when men call these and other portions of Scripture myths and fable and folklore, they are digging at the foundations by discrediting the records, for such terms signify falsity either partial or entire. I do not see how men of mature mind, to say nothing of scholarship, can fail to realize that there are truths in these earlier chapters of Genesis, such as the direct creation of man in God's image and likeness, apart from and above the beast that perisheth; the oneness of man and woman in the marriage relation; the unity of the human race; the existence of the tempter and the fall, however these truths may be expressed, which are so essentially connected with the whole history of the Redemption which is through Christ, that to reject them is logically to invalidate the record throughout.

To eliminate these truths from the record would be to destroy the consistency of the Holy Book, and to regard the Old Testament as Hebrew mythology, and the New Testament as a record of Christian superstition—I do not say myths, since all admit that it was written long after the season of myths had passed. Thus regarded, the Scriptures would reveal to us no Christ, no Divine Saviour, but only the man Jesus with no authority over our wills and no power to control our affections. Because of the impeachment of the records, we would be uncertain both as to his life and teachings. With the elimination of the miraculous and redemptive features from the record, if we should fairly take the rest at its face value, the claims which he makes for himself, if he is not the Christ, would present him in the light of an imposter or of a religious fanatic; and viewed thus he would soon cease to command either our confidence or respect as an exemplar or teacher, whatever the excellence of his supposed sayings.

Of course, the most radical of these critics know all this, and are working steadily and persistently to this end, though some of them throw dust by proclaiming with loud voice that Christ is the Great Teacher and Exemplar of the race, while they deny his real and proper Divinity.

The wonder is that so many who seem to be following in their train do not realize whither they are tending.

To my mind, when once well started on the road there is logically no stopping place this side the renunciation of our historic Christianity, and finally falling back on a form of paganism, with Jesus—not the Christ—merely added to the Pantheon, a paganism which would be modified for rule by the teachings of [illegible] less so with the passing of [illegible] those teachings would [illegible] considered as authoritative [illegible] ceased being regarded [illegible] men. And thus the tendency would be [illegible] backward to the [illegible] superstitions, [illegible]

THE GLORY OF THE CROSS

As an instrument of execution [illegible] world, the cross represented the depth of ignominy; as a doctrine in the [illegible] old-time Jew foolishness and [illegible] appeared to be in it everything that was [illegible] and horrid, and nothing that was [illegible] and compulsive of regard. It did not seem to be a workable social motive. Why should a good man be crucified just as a bad man might be? How could a God fail to save Himself from the tree? How can the death of one be the deliverance of the many? So the [illegible] have argued, or are arguing today. To them, the cross is foolishness, contemptible as a fact, inoperative as a principle.

Christianity, however, accepts the challenge, that Jesus Christ himself endured the cross, despising its shame. Paul admitted that the cross is folly to them that perish, but declared that to those possessing insight it is the power of God, a medium of salvation, while also a norm of conduct and an ideal for racial [illegible]. The crucifix, literally gilded and lifted up on the towers of cathedrals, is gleaming with a new sentiment of radiant beauty. In increasing numbers men are coming over to God's side. It is gradually dawning on the consciousness of mankind that Jesus Christ succeeded by failing, died into life, was freely, not forcibly, frustrated, and through a temporary humiliation attained an eternally glorious purpose. The shame is being more and more transferred to those who never sit with Jesus in the upper room, or make a [illegible] of Calvary. It is coming to be recognized that the folk who never get this cross-idea are missing out; it has long since ceased to be the case that in general a Christian suffers socially as a Christian. And the probability is even now upon the horizon that Christianity, nominally a government prescription and world-order in the time of Constantine, may in another century, if not decade, become in fact the dominating religion of this planet, co-extensive with every land, and permeating all phases of society.

A realization of the full glory of the cross, then, is on the way. Slowly but surely men are getting God's idea, are coming to see what Jehovah meant by the death of His Son, are discerning the meaning of the mystery, and recognizing not only "the cruciality of the Cross" as a point in history, but also its rationality as a means of redemption. The cross of Jesus, in the blunt phraseology of this curt age, is "making good." It is the power of God unto salvation. Such reflections as these should be our source of cheer in religious work. The cross of Jesus remains as a radiant light in history. But for it, the world would be wholly dark. It makes things both harder and easier, but we must abide in its light.—Zion's Herald.

Wild camels are said to be tamed by forcing them to inhale tobacco smoke. The [illegible] Department of Agriculture reports a herd of cattle getting into a tobacco field and eating the weed. Several died. Nicotine is a poison although it may be used in very mild doses by [illegible]. It can never be classed as a food, but is a narcotic.—Selected.

NEWS FROM THE DISTRICTS.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Notes from Columbus District.

We had hoped to give reports from the rest of the Sunday schools this month, but as so many of the pastors were away from home in revival work and on vacations, we have been unable to hear from all of them. The Sunday school work is running at a low ebb right at this time on account of summer vacations, etc. We give below reports from several charges:

* * *

High Point: We have five Sunday schools, all doing good work, with good attendance and much interest.

* * *

Cedar Bluff: We have four Sunday schools on the Cedar Bluff charge, although at Pheba, where the congregation is made up largely of Agricultural High School students, the school has suspended during the vacation. At Steel's Chapel we have recently raised from a union to a full-fledged Methodist school.

* * *

Brooksville: We have two live Sunday schools, well organized. Superintendents and teachers are active. Our school at Brooksville is graded from the Beginners to the Adults, and uses graded literature. Miss Duberry has just closed a class for teachers that proved a great help to us. Some eight or ten took the examination at the close.

* * *

McCool: We have a Sunday school at each of the six churches on the McCool charge, some of which are doing fine work. These schools mean much to the spiritual life of the charge. We had a splendid Sunday School Day program at four churches, with a total collection of $23.82.

* * *

We are in the midst of our revival campaign for our rural churches. We have heard from several meetings that began the fifth Sunday in July, and find that we have had several very fine revivals. No doubt the pastors will make report from their charges as to these meetings in due time.

* * *

The work of the District, as a whole, is moving along well. Finances are somewhat in advance of any previous year, and prospects are bright for a fine closing for the year. We are giving special attention now to the revival work and are praying for a great revival throughout the district.

A. T. McILWAIN, P. E.

Corinth District Notes.

All the pastors are on the job, and nearly all of them are busy in revival meetings at the present time. We have thirty pastoral charges and one hundred and twenty-four churches in the district. We expect a revival in every church, and a number where we have no organized church.

* * *

Some good revivals have been reported. The Corinth District had the greatest number of accessions by profession last year and the year before of any district in the Conference. We hope to have a greater number this year.

* * *

* * *

McIntosh is in a big tent meeting at Baldwyn now, and he goes from there to Lebanon, in the country with the district tent, beginning the second Sunday in August. He goes to Marietta the fourth Sunday in August for a tent meeting.

* * *

Brother Smoot has just closed a meeting with Brother J. T. Gullett at Blythe Chapel, on the Booneville circuit. They used the Booneville tent.

* * *

Brother W. D. Bass has held two tent meetings in the district, one at Mantachie, and the other at Mooreville. He has arranged for two more in the district. He goes to Dumas circuit, where three churches combine in a tent meeting, New Hope, Weir, and Jacob's Chapel. From there he goes to Falkner for a meeting.

* * *

Our Conference evangelist has held some good meetings at Walnut and Potts Camp. He used the district tent at each place. He has just closed a meeting at Burnsville. He goes to Belmont the second Sunday in August, and to Tishomingo the fourth Sunday in August.

* * *

Brother J. A. George has been with Brother McDougal in successful revivals at Box Chapel and Marvin, on the Corinth circuit. He and Brother H. P. Lewis will help Brother E. C. Sullivan in a tent meeting, beginning Aug. 12, at Meadow Creek, where two churches, Hodges Chapel and Shady Grove, unite in a big revival effort.

* * *

Rev. E. R. Smoot will use the district tent at Kossuth, beginning the fourth Sunday in August, and at Gaine's Chapel, beginning the second Sunday in September.

* * *

Brother McIntosh has already held three successful revivals in the district, using the tent at each place, viz., Ripley, South Side, Corinth, and Brasher.

* * *

* * *

Our District Standard Training School, held at New Albany, was a great success. We have arranged to have a second district Standard Training School for this year, which will be held at Booneville, Aug. 27 to Sept. 1. The following courses will be offered: "The Methodist Church and Its Work," by Rev. R. H. B. Gladney; "Principles of Religious Teaching," by Dr. A. W. Milden; "Junior Organization and Administration," by Mrs. V. R. McDonald; "The Pupil," by Mrs. J. B. Randolph. We hope to have a good attendance. Write Rev. E. G. Mohler, Registrar, Booneville, Miss., that you are coming, so he may provide for your entertainment.

We want all financial columns level at Greenville, Nov. 7.

NEW YORK AND THE BIBLE SCHOOL

By Rev. Carroll Varner.

After putting it off for two or three years, I finally got up this summer to take a short course in Dr. White's Bible School in New York City. I have always believed that a preacher owed it to himself and his congregation also to go away occasionally for a course of lectures or an institute of some kind where he could brush up and get fresh mental and spiritual stimulus. I tried the University of Chicago one summer, but I saw that wouldn't do if a fellow didn't want to make shipwreck of his faith, so for the second time now I have come to this school. They are thoroughly sound and safe here, though they are not extreme in their conservatism. The method here is to study the Bible intensively and not so much about the Bible; and why shouldn't this be the best method after all? One is reminded in this connection of what Prof. R. G. Moulton once said: "There is one thing left to do with the Bible: simply to read it." If I am not mistaken, it is G. Campbell Morgan's method to let the Bible be its own interpreter. That is certainly the plan here. As one of the professors said in the class-room the other day, they have no objection to your using commentaries and helps, but they do want you first to exhaust your own resources in the proper understanding and interpretation of any book or passage of Scripture. For my own part, I know they have made the book of Hebrews, for example, a new book to me by using just this method. It is amazing what a treasure house one finds the Bible to be by simply reading it carefully and prayerfully; it doesn't all lie on the surface, and only by earnest digging will one bring forth things old and new. Then, in addition to these courses in Bible study, there are courses in Church Efficiency, Church History, Language Study, and the Preacher's Personal Problems. In the afternoons, under the leadership of one of the professors, as many of the students as care to go are taken on what they are pleased to call sociological visitations over the city; visiting and having explained to them the places and institutions of chief interest in this great metropolis. Then from time to time there are visits and lectures from characters of national and international reputation. We have just had a visit from Helen Gould—Mrs. Shepherd—who is a strong friend of the School. A brief reception was held while she was present, and we had the pleasure of meeting and talking with her. I am told that she is sorely grieved over the fact that some of the colleges which she has helped are teaching Modernism, and has made it her policy now to help no institutions which permit any radical teachings concerning the Bible.

Dr. White has connected now with the School his brother, J. Campbell White, who was so well known over our country as the general secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. He is a forceful speaker and a strong personality, and his coming makes a very considerable addition to the faculty. What a fine family this must have been—the two brothers, W. W. and J. Campbell White, and their sister, Mrs. John R. Mott! And what a work for the kingdom of God they are doing!

A great advantage in coming here to study, aside from the character of the institution itself, lies in the fact that it is situated in the world's greatest metropolis. There is hardly any estimating what one learns in even a short stay here in this great city if he is closely observant. The immensity of New York is simply overwhelming, not alone its population, but everything about it! Buildings of twenty-five stories and more are to be seen on every hand, and wide and deep in proportion. One wonders where the material and money for so many and such vast structures comes from; and still they build larger and finer ones. Sunday's Times gives the picture of an eighty story building which one of the architects has designed to be built later, if the city will permit. Right next door to our School here there is nearing completion now the highest hotel building in the world; it makes you dizzy to look up to the top of it. Perhaps the most amazing thing to me, though, amid all the amazing things about this city, is its transportation system. I never cease to marvel at it when I have occasion to go about over the city. In addition to its great system of busses and surface cars, whole trains of from three to eight coaches are shooting about in every direction over its network of elevated and subway railways. There is at least one place, if not more, where two surface lines cross each other with two elevated trains, one above the other, crossing above them, and two subways, one below the other, run underneath! The city is fairly honeycombed underneath with railways in all directions, and how these enormous buildings stand with so many subways running under them is beyond me. Yet with all this the city is unable to handle satisfactorily its vast moving throngs, and now has a commission in Europe to study the problem in their chief cities with the hope of getting further suggestions for the better handling of the traffic. It is not so surprising though, what a serious situation this creates when you keep in mind that there are crowded together here in this one city and its suburbs over three times as many people as there are in the entire State of Mississippi. Then, much could be said about her art galleries, her parks, her financial center—now the greatest in the world—her ocean-going vessels making every port on both sides of the globe, her foreign quarters, and many other things of equal interest, but time forbids.

There is, however, another great opportunity for learning and inspiration which New York affords of which I'll take time to speak: its great churches. This is another peculiar advantage a preacher has in coming here for study. She boasts some of the outstanding preachers in the world. Unfortunately, the summer season finds most of these away on their vacations, but in some instances their pulpits are filled by men of equal if not greater force. Dr. John Kelman is away from his pulpit at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, but Robert E. Speer is filling it during the month of July. In my humble judgment there is no man in America his equal as a Christian speaker and leader. It thrilled me to hear him again from this great pulpit. I had the privilege of a brief interview with him, and in the course of his remarks he said the death of our own Bishop Lambuth was a great loss to the church as a whole.

For the first time I have just heard that famous Scotch preacher, John McNeill. He preaches with the emotion and fervor that one might expect at a Methodist camp meeting. Dr. White says he regards him as the greatest preacher in New York. His case strikingly supports the contention that a preacher ought to be at his best after he reaches 60, for Dr. McNeill lacks only one year of 70! 'Tis a great pity his church is so far out from the heart of the city.

Dr. Stratton, at the Calvary Baptist Church, is well worth hearing. He is a fighter and has made himself felt here in this great city. He turns his prayer meetings, which are well attended for this city, into meetings of testimony or praise.

There seems to be no outstanding church or preacher in the Methodist church here, though Dr. Goodell preaches from different pulpits of the city occasionally. I had hoped to hear, out of curiosity, Drs. Fosdick and Grant, but they are out of the city at this time.

The missions down on the East Side and in other sections of the city are of great interest and are doing a fine work with humanity's "driftwood," though I've understood that prohibition has greatly relieved them of this load. This is a mighty Roman Catholic stronghold; the city government is in its hands, and Protestantism has an up-hill pull here.

Altogether, it is a wonderful city; this place where everything is in the superlative degree and where the ends of the earth meet, and it will be well worth any preacher's time and money to spend awhile here in study and [illegible]. I am thankful, however, that I [illegible] all my days here. It's very [illegible] religion, as well as [illegible]. Truly it is a modern Babylon.

THE RELOCATION OF SCARRITT.

Bishop McMurry says: "In my judgment, there is but one proper course open to those in authority, and that is to locate the new Scarritt in connection with one of the universities owned and controlled by the church. If these universities, which have cost the church so much, are not of such character and standing as to justify such a relationship, let it be said in the open."

It has been "said in the open" hundreds of times by scores of Methodists that Emory and Southern Methodist University "are not of such character and standing to justify such a relationship," and that no loyal Methodist should patronize them. That charge is based on the fact that both teach the "modern" view of the Bible, rather than the mediaeval view. Certainly Scarritt should be placed in such environment as that, rather than near the cast-off toggery of belated, revamped Calvinism, Moody Bible Institute for instance.

Of a certain obscurantist book recently from the press the Methodist Review says: "This vigorous bit of controversy from the obscurantist point of view is an illustration of the rationalistic character of superorthodoxy. To compel the Bible to conform to a priori theories of verbal inspiration, to insist that a man must not believe in evolution to be a Christian—what are such benighted views but placing religion on an intellectual rather than a moral and spiritual basis? Surely there are folks who believe the world to be flat and some that thought it round that got to heaven. The most dangerous rationalism of to-day is that which places obstacles in the way of educated folks accepting Jesus Christ as their Saviour. And this book does it."

This witness is true. If mediaevalism, literalism, obscurantism are to dominate Methodism we will not in another generation have an intelligent constituency.

THE SUPREMACY OF LOVE.

By Dwight E. Marvin

When faith and hope [illegible] within
 And their full power unite,
Each one the other beauty gives
 And love shines forth, as light

Faith turns its vision toward the cross—
 Hope looks beyond the seen;
But wonderful! Oh wonderful!
 Love fills the while between.

We give not God the name of faith,
 Nor pray to hope above,
But looking up with trustful hearts,
 Declare that "God is Love."

Faith ends in glorious vision bright,
 Hope in future peace;
But love eternally abides
 Its power can never cease

MY MOTHER.

My mother is my heart's ideal
  Of all that's dear and good.
Her life is radiant with love
  And gracious womanhood.
She's sympathetic, gentle, kind;
  She understands a lad;
And O, she's just the truest friend
  A fellow ever had!

My mother never turns me down
  Or fails me when in need.
To sacrifice herself and serve
  Her loved ones is her creed.
She practices her faith in God
  With joy and eagerness;
Her ministry's a miracle
  Of sweet unselfishness.

My mother is my pal of pals;
  She's all the world to me!
I owe her everything I am
  And all I hope to be.
I want to live a life like hers,
  And O, I want to prove Myself deserving of her faith
  'And worthy of her love!

THE KIND LITTLE WAGON.

"Here, Bobby," called mother to her little son as he was hauling his little sister in a wheelbarrow, "run over to the new grocery and get me some soap. I like cash stores, but it is a little inconvenient when they don't deliver."

Bobby came back beaming. "O, mother, he's the nicest old man with the funniest name. Guess what it is."

"'Joke'?" asked mother, gravely. "Or 'Monkey?' Those are the funniest things I know."

"O, now, mother, you know I didn't mean funny that way. I meant queer. The first part is the last part, but the last part is not always the first part."

"Why, that is queer," owned his mother. "I could never guess it in the world."

"It's 'Rainwater!'" cried Bobby; "but he declares he's not soft."

Mother laughed. "He must be a jolly old fellow."

He was. In a week all the kiddies in the neighborhood knew him for a friend. One day when Bobby went to buy something the old man said: "Young man, you got a wagon?"

"No, sir," Bobby answered; "but I can carry a lot in a basket."

"Thanks, sonny," said the old man, patting his shoulder; "but I don't want you to do an errand. Look here." He drew out from behind some barrels a bright red wagon all trimmed with gold. "Here's a wagon a lady left with me. Now she writes that she won't be back and for me to give the wagon to somebody. She says it is a kind little wagon, and I must give it to some one who will keep it so.'

"I'll try," said Bobby, not quite understanding; but—O, he did want that pretty wagon!

"Then you'll do," answered the old man heartily, and he put the tongue into Bobby's hand.

After Bobby showed the wagon to mother, he sat down on the back step to think. He had promised to try to keep it a kind little wagon; now he must find some way to do it.

"A kind little wagon," he said over to himself, and sat looking at it quite, quite still for some minutes; then he jumped up so quickly the wagon would have shied if there had been a pony hitched to it. "I know! I know!" he cried. 'A kind little wagon must do kind things. Course it can't by itself, so I must help it."

He looked all around eagerly. There lay a pile of wood and a stack of kindling. The very thing! Bobby piled the wagon full of wood and pulled it carefully up to the two low steps to the porch. In no time at all he had the wood box full and the kindling basket overflowing. After a little he heard mother go into the kitchen.

"Oh!" she cried. "What good brownie has been at work here?"

"The kind little wagon," laughed Bobby, gleefully. "Is there anything else it can do for you?'

"Yes, indeed!" cried mother, "and I am so glad. I want a bag of flour before daddy comes home, and I was wondering how I was going to get it."

So off went Bobby and the wagon, and soon the flour was bumping up the back steps.

"My!" cried mother, "its mighty nice to have a little son that knows how to keep a kind little wagon."

Bobby grinned happily and asked: "Can you spare us a few minutes now, mother?"

"Yes, indeed. I'll not need you any more this morning," she answered.

So off Bobby and the wagon whizzed through the back yard and up the alley to Mr. Rainwater's grocery. He was just in time. The old man was piling up a lot of things into a bag for a dear little white-haired lady who didn't look at all able to carry them

"Granny! Granny Snow! Wait!" called Bobby, as she was trying to gather them up. "Here's a kind little wagon come to take your things for you."

O, how her bright eyes twinkled under the snowy curls! And Mr. Rainwater nodded till his gray hair stood up in a peak.

"Well, well, well!" she laughed. "I didn't know there was anything like that around."

As they went on to the little brown house Bobby told her all about it. When she had thanked him and given him a cooky, she suddenly cried, "O! O! O!" and Bobby knew that she had thought of something fine. "Did you know that Tommie Jenkins has sprained his ankle so badly that he hasn't walked for a week? Look! There he is sitting at the window with old Rover begging him to come out. I just know he'd like a ride in a kind wagon."

Bobby waved his hand, and Tommie waved back and called, "Hello!" And in less than a dozen wags of Rover's tail Tommie's mother had put a pillow in the wagon, and Tommie was off for a ride.—Selected.

"BE A LADY."

Little Nellie had been taught never to put her fingers into her bowl of bread and milk, but always to use her spoon, like a little lady.

When she visited her grandfather one summer, she was allowed to eat her luncheon out on the stone step. One day a wee white pig came up and rudely pushed his little pink nose into her bowl of bread and milk. "O, O!" screamed the baby. "Be a lady! Take a 'poon, pig; take a 'poon!"—Selected.

THE WAY OF LIFE.

By Tracy Marie M'Connell.

I walked in the wood and was lonely,
  All things were desolate;
I saw in the stream myself only;
  I saw—and sighed at Fate.

I fought in a war-ridden land
  'Mid the surging tide of strife;
That my house was built upon sand
  I saw—and railed at Life.

I danced with the mistiest of moonbeams
  Down the crowded floor at the ball;
I saw that I had no place in her dreams,
  I saw—and deplored Adam's fall.

I confessed my faith in my Savior,
  I obeyed God's holy word;
I saw that I was forgiven;
  I saw—and loved Christ the Lord.

—Gospel Advocate.

Happiness consists in living for others; that is clear: Man aspires to happiness; therefore, it is a proper desire. If he tries to get it in a selfish way, in seeking wealth, glory, love, he may not succeed, and his wishes remain unsatisfied. Then it must be selfish desires that are wrong, and not the wish to be happy. Now, what are the dreams which may be realized apart from our outward circumstances? Only love and self-sacrifice.—Tolstoy.

If the world is to be taken as our parish, it will require a whole Christ and a united church to win.—Selected.

DEATH OF REV. E. L. ALFORD.

On Monday morning of this week, we received the following telegram from Rev. F. B. Ormond, our pastor at Tylertown, Miss.:

This sad news, while not unexpected, will come as a shock to the many friends of Brother Alford throughout the Mississippi Conference, of which he was a faithful and efficient member. Early in the year his health gave way at Logtown, where he was in the second year of a successful pastorate, and he was compelled to give up his loved employ. All that medical skill could do was done for his restoration, but in vain. During his illness he was tenderly ministered to by his devoted wife and family and by the friends who were privileged to be with him. Just a few weeks before his death, he sent a message of love to his brethren through the Advocate, bearing testimony to the fact that the way ahead was bright.

We extend sincere sympathy to the sorrowing loved ones. We shall expect a suitable memorial for publication in due time.

THE SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL—A CORRECTION.

In an editorial, "The Seashore Divinity School," which appeared in the Advocate of June 28, we used the following words: "The board of directors acceded to the request of Brother Ellis to be relieved of the presidency, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year," etc. In making that statement, we unintentionally and unconsciously fell into error in that Brother Ellis did not request to be relieved of the presidency. He did offer his resignation as a member of the board of directors, which the board declined to accept; but he did not request to be relieved of the presidency.

We make this correction at the request of Brother Ellis and in justice to ourselves, and in order that the record may be exactly in keeping with the facts.

THE PLAN OF UNIFICATION.

By Hon. H. H. White.

I hesitate greatly to go into print on this subject, but I feel that I am largely responsible for the plan which was adopted and that, therefore, a few words on the subject from me are permissible.

I would never have accepted membership on either the old or the new Commission unless I had felt that the two great branches of American Methodism should have some form of union.

This was, in my opinion, desirable for several reasons, among them being the following:

(a) To reduce overhead expense of administration.

(b) To reduce friction on the borders.

(c) To consolidate, as far as possible and desirable, the various semi-fiscal agencies of the churches, such as Publishing, Church Extension, Education, etc., etc., etc.

(d) To consolidate the missionary enterprises of the two churches, particularly in the great foreign fields. The importance of this can hardly be stressed too much.

(e) To allay the continual agitation, which seems to amount to an urge, that past differences and wrongs be forgotten and the Methodists face the future, rather than the past.

(f) To set an example of consolidation of Protestant forces in face of what is feared by some to be a great resurgence of Romanism in this country.

(g) Because it will be a fine example making for the abolition of sectional lines, and the real union of our country, at a time when destructive forces are actively at work.

Of course, the plan proposed does not nearly accomplish all or perhaps any of these things, but it is, in the opinion of the writer, a step in the direction of all of them.

There were serious difficulties to be overcome, the principal one being a proper disposition of the negro question.

The writer, at the Savannah meeting of the Commission, clearly stated what he conceived to be the Southern position on this matter, viz., that the South would take the same attitude on this question in the church that it had taken in the State.

After many efforts the old Commission brought in, at its Louisville meeting a report for an absolute union of the churches. From this report I, with several others, dissented, and the plan was rejected or at least not adopted by the Northern General Conference.

At that meeting, however, I moved for a plan of close federation. This plan was ruled out of order as being beyond the scope of the powers of the Southern Commission to consider. The proposition, however, was allowed to be filed and became of record.

The powers of the Southern Commission were extended by the Hot Springs General Conference; and at the Cincinnati meeting the plan which I had proposed at Louisville was adopted in principle, and a sub-committee of sixteen appointed to elaborate it. This sub-committee of sixteen met at St. Louis and adopted a unanimous report; this report was presented at the late Cleveland joint meeting of the Commissions, and was, after being perfected in many ways, adopted as published in the church press.

There are many and perhaps serious objections to the plan; but practically all of the objections which the writer has heard can be urged against any plan.

This proposed plan is a loose federation, rather than an absolute union; and this is perhaps the strongest objection which will be brought against it in the North. It provides for the autonomy of each church as it now exists, with full integrity of its property, membership, ministry, bishopric and administration. Nothing is committed to the United General Conference, except such things as are expressly delegated to it; and no action can be taken by that General Conference without the separate concurring vote of each Jurisdictional Conference.

The bishops of one jurisdiction cannot preside at a conference of the other jurisdiction without invitation from the bishops of that jurisdiction; no law can be passed which will bind either jurisdiction without its consent.

I think that it fully and absolutely preserves white supremacy in the Southern Church, as we have preserved it in the Southern States, and that if we want a unification under any conditions whatever, we can safely take it under the form of Federation proposed.

Doubtless the plan will be much discussed, weaknesses may be disclosed and amendment may from time to time be necessary. The writer feels, however, that a successful start has been made along the right lines, and hopes that good will result to the great church to which we owe allegiance, and to the glory of God.

THAT BOY PROBLEM.

By Fred H. Rindge, Jr., in the Christian Herald.

For many years our obvious attitude toward the problem of childhood was one of smug complacency, expressed by, "Oh well, boys will be boys!" Today we are facing stern realities, with the dynamic reminder: "Boys will be men!" What kind of men? It is for us to decide. The future presidents of the United States are now playing baseball! How are they being prepared?

The home, school, church, industry and community are the principal influences affecting boy life. Therefore, if we are to develop the right kind of men, we must assist every one of these agencies to function properly and to co-operate with each other in attaining the highest objective. The basis of an ideal program of boys' work was discovered centuries ago when a lad in Judea "increased in wisdom and in stature and in favor with God and man." Analyzed, these words mean intellectual, physical, spiritual and social development.

The Government, in its Children's Bureau, Health, Labor and Educational Departments, has been rendering very effective service in improving child welfare legislation, making surveys and campaigning for better conditions. Over 3,000,000 boys and young men have been reached in a single year by the gospel of health and right living through the Keeping Fit Campaign, with its convincing posters, stereopticon slides and literature. State and Municipal Departments of Health, Education, Labor and Recreation are increasingly active in these fields of service. Last year five hundred cities spent approximately $10,000,000 in playground work. One recalls with enthusiasm the statement of a Juvenile Court Judge: "Bill has been so busy stealing bases on the ball-field this summer that he had no time to steal anything else!"

All problems of boyhood are by no means confined to cities. The rural boy has his own peculiar needs, which are being partly met by the school, church, grange, county Y. M. C. A. and other organizations. Last year more than [illegible] boys were members of agricultural clubs, competing with each other in raising corn, potatoes, wheat, cotton, chickens, sheep, etc. It is interesting that these clubs also aim to develop the "head, hand, heart and health" of their members, and grant points [illegible] for efficiency.

There are [illegible] boys and girls in the public schools [illegible] taught by [illegible] teachers. The people who pay [illegible] in taxes to support these schools have a right to demand thoroughly adequate moral as well as cultural instruction.

Home, church, Y. M. C. A. and community must co-operate with the schools to the full in realizing this ideal. The "Hi-Y" movement has been spreading rapidly in the high schools until it has enrolled over 55,000 members. This movement enlists the boys for the "Four C's"—clean living, clean speech, clean scholarship and clean athletics—and where it really takes hold absolutely revolutionizes the spirit, purpose and life of the boys.

THE LAST RIDE.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

"The camel black kneels at the gate,
My lord, and chief of all our band,
All sons of men sure soon or late
Must ride this beast to farther land."

The chieftain smiled and murmured low,
"Long years I've waited for this ride,
Be then his pace full fast or slow,
I'll fare with him what'e'er betide.

"The Lord of Life and Lord of all,
Hath sent for me and I obey,
All life is his, both great and small—
His own he gathers day by day.

"Since I am his, no claim I have
To longer abide a moving tent.
With joy I mount his willing slave;
Before my time he hath not sent.

"The way is far, to unknown land,
And none from thither e'er return;
In silence deep an unseen band,
No track they leave, their tents they burn.

"Sayest thou yon beast is somber black
That kneels so close beside the gate!
Sure, sure, some vision thou dost lack,
Or seeing false is thy sad fate.

"For all his coat is splendid white,
His trappings rich—like nightly stars
Shine full serene in purest light;
With joy I'll ride beyond earth's bars."

And wondered much his kinsman true
Said they, "The Master Great did call
And camel white did bear him through,

"From land of seen to land unseen,
From black to white, from dark to light,
No doubt did mar his vision keen
In seeing saw with wondrous sight."

A BRIEF TRIBUTE TO PROF. R. A. SMITH AND MRS. M. W. EGAN.

PROF. SMITH AND MRS. EGAN were brother and sister. He was 82 years old and she was 87 when they went away to join the company of the redeemed on May 8, and June 4, of this year.

Captain Jessie Smith, the father of Prof. Smith and Mrs. Egan, moved from Houston County, Ga., in 1848 to Mount Lebanon, La. He was the father of fifteen children, nine daughters and six sons, of whom five are yet living: Dr. R. W. Smith and Mrs. George McDade, of Dubberly; Mrs. A. D. Leary, of Shreveport; J. B. Smith, of Coushatta, and Mrs. Nena Levins, of Mount Lebanon.

Prof. Smith is survived in his immediate family by his wife, daughter, Miss Ione of Lake Charles, Carter Smith of Oakdale, Dr. Morgan Smith of Jennings, and Walker Smith of Cuba. Mrs. Egan is survived by one son, H. A. Perryman, of Shreveport.

Prof. Smith was educated at Mount Lebanon, Centenary and Homer Colleges. Mrs. Egan was graduated from the Minden College in 1864.

In 1872 Prof. Smith was elected president of Mount Lebanon College. In 1878 he was elected president of the Homer College. In 1883 he moved to Arcadia and established the "A. E. Seminary" in honor of his mother. Here he gave twenty-five years of the best service of his life. After this, he taught at Monroe, Trenton, Abita Springs, and Mermentau.

Mrs. Egan gave a half century of efficient service to the public schools of Louisiana. While both she and her brother were greatly advanced in age, they were active in school work nearly to the end of the way. She taught in the public schools of Red River Parish during her 86th year, and the superintendent of education in the parish had this to say of her: "We have no more efficient and thoroughly up-to-date teacher than Mrs. Egan." Only eternity can reveal the magnitude of the service rendered by this brother and sister of such heroic mould.

A hundred years given to the cause of Christian education is a great contribution for any family to make, and for two members of a family to give a hundred years is an example that is exceedingly rare and has come within the reach of but few families anywhere. Not only the length of this service makes it so remarkable, but the quality of it as well. Prof. Smith and Mrs. Egan were truly great teachers. They knew how to impart information as few did—and more, they knew how to create the highest ideals of patriotism and religion.

Prof. Smith was among the first to respond to the call of arms at the outbreak of the Civil War. He was twice wounded, first at the second battle of Manassas, and next at the battle of Gettysburg, where he was shot through the body. He was taken captive in this wounded condition, and languished long in a Northern prison —even to the end of the war.

The climax, the crowning glory, of the service rendered by Prof. Smith and Mrs. Egan, was in the realm of the spiritual, for Christ and his kingdom. Prof. Smith was converted and joined the Methodist church when he was fourteen years old, and Mrs. Egan came into the church when she was but a child. They probably gave more than a hundred years to the Sunday school. They served the church in almost every capacity during their long and eventful lives.

It was my good fortune to be the pastor of Prof. Smith at Lake Charles and of Mrs. Egan at Noel Memorial. I knew them intimately, and loved them. They came down to the end of their earthly pilgrimages without any feeling of bitterness, without any tinge of pessimism. They had an unshaken faith in God, in the church, and in folks. They believed in the ultimate triumph of Christ's Kingdom in the world. To them, the best days were ahead. Their going was like the end of a perfect day. There was not a cloud in the sky. With their earthly task completed, they went to sleep with a "radiant faith in the new morn."

RESOLUTIONS.

Since God in his all-wise providence has seen fit to remove from our midst our classmate, BROTHER WILLIAMS, therefore be it Resolved:

1. That we, the Truth Seekers Bible class of the Methodist Sunday school of Vaiden, Miss., do hereby express our deep sorrow and deplore our loss, as he will be greatly missed by each of us. He was sure to be present at the opening of Sunday school at 9:45 o'clock, and nothing seemed to give him more pleasure than to attend all church gatherings to worship our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. But, alas! his voice is no longer heard, he no longer answers to the roll call on Sunday morning. His place is vacant, and the family circle is broken.

2. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the members of our beloved brother's family, with assurance of intense sorrow, sincere sympathy, and heartfelt prayers for each of them.

3. That a copy be furnished the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Signed by: Mr. E. J. Bayeth, Mrs. Frank Myrer, Mrs. G. W. Gordon, committee.

RESOLUTIONS.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Haynesville Methodist church has suffered an irreparable loss in the going away of our beloved co-worker, MRS. BESSIE MILLER STONECIPHER, who went to be with her Heavenly Father July 29, 1923.

Therefore, be it Resolved:

1. That we, the members of the Missionary Society, extend to her loved ones our love and sympathy, and pray that they may look to the Divine Healer for help in this their great affliction.

2. That her unswerving love, her untiring devotion and patient submission to God's will be emulated by her co-workers.

3. That while we shall miss her, we thank God for her life, and the influence she exerted here.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the husband and the family, one to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, one to the Haynesville News, for publication, also a copy on minutes of Woman's Missionary Society.

Signed by: Mrs. Carolyn Dawson, Mrs. S. L. Green, Mrs. Loy L. Beene, committee.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, in the wisdom of our Heavenly Father, our friend and sister, MRS. MARY A. DIGGS, has passed from this life to the life eternal; and,

Whereas, in her death the Acona Woman's Missionary Society has lost one of its most worthy members, being patient, humble and faithful, always interested in every movement of the church;

Therefore, be it Resolved, That we bow in humble submission to his will, and extend to the bereaved family our deepest sympathy, pointing them to God, who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That in our sorrow for the loss of this faithful member, may we recall,

"The dead are like the stars,
By day withdrawn from mortal eye,
But not extinct, they hold their way
In glory through the sky.
Spirits from bondage thus set free,
Vanish amidst immensity,
Where human thought, like human sight,
Fails to pursue their trackless flight."

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the Society, a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the Lexington Advertiser for publication.

Signed by: Mrs. J. A. Patterson, A. L. Booth, Jordan Bailey, J. C. Booth, committee.

THE BEGINNING OF MAN.

I could not do without Thee,
O Saviour of the lost,
Whose precious blood redeemed me
At such tremendous cost;
Thy righteousness, thy pardon,
Thy precious blood must be
My only hope and comfort,
My glory and my plea.

I could not do without Thee,
I cannot stand alone,
I have no strength or goodness,
No wisdom of my own:
But Thou, beloved Saviour,
Art all in all to me,
And weakness will be power
If leaning hard on Thee.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

FROM ZWOLLE, LA.

Perhaps a line or two from a newcomer would be in order.

We have come through what the people of Zwolle claim to be one of the greatest revival meetings they have had for some time. The meeting started Sunday, July 1, and ran through to July 15, the pastor doing the preaching, with Rev. Otis Spinks, of Asbury College, evangelistic singer, in charge of the singing.

We had a glorious time and the Lord greatly blessed our efforts. The meetings were held each morning and night under a large gospel tent, and it was always seated and many standing on the outside. People responded to the truth of Jesus, and there were in all about fifty professions, and we received into church fellowship twenty-three, and there are some five or six that will join us later.

The board of stewards kindly co-operated with us in securing the tent and bearing all the burdens of the meeting (if there were any such things as burdens), but it seemed a pleasure to all to help. No drive was made for money at all, but just somehow $325 came into the treasurer's hands, and the board of stewards remembered the pastor with a donation of $100, paid the salary in full to date, and paid the singer and all other expenses, with some left in hand.

Last Wednesday night at our mid-week prayer meeting we had forty-two people present, which is a vast improvement over the crowd of four we had the first night we were with our folk for prayer meeting. This Wednesday night we are expecting fifty people for prayer meeting. God grant it.

Our regular church services are well attended, and the Epworth League is swelling things at this time. Last night (Sunday, Aug. 5) they rendered a missionary program that was simply great, after which the pastor preached to a full house.

The Sunday school is doing nicely under the supervision of our worthy superintendent, Brother S. H. Porter. We are planning greater things for our Sunday school here, and hope to make it a standard school by the time of the Annual Conference.

I will not hesitate to mention also that there have been since the meeting a few hints relative to Zwolle's having a new house of worship. May the great and good Lord not only give our people inspiration for this, but may they lose perspiration for it. We are in great need of a new plant here for worship and to take care of our Sunday school. May this soon be realized!

With best wishes to you and the Conference organ, we are,

Yours in the Cause,

FLOYD B. DICK.

A REFLECTION UPON PROTESTANTISM.

Mr. Editor: Charlie Chaplin's late picture, "The Pilgrim," was shown in Gulfport lately. It ridicules the Protestant religion, and I think it is about time that some of the churches should make a protest.

Be sure and see this picture if you can, so you will be in a position to criticize it. Charlie is represented in the guise of a minister, and he cuts up all kinds of "monkey shines" in the church. The leading elder or deacon of the church is an old hypocrite who goes to church with a bottle of whiskey in his back pocket, which Charlie steals. The choir and leading church members are represented by a lot of idiotic-looking simpletons without common sense. The whole show ridicules devout church members.

The picture shows are largely patronized by children with immature minds, who would be easily influenced by such nonsense, ridiculing devout Christians, who are shown in the picture to be senseless simpletons. Charlie Chaplin would not dare to show this picture as a Catholic priest cutting up didos in a Catholic church before statues of the Holy Virgin and Christ. Why do Protestants stand for it?

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WEST, M. D.

REVIVAL AT WHITE'S CHAPEL.

I have just returned from a great revival meeting at White's Chapel, where Rev. E. V. Duplantis is pastor. Rev. A. J. Martin, of St. Martinville, led the singing, and rendered other very valuable help; and whatever he did was well done. Never have I enjoyed more delightful or profitable fellowship with brethren than with these two young Frenchmen. Duplantis is a consecrated and painstaking pastor, and an ideal host; while Martin, in addition to being sweetly clean and religious, possesses an extraordinary number of accomplishments, all of which add to his popularity and efficiency as a preacher.

White's Chapel, which was once a full-time station, is in the center of one of Louisiana's best rural communities, nine miles from Bunkie and thirty-two miles from Opelousas, on the Pershing Highway. The church stood idle for a long time, until a few good women resolved to secure a pastor and have the work resumed. Brother Duplantis has done an admirable work of rehabilitation, and I found there a live church and some seventy members.

From the first service, the attendance was fine, and the interest good. As Wesley used to say: "While I preached, seriousness sat on every face." My wife being still lame from her injuries received on the Fourth of July, I had to make frequent trips home; and this, with the two services a day, worked me pretty hard. One Sunday I left home, drove thirty miles to the church, held three heavy services, returned home that night, and next day went sixty-five miles in the opposite direction, conducted a funeral, returned home, then went to White's Chapel and preached that night, having driven 190 miles that day.

But the work was well rewarded. On last Sunday morning it was my privilege to receive into the church for Bro. Duplantis a record-breaking class. It was a class of eighteen, mostly mature people. The record-breaking part was that one of the new converts was a lady 81 years old—the oldest person I have ever seen taken into the church—and with her came her son, a grandson, and two great-grandchildren: four generations of one family in one class! I have never known anything like this. That night, thirteen more came in. The total baptisms were 27; total members received, 31. And there were others who professed faith in Christ. The Spirit of God was truly present in power. Let us pray for this community and its pastor, that grace may abound for future growth.

Brother Martin filled my pulpit in Oakdale last Sunday, morning and evening, to the delight of our people.

ARTHUR MADISON SHAW.

FROM MOUNT PLEASANT, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: The work on Mount Pleasant circuit moves on nicely. During the month of June the Sunday school observed Children's Day. Union Sunday school gave an interesting program the first Sunday evening to a large audience.

The second Sunday morning the new Salem Sunday school rendered a beautiful program to a packed house. The third Sunday in June, the Mount Pleasant Sunday school gave the pageant, "The Way, the Truth, the Life," to a large crowd.

The fifth Sunday in July the revivals started, beginning at Union Church. There was great rejoicing among God's people, and it was a time of power. The entire circuit felt the influence of the meeting. There were six additions to the church, twenty conversions, and the whole church baptized with the Holy Spirit. We are expecting Evangelist Robinson to hold a tent meeting at Mount Pleasant the first week in September. We are praying for a sweeping revival then.

A MOTHER'S PRAYER.

In a [illegible] of [illegible] where in[illegible] [illegible] of the spiritual life, one of the [illegible], a [illegible] [illegible], arose and related this incident of his early life. One night, he said, when he was a boy on the old farm, he went to bed as usual in the [illegible] and just as he was dozing off to sleep he heard a familiar footfall on the uncarpeted stairway. He knew quite well who it was, but he thought he would feign sleep and see what she might do. Slowly, on tiptoe lest she might waken him, she went to the end of the long chamber, put her candle down upon the old-fashioned bureau, took a hard-bottomed chair that stood nearby, and bringing it to his bedside, knelt down and buried her face in her hands. Never had his heart beat so fast or so loud, he declared, as it did that night. It seemed as if he must undeceive her by raising up in bed, reaching his arms around her neck and giving her a kiss that had more love in it than any he had ever planted on her fond face. But he restrained the impulse, and, instead, she arose after the lapse of many minutes and kissed him; then carried the chair back to its place, took the candle and went downstairs. But he did not go to sleep. It was long after midnight ere his drowsiness returned, and all through those long hours, he told us, two great thoughts kept coursing through his mind and heart. The first was, with such a mother praying for me, what manner of man I ought to become; and the second, I must see to it that nothing that I am responsible for comes between those prayers and their answer. He concluded the incident by saying that the memory of that evening had chastened his whole life, and often since entering the ministry the thought of his mother's prayer had proved a source of inspiration and strength.—John Balcom Shaw.

Take my poor heart and let it be
Forever closed to all but Thee;
Seal Thou my breast, and let me wear
That pledge of love forever there.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Leaflets on the observance of Children's Week will be sent to those making application for same. The date suggested is Oct. 14-21. The subjects suggested for use are as follows:

"The Parent and the Child"; "Teaching Respect for God's House"; "Good Citizens"; "What Can We Do to Make the Home the Church, and the Community a Better Place for Our Children"?

The churches that have observed this week in the past testify that it has been altogether worth while. If you are a friend to little children, try this program.

The Grenada District training school being held at Durant this week has an enrollment of forty, and it is possible that we shall issue twenty certificates. One pastor and one superintendent are among the number. Three churches are represented. If the teachers knew what we are doing to help them in their work, we would have more than a hundred in attendance.

Miss Kate Payne Owens, one of our Grenada College girls, taught a class of twelve at Jonestown; nine took the examination. This is creditable to the teacher and the people. Miss Owens will teach a class at Ashland, Benton County, next week.

Not long since, a young woman wrote to know if it was too late to observe Sunday School Day. It is late, but not too late. A hundred schools ought to do this much for the children in the next three months.

Brother McIntosh held a great meeting at Thrasher recently. He wrote me that fifteen young people had signified their intention to attend the school to be held at Booneville, Aug. 27. Another friend told me that a wealthy citizen of Booneville had agreed to pay twenty dollars toward the building of a church for each one that attended the school. This is making one dollar do the work of two dollars.

If you wish to organize an intermediate, a senior, or a young people's class, write to Mrs. W. N. Duncan, Drew, Miss. If you need help in organizing an adult class, write Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, Lula, Miss. An organized class is worth ten times as much as an unorganized class.

MINNIE-BELLE'S GARDEN.

By S. L. Bacon.

Minnie-Belle was a little suspicious when Tommy Ray handed her a small white package tied carefully with a red drug-store string. She looked at him hesitatingly, for Tommy had played more than one practical joke on her.

"It's seeds for your garden," said Tommy gruffly, "want 'em?"

Minnie-Belle took the package. She could feel the little hard seeds as she pressed her thumb and forefinger against them. Her face glowed, for Minnie's garden was her especial treasure this spring. Mamma had let her have a little bit of ground for her very own, and already she had planted cheerful, bright-colored portulaca flowers and jolly marigolds and velvety petunias. Tommy's gift should be among these. She ran all the way home, eager to tell Mamma.

"I don't think Tommy's quite so hateful as I thought," she said; "he's improvin' since the day he put that horrid old locust in my lunch basket and it buzzed and buzzed 'til I was scared to open it."

Mamma smiled. "I'm very glad," said she, "and perhaps Tommy just needs a friend. Remember he hasn't any mother."

Minnie planted her seeds carefully. She smiled at Tommy next day and gave him a cooky. He had a frog which he had intended to put in her desk, but as he ate the cooky he decided that he would let it go instead.

Minnie-Belle saw it hopping happily away, and gave Tommy another cooky.

"My, but you're improvin'," said she.

Every day the little girl watered her garden and watched the little green heads peeping up. One day she said to Mamma:

"Tommy Ray's got the mumps, an' he can't eat. He's got 'em in both sides, same as I had. I'm real sorry for him, 'cause he won't get to say his piece Friday, an' he knew it fine."

"Why, that's too bad," said Mamma.

Minnie-Belle looked thoughtful, and after a minute she said:

"'Member that good jelly you made me when I had 'em? It was so slippy and nice, it didn't hurt to eat. I—I b'lieve I'd like to take Tommy some. I don't b'lieve his aunt knows how to make things like mothers do."

Mamma smiled. "I made some custard for tea," she said, "and you might take Tommy a glass; that is easy to eat."

"Oh, goody," cried Minnie-Belle, and she hopped over to Mamma and gave her a big hug.

Tommy looked very funny with his face tied up and so swollen that his nose, which was a very buttony nose, had nearly disappeared. But Minnie-Belle didn't laugh; she held out the pretty glass dish of custard.

"I brought you somethin' easy to eat," said she, "'cause I know how bad mumps hurts, 'specially when you have 'em double. An' oh, Tommy, your seeds are comin' up fine."

Tommy did not look at Minnie-Belle; he just grunted. His aunt took the dish, thanking the little girl warmly. But Minnie-Belle was disappointed that Tommy did not say anything.

"But I reckon he feels awful bad," she thought.

Tommy did feel bad, and he felt worse when he tasted the custard and found how good it was.

It was the very next day that Minnie-Belle burst into the kitchen where tears running down her cheeks and her little face was all twisted in anger.

"Oh, Mamma," she exclaimed, "Tommy Ray is the very meanest, most hateful boy! His seeds came up jus' like truly flowers, an' here, they're nothing but horrid, bad-smellin' weeds; they'll kill my other pretty flowers. Oh, I just hate him!"

"Hush, dear," said Mamma, "don't you see you are changing that pretty flower of love to a horrid weed of hate? Are you going to spoil your lovely mind garden and choke it with ugly weeds?"

Minnie was silent, and after awhile she stopped crying and went slowly from the room.

That day Tommy was so much better that the doctor said he could have anything he wanted.

His aunt asked him, "What would you like, Tommy-boy?"

"Don't want nothin'," grunted Tommy. "I—I jus' want you to get me a red geranium with a big flower on it."

"Why, I will," said Aunt Lucy, smiling. She thought, "How sickness has changed Tommy; I thought he'd ask for a wienie, I'm so glad he loves flowers."

She found a lovely red geranium growing finely and hurried to take it to Tommy.

The next morning, just as the sun was getting out of bed, a little boy crept downstairs and outdoors. The dew was making fairy lace on the grass and on Minnie-Belle's flowers. Tommy took hold of the tough, ugly weeds and then he put the pot with the pretty red flower in the place and scampered back home and to bed, without any one but an inquisitive cat on the fence seeing him.

"Oh, Mamma, look," she called, "hurry, an' see my beautiful, beautiful flower! An' Mamma, dear, be sure to put two of everything in my lunch basket."—The Advocate.

AN APPRECIATION OF REV. E. L. WHIDDON.

We, the undersigned heirs of the Mrs. C. V. Whiddon estate, having voluntarily selected Rev. E. L. Whiddon, without his knowledge (he being 4,000 miles away at the time of his selection), as our chairman and spokesman, knowing he would be absolutely fair and impartial to all heirs concerned and knowing the exceedingly delicate mediatorial position in which we have placed him, wish to say his words, deeds and actions were all we could expect of our brother in the flesh and as a minister under the conditions which no one could know but the heirs concerned.

His actions were characterized by absolute unselfishness, heavy financial sacrifices, almost to the extent of his part of the estate, and devotion to the interest of other heirs more than himself.

ENFORCING THE LAW.

A just proportion of taxation and a strict enforcement of the law is always a fine thing for the other fellow, which is one way of saying that too many of us are obsessed with the idea that we are immune from the provisions of the law. What is needed is that all of us should realize we are under the law and not delude ourselves to believe that we are above it. The instant this happens we become bad citizens, for those who willfully evade the law are not far from violating it outright.

And this assertion applies to all laws. It is a violation of the law for one to carry a pistol concealed, and yet there are many persons who do not regard this law as applying to themselves, and they violate it without the slightest pricking of conscience. We have game laws, making it unlawful to kill certain kinds of game at certain periods of the year, but men violate this law and they do not believe that they have done any great wrong. Those who violate these laws, if asked whether or not they believe them to be good, will unhesitatingly say they do, but regard them as having been enacted for the other fellow.

It is the same with the Prohibition Law. Thousands and tens of thousands cry aloud for the law and its enforcement, and yet they do not hesitate to buy liquor when they want it and can get it. They think Prohibition is a fine thing for the other fellow, but do not regard the law as having been enacted for their benefit, when, without doubt, they were among those who insisted upon its enactment.

We must get away from the illogical reasoning that the law is a respecter of persons; all of us must have proper respect for it, otherwise we shall go from bad to worse until a state of anarchy and chaos shall exist throughout the nation, and those who are regarded as being the best citizens—the leaders of the land, those who are regarded as being the WAY, both by precept and example—will have contributed more largely to lawlessness than any other class because they, to whom all are looking for leadership, are breaking down the law and trampling it under foot.

Associate Superintendent,

QUEER THINGS THE NATIVES DO.

Mrs. J. J. Davis.

It is not my intention to give native customs in this paper, but to give a few of the things that the natives do that make us laugh; and yet many of them are very provoking, especially if one is in a hurry or if their mistakes involve something important. Most of these instances are experiences with a "raw native," as we say. I mean by that one who has never been around white people and has never been in a white person's house. It will give some idea of what it means to try to teach one of this kind.

I took a new boy to do the washing. I helped him several weeks, showing him how to make the bluing water, thin the starch, etc. When I thought he knew how I wanted it done, I left him to himself. For several weeks he put too much bluing in the clothes, and, of course, each time I called his attention to it. Finally it dawned on me that he thought I wanted the clothes blue, so I asked him if he made them blue because he thought I wanted to change them to blue, to which he replied, "Yes." Then I tried to tell him that only a little bluing would make the clothes look white

One day a man came to Mr. Schaedel and asked him for a loan. The natives know that we do not uphold them in making debts, so Mr. Schaedel said to him, "I can't see you for the smoke." The man took him literally and went away. A little later he returned and said, "Chief, is the smoke gone?"

One night just after supper we heard a terrible crash of dishes. I found that the boy was trying to wash them in the dark and had knocked three cups off the shelf of the safe where he had put them. I asked him how he came to knock them off. He replied, "Mamma, I didn't knock them off, they just fell themselves." I then said, "You must have caught the dish-towel on them, then," but he insisted that they did it themselves. That is one thing you cannot get the natives to say—that they do anything of that kind. The thing always does it "it fell," or "it burned," "I didn't let it burn," etc.

Although these people have never had a written language and nothing from which they could get an idea, yet I have often gone around the school room and found more than one pupil, either child or grown person, writing from right to left, and the other day one woman started to read that way.

Perhaps the most amusing and yet the most provoking incident I have witnessed was when I gave my boy credit for as much common sense as is allowed, when he didn't deserve it. I gave him the lamp to fill and went with him to the storeroom to show him how to fill it. An empty box was on the floor near the oil tin, with the open side up. I said, "Now set the lamp on that box," thinking of course that he would either turn the box upside down or on one side, but instead of doing that he tried for several seconds to balance the lamp on the half-inch edge of the box. I was just watching to see what he would do, when to my surprise he turned the lamp loose. Of course it fell, but fortunately it was a brass lamp and the chimney was not on it.

My cook has been around the mission for years, so when we were putting up our little stove for housekeeping he stood and watched us. A few days later I said, "Mubala, the stove is smoking. I want you to clean it." After an unusually long time I still heard the stove rattling. On investigation I found that he had taken the whole top off the stove and was taking it all apart, pipe down, and all. He seemed surprised that he was not doing it right. He had been dishwasher in one of the kitchens before, so I supposed he knew how to clean the stove.

Once when Mrs. Schaedel was at another station, she told the boy to make a fire in the stove, and he built it in the oven. With this one I close, leaving it to you to guess the many other similar things they do before they learn.

WHAT IS THE WORLD SITUATION?

What is the world situation as to alcoholism and its curse of mankind? "Mexico has a prohibition president and several South American republics are considering prohibition. To recoup her financial conditions Austria will spend 50,000,000 kronen, $10,000, to start a prohibition campaign. Ireland is beginning a campaign for prohibition. Tell how prohibition has not only crossed the Atlantic but the Pacific. New South Wales, Australia, has elected a parliament that will submit prohibition to the voters of that State. New Zealand is to vote, and Australasia has adopted the slogan, 'Australasia the first dry continent.' Japan has the Sho Nemoto Prohibition Bill for minors, and India is asking for a temperance local option bill.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Newton District.

The Woman's Missionary Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Newton District, met in Forest, Miss., June 21, with thirty-four [illegible]egates present.

Notwithstanding the fact that Miss Lois Hunt, our district secretary, had been ill so much of the time, she had everything planned and carried out in detail with precision and ability.

We had several Conference officers present—Miss Ella Wayne Ormond, our efficient corresponding secretary, and others, which gave inspiration to all present.

Splendid reports were given by many of the Auxiliaries. We regretted that every Auxiliary did not have a representative.

Miss Stokes gave her experience of her first year's work in Scarritt Bible and Training School, which was inspiring to her hearers, and made all feel proud of her and her work.

Reports from Junior Auxiliaries were splendid, and it is encouraging to know how well the Young People are preparing themselves to take up a broader field of work as they grow to manhood and womanhood.

Our own Mrs. Bradley gave us some helpful talks as to how we can help the Young People to carry on their work. We wish many more mothers and fathers could have heard her. The young women of Forest especially are doing good work. They have a Bible class of twenty-two members, also a splendid mission study class.

We are gratified to report four young people who have offered their services for foreign work. They are: Rufus Oakey, Eleanor Cross, Johnnie B. Stanley, and Ruth Heflin, all of Forest.

Too much cannot be said of the good people of Forest and of the splendid work they are doing for their young people.

Mrs. Beanland, a Presbyterian missionary from Africa, gave two fine talks on the customs and needs of Africa. A little thought and sacrifice on our part would mean so much to them.

I am sure all present at this splendid meeting will want to go to Forest again, as we were all made to feel so much at home; we surely were received with open arms.

Philadelphia was chosen as the next meeting place.

MRS. HICKEY SO WEAK COULD HARDLY STAND

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health

Worcester, Mass. — "I had some trouble caused by a female weakness and got so run-down and weak from it that I could hardly stand or walk across the floor. The doctor gave me all kinds of pills, but nothing helped me. I happened to meet a friend who had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I thought I would try it. After taking it a week I began to improve, and now I feel fine and am doing all of my housework, including washing, sewing and house cleaning. I have recommended your medicine to my friends, and I am willing for you to use this letter as a testimonial, as I would like to help any one suffering the way I did from such a weakness."—Mrs. DELIA HICKEY, 4 S. Ludlow St., Worcester, Mass.

FROM WHITE'S CHAPEL, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: We closed on last Sunday night the greatest revival meeting that was ever held in White's Chapel Church. The meeting lasted two weeks and one day, including three Sundays, and thirty were added to the kingdom on profession of faith and one by letter. A great grandmother, eighty-one years young, joined the holy band, and three other generations with her, from the same family, making four generations that came in to the church at one time. It was beautiful to see her lead the children into the faith of our fathers, declaring: "Thy people shall be my people, and thy God shall be my God."

Rev. A. M. Shaw, of Oakdale, La., did the preaching, and I want to tell you that I don't think there are any better real gospel preachers in the Louisiana Conference. He has indeed learned to shorten the line without sacrificing the "doctrines that are cardinal in Christianity." Brother Shaw is a safe and sane gospel messenger, and I heartily recommend him as a winner of souls.

Rev. A. J. Martin, of St. Martinville, La., led the singing that captured the hearts of all that heard him. "There are sermons and songs," and Brother Martin knows how to apply them with the message of the hour to set in motion the chords of the human heart until they are in harmony with the spirit of God. His jolly disposition and sunny smiles win the favor of his audience wherever he goes. I have worked with him in a number of meetings, and I find him growing better every year. If you readers need a good, consecrated gospel singer, you'll make no mistake in getting A. J.

Yours frternally,

E. V. DUPLANTIS.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE NEAR EAST.

For six centuries the light of Christianity has been shining through Islam, and the efforts of the Mohammedans to exterminate the Christians of the Near East has failed, becauso the cross is the guidon of the Armenians.

Bringing a first-hand account of the massacre of Christians in the Levant to the Bible Conference of the Southern Methodist Church at Lake Junaluska, John M. Yonan, a young Persian Armenian, spoke to nearly 2,000 members on July 10 at the Southern Assembly grounds. Mr. Yonan was secured for the program by J. B. Ivey, of Charlotte, President of the North Carolina Sunday School Association.

"The Armenians have stood the test of martyrs and heroes," young Yonan, who was in the trenches before the Baku oil fields at the age of 14, declared, 'especially during tho late war. The aim of Islam was and has always been to get rid of them

"The question arises every day 'will they'? My answer to this question is 'No,' because these small Christian nations have been backed by a principle—justice—and because God and the Cross are their guidon. The Turk destruction of every food supply and source prevents them from fighting the battle alone.

"It is up to you, my friends, to help them. It is up to the Christian churches to succor them, or the lands where most of the scenes of the Old Testament were laid will pass into the hands of the Moslems. As you help them you will see their light get stronger, and some day their light will shine around the world.

"The problem is a great one. Do you remember when Christ walked to the Garden with three of his disciples? As he left them and knelt under a tree he said, 'God, may this cup run over, not as my will, but as thine.' It was a tremendous problem, but even he gave it into his hands. We should do the same thing.

"Yes, we can save all those who are afflicted if we only depend on him. They are calling to you now. Do you want to help them?

"Let the heart enlighten the head and the head direct the hand, and the hand never fear any kind of work for God's kingdom in our country."

LOOK UP!

By Ida Dwight Lyttle, in the Christian Herald.

Look up!
Sad heart, look up!
Tho' dark the cloud above:
No cloud can be too dark
For Him to pierce,
Whose name is love.

The dark
Is but a veil;
Within, He stands serene:
Somehow the cloud will part,
The meaning then
Be clearly seen.

But now—
Just wait—be calm—
Thy God is in command,
Know this: that when His time
Is ripe, just then
We'll understand.

A PREJUDICED PRESS.

An interesting side-light on the press and prohibition is provided by the London Evening News. This largely circulated journal recently published an interview with Mr. Albert Ottinger, the Assistant Attorney General of the United States, who is now on a visit to this country. The impression given by the interview was that the American people were not in favor of prohibition, and that the anti-color feeling had been a main factor in the securing of the famous Eighteenth Amendment. Mr. Ottinger has written to the Evening News disclaiming the statements of the interview. He asserts in detail that: "1. If a vote were taken in America the people would unquestionably vote 'dry' if it were a question of prohibition versus liquor. 2. The sentiment in favor of a restora- of 'beer and wine' is not sufficient to cause a change in the law. 3. The color-bar had nothing at all to do with the prohibition movement. I have never noticed any distinction in regard to drink between white and black persons." The publication of the disclaimer is a just step. But the distortion in the interview of the Attorney General's opinions is another evidence of the undue influence of the trade on the British press.—The Methodist Times, London.

"FRET NOT."

He who frets has lost his God—is in effect as if God were not.

Surely, it is worse than having no God, to kneel down and say, "Our Father who art in heaven," and then to go forth fretting and fearing, as if he never knew, or cared.

It is worse than being an orphan, to have a father and yet forget his love.

"Has he not a Father?" asks one in amazement. "Does not his Father love him?" says another. "Does not his Father know all about him?" says a third. "Is not his Father great and rich?" asks a fourth. "Has not his Father given us charge concerning him?" say they all "How then can he fret?"

If there be one grain of truth in our belief that there is a living God who holds us unutterably dear, who is seeking in all things and through all things ever to lead us to the highest, the fullest, the best, what room is there for us to fret or fear?—Mark Guy Pearse.

THE MIRACLE OF LEADERSHIP.

Followers are many. Real leaders are few. But wherever you find a leader you are face to face with a miracle. Here is a man who can enlist the following of others, attract them to his program, thrill them with his ideals, hold them by his appeal and knit them into unity. It would not be so wonderful if it were a company of animals that were made subject to a man's will, although even such leadership often reaches the realm of marvel. But where human beings are concerned, with all the divisive differences of personality, with all the dissipating force of individual peculiarities and pet hobbies, with all the vast range of variance in temperament, heritage, and training to find a leader over such diversity is to discover a miracle of God. The ability to lead is a divine endowment. The fact of leadership, the constraining influence of mind upon mind, of heart upon heart, is a perpetual miracle.—Dr. E. A. Leslie.

SUNBEAMS.

By Margaret E. Sangster, in the Christian Herald.

It's sunbeams shining through the trees,
And dancing on the grass,
And sunbeams toying with the breeze,
That sings and hurries past.
It's sunbeams on the lonely road,
And sunbeams in the park,
That rob dull trouble of his load,
And shun away the dark.

It's sunbeams smiling from the sky,
And skipping on the floor,
And sunbeams running swiftly by
To knock upon some door.
Or glimmer on some window-pane,
Or touch some friendless soul;
That rid the earth of sorrow's rain,
And make sad hearts seem whole!

It's sunbeams like a joyous band—
That touch us with delight,
That seem as gentle as a hand,
That make dim corners bright.
Just sunbeams, slender shafts of gold,
That soothe and heal and bless,
That bring to us a charm untold,
And endless happiness!

If you have a son and also a fortune, keep them apart.—Selected.

A FINE TRIBUTE TO GRENADA COLLEGE.

Dear Dr. Carley: We of Boyle circuit and especially of the New Salem Sunday school, were surely blessed in having in our midst Miss Ernestine Barnes, of the Grenada College extension team. She taught a training class in "Life in the Making," which is proving a great help to our school and in home life as well.

Miss Barnes is the highest type of young Christian womanhood. It is a privilege to know her. It is also inspiring to know we have a college that is turning out such characters and such efficient workers. May God bless Grenada College and her girls!

REVIVAL AT McCOMB, MISS.

One of the most successful and far-reaching revival campaigns that McComb, Miss., has experienced in a number of years has just come to a close. The services were conducted by Rev. Burke Culpepper, assisted by his able choir director, John U. Robinson.

While the meeting was conducted under the auspices of the Centenary Methodist Church, we had the helpful co-operation of all the churches of the city as well as the near-by towns.

Some of the visible results of the meeting were: 500 people came to the altar for prayer during the meeting; 90 people joined the different churches of the city, and 17 infants were baptized. Our congregations have increased since the meeting, and our people are showing a deeper interest in the religious life of our city.

THE GREAT COMMANDMENT.

When the Master said that the great commandment is, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind," and added, "And a second like unto it is this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," he did so in response to a direct question as to what the great commandment is. His words, therefore, have supreme significance to every individual who would know what is acceptable and well pleasing to God. Woe is he who violates the least of the commandments; now much heavier is the woe of him who violates the greatest of them all!

THE POSSIBILITIES OF LIFE.

In the tremendous thing of making a life, it may be helpful to remember that there are three possibilities—failure, mediocrity, success. Of total failures, there are few; of partial failures, there are all too many. Mediocrity is the highest mark reached by most of us. The tragedy of mediocrity does not lie in the fact itself, but in the fact that so many of us are satisfied with it. Mediocrity is not hard to reach, and it is easy to maintain. It means doing the usual thing in the usual way, its highest hope being merely to "get by." It takes no serious risks and it dares no great ventures. Italy may lie beyond the Alps—but those mountains! Success in the fullest sense comes only to those who "hitch their wagon to the stars" and aspire to the best always. A failure? Living upon the dead levels of mediocrity? Why not begin to climb?

THE MINISTRY OF SUFFERING.

The origin of suffering may be shrouded in mystery, but the ministry of suffering in the development of character is unmistakable. Suffering often turns our thoughts to God. The psalmist says: "When he slew them, then they inquired after him; and they returned and sought God earnestly. And they remembered that God was their rock, and the Most High God their redeemer." Suffering also oftentimes bring us to confession of our sins. When the plague of the serpents fell upon the people, they went to Moses and said: "We have sinned, because we have spoken against Jehovah, and against thee; pray unto Jehovah, that he take away the serpents from us." Suffering may restrain us from evil. The psalmist cried out in the bitterness of his own experience: "Before I was afflicted, I went astray; but now I observe thy word." Suffering frequently develops the beautiful grace of patience. Certainly suffering could well have been one of the temptations to which James referred when he said, "Count it all joy, my brethren, when ye fall into manifold temptations, knowing that the proving of your faith worketh patience." Suffering ministers to humility. Paul himself bears this testimony: "And by reason of the exceeding greatness of the revelations, that I should not be exalted overmuch, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, a messenger of Satan to buffet me, that I should not be exalted overmuch." Suffering also has the supreme mission of fitting us for heaven. The great apostle says again: "For our light affliction, which is for the moment, worketh for us more and more exceedingly an eternal weight of glory." We may not understand why suffering should fall to our lot; but let us endure it without murmuring, bravely, as good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

BISHOP CANNON PROTESTS.

After hearing four of the six lectures delivered by Dr. S. G. Bland, of Toronto, Canada, at Lake Junaluska, N. C., under the auspices of the General Sunday School Board, on the subject, "The Origin, Significance, and Abiding Worth of the Old Testament Scriptures," Bishop James Cannon, Jr., enters an emphatic protest against the course of the General Sunday School Secretary, Dr. John W. Shackford, in authorizing and sanctioning such a series of lectures on the occasion and under the circumstances under which they were delivered. The positions taken by Dr. Bland were based upon the historical method of Bible study and had to do with such matters as date, authorship, composition, etc., of the Old Testament Scriptures, such positions being at variance with the commonly accepted views of conservative Bible students generally and with the views of the great majority of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, specifically.

Bishop Cannon's protest is primarily against the circumstances under which the lectures were given, though his dissent from their substance is clear. In a letter addressed to Dr. Shackford he says. "I believe most sincerely in a thorough study of the Bible. I do not believe in efforts to conceal the truth. I have personally studied with considerable thoroughness the writings of Wellhausen, Ewald, Keunen, Graf, Robertson Smith, Cheyne, Driver, and others, and I have carefully considered the hypotheses which they have evolved and the results which they claim to have established. I am entirely willing that others shall pursue these same studies under proper conditions, but I emphatically object to the methods employed with the delivery of the course of lectures by Dr. Bland at Junaluska." After citing the views of Dr. Bland concerning the date, authorship, composition, etc., of many of the Old Testament books, Bishop Cannon says again: "I register my positive protest against the making of such dogmatic statements on such vital subjects without providing any proof whatever before an audience composed largely of persons who have had no training on such questions. I would emphasize again that I do not object to the discussion of such questions under proper conditions where trained competent teachers holding opposing views have been invited to present the conservative side of the discussion, or where, failing this, the lecturer will give a full, fair statement of the views held by conservative scholars, with due emphasis on the fact that Christ, Peter, Stephen, Paul, and other New Testament writers held the conservative view, and with full opportunity given for questions and discussion. To my mind it is clearly a great injustice to the hearer to present such subjects in a public auditorium with a mixed audience, such as is usually assembled on such occasions. Furthermore, instead of stating, as you did, with all the authority which could be given it from your position as the General Sunday School Secretary, that such statements as are quoted above are the established results of Christian scholarship and the truth, which must be given to lead our people from doubt to light, I think you should have frankly stated that you were fully aware of the fact that in making these statements you did not represent the views of the great majority of the ministry and laity of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South."

Following the protest, Bishop Cannon calls upon Dr. Shackford and the Sunday School Board for assurance that there will not be a continuance of such methods in the Sunday school department of the church.

In our opinion, this protest by Bishop Cannon is timely and well founded. It is not a protest against modern scholarship or against the fullest and freest investigation of the whole field of Old Testament literature, but against a quasi-authoritative acceptance and endorsement of views that are contrary to the generally accepted views of the vast majority of our own people and that, at best, require a high degree of technical knowledge to understand thoroughly. To present them to a popular audience as surely established truths is like discussing the law of relativity before a group of average business men.

MAKING READY FOR PEACE.

By the formal ratification on August 17 of the naval limitation treaties entered into by the United States, England, France, Japan, and Italy, the reduction of naval armaments will begin at once, and in a comparatively short time these great sea powers will have only those vessels that are deemed necessary for use in peace. The agreement involves the "scrapping" of thousands of tons of fighting vessels and a limitation upon the building of new vessels that really mean a definite step toward the maintenance of world-wide peace. One of the most inspiring lessons to be learned from the ratification of these treaties is that definite progress toward peace can be made by international agreement.

COUNTY-WIDE EVANGELISM.

Through the experience of some of our general evangelists such men as Bob Jones and Burke Culpepper, I have come to the conclusion that in much of our rural territory we could put on county-wide programs of evangelism reaching thousands of people, with the county seat as the center of operations. A large tent or tabernacle could be erected and services held every night, the pastors of the county and the evangelistic party holding services in various sections of the county throughout the day.

Such campaigns are no longer an experiment. If you will read the article by Rev. Bob Jones in this issue, you will see how well it has worked with him. I do not think there is a general evangelist in our church who would not be willing to give much of his time to this sort of work. My idea in giving the article of Brother Jones to the press is to emphasize this matter and call upon our pastors to organize for movements of this kind. If they need any assistance in the organization and will write to us as Secretary of the Bureau of Evangelism, we might aid them in getting the movement started.

I have formed the conclusion, after careful study, that we must use unusual methods in many places if we are going to get the results which, as leaders of the church, we covet for our King and Lord.

I trust the pastors throughout the church will keep our general evangelists occupied every day which it is possible for these men to give to their work. If you are needing a helper or evangelist, communicate with the Bureau of Evangelism, or with the Conference Committee on Evangelism. These are authorized agencies in the church to promote evangelism throughout the denomination, and we give our services to the pastors absolutely free of charge. We are hoping that you will correspond with us when in need of any assistance that we can render you.

If we do in the field of evangelism what the General Conference, by its unanimous action, expects and requests of us, we must work together and work all of the time during the quadrennium. We should be wedded to no method. Forms and programs are useless unless they produce results.

R. L. RUSSELL.

My Dear Mr. Editor: Writing for church papers is not in my line. This is written at the request of Doctor R. L. Russell, who is vitally interested in the cause of evangelism. The article is rather long, but I hope it will not prove to be tedious.

As most of the brethren know, my evangelistic meetings for the last ten or fifteen years have been conducted mostly in the larger towns and cities of America. I have felt for a number of years that the hope of this country is in the smaller towns and rural districts.

I have believed for a long time that it is possible to put on evangelistic tabernacle meetings in the smaller towns and country districts more successfully, and with less strain and effort on the part of the people, than it is to put on similar campaigns in the larger towns and cities. I know now this can be done. Houston, Miss., has proved it.

Last January the pastors of the Methodist, the Baptist, the Presbyterian, and the Christian churches in this little town of 1,500 people, came to see me, and extended us an invitation to conduct in their town one of our regularly organized tabernacle meetings. These pastors are big men, with vision, and they work together. I talked with them about my idea of the county-wide campaigns. They returned home and called into conference the pastors and representative laymen of the country churches. My campaign manager was at this conference, and he outlined our method of organization. The pastors and laymen of the country joined in the invitation.

The meeting was set up with the same care, and with the organization of the same committees we use in our largest city meetings, the only difference being that here the county was the unit instead of the city. My manager was there in advance of us for a month. He directed all preliminary details. The tabernacle was built by volunteer labor in one day. The ladies of the church served lunch on the ground the day the men built the tabernacle.

We left there feeling that we had had one of the greatest meetings of our ministry. I am sure it was one of the most delightful we have ever had. There were fewer problems than we have had anywhere. The expenses were $1,800. By expenses I mean the building and equipping of the tabernacle; the salaries and expenses of my party, and all running local expenses. This budget was raised in a little more than a week by simply taking incidental collections. The free-will offering which I received is more generous than I expected, and is far more liberal than I deserve. It was raised with less effort than is usually made in the larger communities.

The results were wonderful. The tabernacle, which seats two thousand (buildings of similar size are generally supposed to seat about four thousand), was rarely large enough to accommodate the crowd. Almost every night, hundreds were on the outside. A section outside the tabernacle was reserved for colored people. This section was usually overflowing. Almost every night the colored people sang some of their own songs. The crowds came from everywhere. Automobile parties came at night from as far as fifty miles.

There were hundreds of conversions, and there will be several hundred accessions to the churches in the town and throughout the county. The Christian forces have been cemented, and their vision enlarged. They have a new appreciation of the bigness of religion. Many family altars have been erected, and eternity alone will reveal the results of these.

To show the power of an organized effort in a county like this, I will relate an incident. We had one night that we called "Masonic Night." A group of local Masons sent out fifteen hundred invitations to the Masons of the county and surrounding counties, inviting them in to this special night. We had on that occasion the largest Masonic delegation we have ever had anywhere.

This article is written with the hope that the pastors in our towns may see the wonderful opportunities that lie in putting on large co-operative campaigns. I am sure most of the general evangelists of our church, even those who usually hold meetings in the larger towns and cities, would be willing to give some of their time to these county-wide meetings. It is my purpose, provided the Lord leads, to conduct two or three city meetings each year, and the rest of my time I am going to put in on these fields which are supposed to be smaller, but which I believe afford the greatest opportunities for real, constructive, evangelistic work.

The general evangelists of our church, to my mind, and I think I know something about evangelists, as I was President for two years of the Interdenominational Evangelistic Association, with headquarters at Winona Lake, Indiana, are the best, on the average, evangelists in America today. There are a number of them who are big enough to conduct evangelistic campaigns in the biggest cities on the American continent.

I believe if the Methodist pastors in the average Southern town would take up with the other Protestant pastors the proposition of great, county-wide campaigns, they would be able to get the co-operation that is necessary to make such campaigns a success. I have found, after having conducted campaigns in about thirty States, that the Baptist, the Presbyterian and the Christian pastors are usually willing to go into co-operative campaigns when they are sure of sane leadership. I do not mean that our Methodist pastors should attempt to force Methodist evangelists into the towns and counties at all times. It may be that in some counties it would be much wiser for the Methodist pastor to go into evangelistic campaigns under the leadership of evangelists who are members of other denominations rather than their own.

This article is written with the hope and prayer that our pastors throughout the church may get the evangelistic vision which will lead them to the greatest possible evangelistic program in our smaller towns and country district.

PJTHECANTHROPUS ERECTUS.

By Rev. H. W. Rickey.

H. S. Pratt estimates that 522,400 species of animals are known. No proofs, based on actual facts, are cited to demonstrate that one genuine species has been transmuted into another unlike species. Fleischmann declares: "That there is absolutely no proof that a common plan of structure is a proof of blood relationship." Nuttall's chemical reaction tests made clear there is a barrier in blood that species can not get over. The drift now is to acknowledge a polyphiletic or many centers of origins or beginnings or sources.

If the ape and man branched off, once, from a common composite progenitor then, why the arrest of the ape; the incalculable distance of man; and no fossils of such a curious forbear? Is total lack of evidence certain proof of a ginko guess? Is a droll notion the test of mechanical descent from unlike species? Is man a colossal accident?

Osker Peschel, from anatomy, demonstrated that the more the monkey diversified, the more rigidly his structure sets as a monkey and the less he approaches the man-stage. They are singularly inflexible. Why did the ape travel up a blind alley or take to a spur-track that did not get him anywhere? Why did not evolution make a man of him? Time is a negligle factor, because the ape has been here as long as man. The ape and man have had the same identical environment for fabulous ages; and the self-evident fact is, once a monkey, always a monkey. Vast forests contain divers species, yet they never mix, or mingle, or shade into each other like cross-breeding races of men do.

Evolution, per se, is not the cause of anything. Purposive adaptation, through natural selection, without a guiding mind is a contradiction in ideas and words. It is the most preposterous notion advanced since the days of Empedocles.

Gregor Mendel established to a mathematical formula that "the circle of variations reverted to the original parent-form; that the parent-form possesses more latent or hidden characters than any single offspring can express; that the parent can only transmit to the offspring such character-elements as the parent possesses." Then, only a miracle could draw a man out of a monkey through the laws of heredity. It would be like getting blood out of a turnip or wine out of water. A. R. Wallace said: "There is a gulf fixed between matter and nothing; one between the living and the not living; one between man and the lower creation; and SCIENCE cannot bridge them."

In September, 1891, on the island of Java, Mr. Dubois a Dutch physician, dug up a tooth; one month later, forty-five feet away, he unearthed the roof of a skull; in August, 1892, he uncovered a thigh-bone, and later he picked up a tooth. Out of these unrelated bones there was artificially concocted the frame-up of the imaginary Dubois Apeman.

Professor Rutot, also an artist and sculptor, seized with a baroque obsession, turned his fancy aloose, made a bust, labelled it, P. E.; and they will supply many museums with Rutot's imaginary P. E.'s at so much per bust. Rutot's bust of P. E. is an indication that Evolution is "busted." No evidence, they forge it.

D. C. Cunningham, the eminent anatomist, gave as his careful judgment it is all hocus pocus: "These bones are remnants of both a baboon and a man, a local Javan accident in the land of baboons. No proof whatever of any transmutation of species." Twenty-four savants met in Leyden, conducted a scientific inquest, only seven of whom attached any consequence to the fragments. Osborne, in his recent and disappointing book, inserts an expensive engraving of Rutot's imaginary, ferocious-looking, negroid ape. He is not a crook, exactly, because several pages on, in an obscure paragraph, he admits, reluctantly: "There are, however, reason for excluding P. E. from the direct ancestral line." The same reasons exclude the Centaur, the Mermaid and Pegasus.

Students cleverly put parts of beetles together and asked their science teacher, "What bug is this?" He gravely replied, looking it over closely: "It is a HUMBUG!"

CONFERENCE ON RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

Report of Findings Committee.

At the Conference on Religious Education held at Lake Junaluska, N. C., July 17-19, 1923, composed of representatives of church boards, church colleges, and tax-supported institutions, the following report was submitted by the Findings Committee and was unanimously adopted:

"Compulsory intellectual training is now recognized to be necessary to remedy illiteracy and its attendant evils. Likewise, it must be recognized and emphasized that universal moral and religious training are necessary in order to remedy moral and religious illiteracy and its even greater attendant evils. The amazing ignorance of our young life of moral and religious principles and of Biblical knowledge is displayed in everyday conversations, in classrooms, and the alarming lawlessness of our times. If our nation is to survive, the moral and religious principles which governed our forefathers must be instilled into the present-day young life of the nation.

"We would not minimize in the slightest degree the duty and the responsibility of fathers and mothers to give to their children in the home the moral and religious training which is the proper heritage of every child. The willingness manifested by many parents to turn over this responsibility to the church and State is a crime, not only against the children whom they have brought into the world, but against the nation of which they are citizens.

"Nor do we minimize the great responsibility of the church through its various distinctive agencies to give moral and religious training. But we must recognize the fact that there are great masses of young people in the public schools who are receiving little, if any, moral and religious training, and that these must be reached in order to secure universal religious training.

"1. We believe that the moral and religious are equally as important elements of human nature as are the physical and the intellectual, and therefore the State should openly and positively recognize the necessity for a thorough moral and religious training and should co-operate in securing such training as far as the constitutions and the laws of the several States of the nation will permit.

"2. We believe that the State should furnish moral instruction in every grade of public school work from the primary grades to the university.

RESPONSIBILITY DEVELOPS

NOTES FROM NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT.

The summer season finds most of our pastors in the city taking vacations—a fine thing for a preacher to do, if he does it wisely. Each one has arranged for the filling of his pulpit, so that the services go on without interruption during their absence. May each one come back with his bow stronger for being temporarily unbent.

* * *

The presiding elder had the opportunity of spending about a week in Junaluska, in company with Rev. J. F. Foster, pastor at St. Mark's, and Mr. H. F. Foster, president of the City Mission Board. The Conference on City Missions, which was our objective, indicated the development of city missions in our church to the point where we must work out more definite policies for their management and direction. Our St. Mark's is perhaps the most inclusive single mission plant in any of our cities, and should hold the interest of all our people.

* * *

In addition to the daily vacation Bible schools previously mentioned, short sessions of similar schools were held at Carrollton Avenue and Louisiana Avenue, with encouraging success.

* * *

At the third quarterly conference at Carrollton, in midsummer, there were seventeen out of twenty-four lay officials present, though several of the most faithful members were out of the city. "Can you beat it?" No more loyal and faithful band is to be found.

* * *

In the early summer First Church followed the example of Felicity and other churches in the Conference, by securing the Conference collections for the year in full.

* * *

Rev. Martin Hebert has held meetings with several of our French Mission charges recently, and has just closed a meeting with Brother Brulet at Gonzales, whose results will doubtless be reported. Our work among the French is making encouraging progress.

* * *

The meeting at Bayou Blue, the mother church of the Terrebonne section, though interrupted by daily rains, resulted in eleven accessions. At Point au Chien, on the same charge, five accessions were reported.

* * *

Rev. J. A. Knight held a meeting for Rev. C. J. Thibodeaux for a few days on Pecan Island, away down in the sea marsh of Vermillion Parish, receiving into the church one mature woman and baptizing several babies. He also assisted Brother Thibodueax for a few days at Louisa—a neighborhood at the edge of the marsh in St. Mary.

* * *

Two of our preachers, Rev. A. D. Martin and Rev. E. V. Duplantis, have recently had rather severe spells of sickness. The latter was well enough to participate in the great meeting at White's Chapel, which was reported in last week's Advocate, and the former is again busy with his work, with characteristic zeal opening up new preaching places.

* * *

Rev. F. J. McCoy has returned from a well earned vacation spent in visiting friends.

* * *

Preparations are being made to make a great occasion of the joint quarterly conference to be held at Houma on Aug. 23 for the Houma, Bayou Blue and Lafourche charges.

W. WINANS DRAKE, P. E.

SOME THOUGHTS.

Mr. Editor: It has been some time since I have given expression to my thoughts through your splendid paper, but have thought of you often, oh so often!. I think some of your editorials are wonderfully instructive, any one of which is well worth the price of the paper. Then the choice of articles published from other pens would indicate good judgment from a wise head. I heard a brother say the other day he had more of his articles returned to him than were published, so he was careful to enclose postage; then I thought, that is why so few of our preachers write—they get discouraged; but the Editor says, "Why don't they write something worth while?" Well, most of us think we do; and when we young fellows get a "jolt," we are wonderfully helped if we have the grit in our "craw" to come again.

I have been thinking of the change in the editorship of the Advocate at Nashville, Tenn. How we miss the former, but how gladly we welcome the present editor; what a fine spirit he has, what a future for good lies out before him, how clear the ring of the note of hope and cheer in his article on "Seeing Him Who Is Invisible." Now to think this delightful paper is being sent to one of the "forgotten men" by a good layman through Brother Ahrens till 1926! I am sure he feels he at least is not forgotten. I sometimes think it might make the lives of many of these old veterans happy if they were more often remembered with little, tender, kind expressions of thoughtfulness and love. Brethren, we are all headed that way, and sooner or later we will arrive. I know it is hard in our young days to see ourselves set aside and feel it is possible for another to take our place. Then I wonder if what I heard a man say a short time ago was even half true: "It seems the younger men of the Conference, when they set the old heroes aside after they are worn out, say to them, 'Shut up and stay shut, we will look after your needs when we have to, but we hope that will not be for long.'" No, it is not true with the large-souled, big-hearted young men of to-day; they who owe so much to these old veterans feel they would be depreciated indeed to be thought capable of such utterly selfish sentiments. He that does not believe that, just let him watch them next year when the privilege and opportunity are given to lay themselves out in the service of these old men and he will be thoroughly convinced.

"Did you know that Brother J. M. Brown passed away last night?" said a voice over the telephone. For a while we sat in silence; we said, "We shall see him no more here." Then we thought of Enoch who walked with God; some one said he and God were going in the same direction, and one day God said to him, "Enoch, you have walked far enough; we have now finished the work we have begun, let us go home," and he was not, for God took him. So when death claimed Brother Brown, God followed fast; perhaps you and I would have, too, but we were chained by flesh and bones, so God did what we could not do and went with him and is with him still. But we shall miss him here. May it be our happy lot when our weary journey is complete to walk with him again far beyond the hand of death.

A great deal is being said and written these days about the various doctrines of the Methodist Church, about what is being taught from our pulpits and in our colleges. Like Milton of old, some are speaking "of the hungry sheep coming to the altar looking for food and getting nothing but wind." McTyeire, in his opening sentence in his History of Methodism, said: "It was not a new doctrine, but a new life that the first Methodists sought for themselves and others." Is not that our greatest need to-day? Our doctrines are all right, we have ample organization, any number of special days, good preachers, well educated, laymen who are interested in the finances of the church; what is the matter then? All other churches, even, the Roman Church itself, were helped to a more active and efficient service by the new life in Wesley's day and since. Might it not be helpful if our own church would set the pace and cease worrying about what this Doctor or that Professor, or this other Scientist writes or says about this doctrine or that? What do the common people know or care? There is scarcely one in a thousand who reads what is written or hears what is said unless we little fellows try to spell it off from the pulpits Sunday morning. What do we know about science anyway? No more than the people care to hear about it. Why not give them the message of the new life, aglow with the fires from the divine altars? Give them the life, and the doctrines will take care of themselves.

By the way, Doctor, don't you think that movement inaugurated by the Methodist Episcopal Church at Washington, D. C., one of the finest, if not the very best, movements of recent date? I mean the National Methodist Press Service, with Dr. Harry E. Woolever as editor and director. Its aim is to give to the Christian public, the Protestant public, authentic information as a basis for correct thinking and appropriate action. Would it not be a splendid idea for our own beloved church to join hands with them and give to our own readers some of that which will help them to think correctly and act appropriately? Think of it, Doctor, and let us hear from you on the subject.

Here is some real good news from Shreveport Methodism; with their freshly aroused spirit of connectionalism and co-operation they are building a new church in the Claiborne addition, which will be ready for occupancy in a few days; the people of that section seem very proud and happy over the fact. Happy will it be if the other churches continue their co-operation and loving, faithful help.

It might be well to stop just here unless I should have to send postage for return.

REV. E. L. ALFORD.

Dear Brother Carley: Saturday night, Aug. 11, at 8:15, the soul of Rev. Earl Lesley Alford went home to God.

It was my privilege to spend the greater portion of the day with him, and to the end he evidenced the same faith and confidence in the God he served, and the Gospel he preached, he had always demonstrated.

For four months he was in our town, and his suffering was intense, but relief came to him quietly and sweetly, and he passed away without a struggle as though he were taking a nap. He was ready for the transfer. He had told his family just how he wanted everything planned, and did so in a deliberate, calm manner.

On Sunday, Aug. 12, in the afternoon, his funeral was held. With the immediate members of his family in the room where he had spent the past four months, a short service of Scripture reading and prayer was held; then we carried his body to the church, where a large congregation was assembled to pay a last tribute of respect to one whom this community loved.

Rev. W. M. Sullivan, who was Brother Alford's last presiding elder, had charge of the service, being assisted by Rev. H. M. Ellis, Rev. H. L. Norton, and the writer. After the service at the church, we carried his body to Magnolia and laid it tenderly away in the family lot, there to await the bright resurrection morning.

One of the strongest preachers of our Southern Methodism has gone from us, and in our approaching Conference at Gulfport in November he will be missed, but we know where to find him.

A full memorial will be sent the Advocate from one who was very intimate with Brother Alford, but I desire to give testimony to the benefit I have derived from these past months' association with him during his last days when he suffered so much. I never visited him but I left him feeling it was a heavenly benediction to me to be with him. His faith in God and his confidence in the Gospel were both inspiring to me, and I shall ever feel that even in his sickness his words have cheered me along the pathway of life.

May this Gospel he loved so much to preach comfort the bereaved widow, son, daughter, and all loved ones.

His friend and brother,

F. B. ORMOND.

Tylertown, Miss.

IN OLD HAUNTS.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

Fifty years ago I came to Charlottesville to take up my work as chaplain of the University of Virginia. It was an epoch in my life. The two years I spent in that position were in many ways the most influential in my life in making me what I am. I did little work in the class-room. I was young and inexperienced, and had I known what I was going up against in advance, I doubt if I would have consented to undertake the task. I had had few educational advantages, was an undergraduate in Emory and Henry College, and only a few years lay between me and the shining plowshare of "Avery No. 8," which I left in the furrow on the farm in Mississippi. The duties of the chaplain were those of a regular pastor, preaching twice on Sunday, holding the mid-week service, and visiting the flock. It demanded all my time.

It was not preaching to simple mountaineers, such as had formed my congregations in the coves and valleys around Saltville, who could be razzle-dazzled by sophomoric rhetoric. Such men as John B. Minor, Francis H. Smith, Bazil L. Gildersleeve, William E. Peters, Noah K. Davis, and the rest, sat in the pews; many of them, like Minor and Smith, as well acquainted with their Bibles as with their law books and science. Besides, the chaplain then held the rank of a Professor. I have a group-picture of the faculty of the University at that time hanging in my "Den," and my youthful face is among them. A pretty high perch for such a greenhorn, and among birds of such plumage!

While I did not have a chance to do much text-book study, I was a mental sponge and absorbed a world of ideas. It was a liberal education to be associated with such a group of scholars and noblemen as formed the faculty at that time, like Venable and Mallet and Schele de Vere, Cabell and the Davises, Holmes, Harrison, and Peyton. All the force of a splendid intellectual and moral environment was exerted on my plastic and receptive nature, and it fixed ideals of life, of education, of duty, of service, that have dominated my whole career; so that, notwithstanding the little use I was able to make of class-room instruction, I call the University of Virginia my "alma mater."

When I took charge, Dr. John A. Broadus said to me: "Stick to the gospel. These men are absorbed all the week in the subjects of their several departments. On Sunday they want the gospel." Dr. R. N. Sledd said: "Be an authority in your department," by which he meant speak with assurance what you believe. It was excellent advice. I did not need to be advised "to speak boldly as I ought to speak." I had already learned that important lesson. Dr. F. H. Smith says that one of my first utterances made them sit up and take notice, for I said: "The moral standard of a community can be known by the condition of its cemetery!" He says a lot of hoes went to the graveyard next day. But my sky-scraping sermons and whole rigamarole of starry rhetoric that pleased the Emory boys had to go by the board. After I had been at the University a year, I returned to Southwestern Virginia on a visit and preached while there. Dear Mrs. J. E. B. Stuart, who had kindly aided in having me elected chaplain, heard me, and said: "I'm almost sorry I helped to send you to the University. They have plucked your plumes. Let them grow out again. You are best when you soar." But I [illegible] it was a salutary pruning of redundant [illegible]. When Gildersleeve glanced at Peters and [illegible] I took notice thereof!

After I had been there some weeks, Dr. Peters, who had been active in my behalf when they were electing a chaplain and who [illegible] interest in how I would fit [illegible] agement, I will tell you what Dr. [illegible] me. He said: Well, Gildersleeve [illegible] chaplain [illegible] praise was judicious [illegible] I was very fresh and immature, but if I had "the root of the matter" in me, I [illegible] to grow. Such an opinion from such a man [illegible] that I was [illegible] with [illegible]. By the way, Gildersleeve [illegible] in the chapel, and [illegible] He [illegible] and embarrassed me by asking: "How do you reconcile what you said [illegible] with what you said six months ago?" He told me one day that he made it a [illegible] to read [illegible] and Howson's Life of St. Paul. [illegible] own [illegible] had nerve!

[illegible] Dr. F. H. Smith [illegible] in the faculty [illegible] "The Nestor of the [illegible]" as Dr. James A. [illegible] in Dr. Smith's [illegible] Professor of Natural Science [illegible] when it became known that he [illegible] certain subjects, his class-room would not accommodate the crowds of students [illegible] to hear him, and [illegible] His learning [illegible] a man.

EX-PRESIDENT WOODROW WILSON "RINGS THE BELL."

The August number of the Atlantic Monthly carries an article under the caption, "The Road Away from Revolution," the author of same being our own much-beloved Woodrow Wilson. The following excerpts from his article have a bearing on the great question now being discussed on this page under the heading, "The Call of the Conference Claimants":

"In these dreadful and anxious days, when all the world is at unrest and, look which way you will, the road ahead seems darkened by shadows which portend dangers of many kinds, it is only common prudence that we should look about us and attempt to assess the causes of distress and the most likely means of removing them.

"Real ground for the universal unrest lies deep at the sources of the spiritual life of our time and leads to revolution. The cause of the Russian revolution was a systematic denial to the great body of Russians of the rights and privileges which all normal men desire and must have if they are to be contented and within reach of happiness.

"What has this to do with America? It was against capitalism that the Russian leaders directed their attack, and it is against capitalism under one name or another that the discontented classes everywhere draw their indictment. Thoughtful men everywhere believe that capitalism is indispensable to civilization, but is the capitalistic system unimpeachable? Is it not true that the capitalist often seems to regard men whom he uses as mere instruments of profit whose physical and mental powers it is legitimate to exploit? Ought we not to seek a way to remove such offenses and make life itself clean for those who will share honorably and cleanly in it?

"The world has been made safe for democracy. There need now be no fear that any such design as that entertained by the insolent and ignorant Hohenzollerns and their counselors may prevail against it. But democracy has not yet made the world safe against irrational revolution. That supreme task which is nothing less than the salvation of civilization now faces democracy insistent, imperative. There is no escaping it unless everything we have built up is presently to fall in ruin about us, and the United States as the greatest of democracies must undertake it.

"The road that leads away from revolution is clearly marked, for it is defined by the nature of men of organized society. It, therefore, behooves us to study very carefully and very candidly the exact nature of the task and the means of its accomplishment. The sum of the whole matter is this, that our civilization cannot survive materially unless it be redeemed spiritually. Here is the final challenge to our churches, to our political organizations, and to our capitalists—to every one who fears God or loves his country."

WHAT CAN THE CHURCH DO ABOUT IT?

Undoubtedly Mr. Wilson in the article referred to in the foregoing paragraphs has put his finger on a very vital matter concerning the peace and happiness of the world. There is a mighty challenge going to the Church in the present day to draw heavily upon her resources to meet this issue. But what can she do?

It seems to me that our pulpits throughout Southern Methodism should take as a text "The Golden Rule" and preach from it with great emphasis and constantly until the thinking and [illegible] people everywhere are in harmony with its teachings. The present day is too pregnant with possible disaster for us to lose time with [illegible] ourselves touching [illegible]. Never before in the history of [illegible] been a greater need for [illegible] of righteousness and the [illegible].

[illegible] she should to such a [illegible] properly until the Church [illegible] conception of her duty [illegible] are expected to carry [illegible] Church has so large a [illegible] and revolution [illegible] will rest [illegible] this program should [illegible] in the [illegible] of their task. [illegible] bricklayers, carpenters, [illegible] to receive for constructing [illegible] ten to twenty dollars per day [illegible] the preachers of the gospel are called to the titanic struggle of rebuilding a wrecked world and are paid for such a task the trivial amount of an average of $3 per day each? If the Church is to meet the challenge pointed out by Mr. Wilson, she must first apply within herself the principle which she is called to teach to others.

Furthermore, if it be true that misguided capitalism has exploited labor for selfish purposes, what should be said of a Church that has taken men wholesale for her ministry, used them to the limit of their physical endurance, paid them salaries which barely provided daily rations during active service, and then when they were unable to drag themselves further in the program set them aside as worn out men to live, with their aged wives and invalid members of their families, on an annual amount for each which to-day averages but little more than $200? I maintain that the Church will not be ready for the supreme task to which she is called by Mr. Wilson and other great leaders until she makes adequate provision for the aged, worn and enfeebled ministers whom she calls her superannuates. As long as it can be truthfully written that the Church has the "forgotten man" she will be unable to possess the moral fiber and character sufficient to enable her to come to the rescue of a world stricken by the cries of its people who feel that they, too, are forgotten.

THE PARAMOUNT ISSUE BEFORE THE CHURCH.

It is natural that every leader of important movements should feel that his particular task is supreme in importance above all others. I feel that way about the special effort for superannuate endowment. However, there are so many arguments sustaining me in this contention that it appears I should be absolved from the charge of being merely a propagandist.

From the beginning of her history the Church has used her preachers very much in the same manner as some soulless corporations have used their employees. The latter have sought in many instances to squeeze out of the men and women working for them the greatest possible lift in efficient service and have paid these lifters the smallest amount that would be accepted by them without strikes and serious trouble. These corporations have grown tremendouly rich, and those who did so much to create such values for others have in doing it barely eked out an existence for themselves. I am not reading a brief in behalf of labor in its contest with capitalism, for I am not competent to make a worthy pronouncement on the subject. However, the statement made is the text from which much is being spoken and written to-day about the discontent of the masses.

What about the Church? Read the account of Southern Methodism's progress during the past one hundred years, and you will be amazed at the figures which mark our present property holdings. We have a membership of approximately 2,500,000. We have one of the most powerful organizations in the world. How did we get all this? It must be admitted that it has come to us very largely through the loyal and faithful leadership of preachers who were willing to sacrifice everything in the interest of the Church. If the average annual stipend of these preachers were computed through the entire period, I am sure it would not be more than $350. Even to-day the average amount annually paid to a preacher in our Church for active service is approximately $1,200.

Think of the preachers of Southern Methodism who gave their all to the Church and then when aged and physically infirm were superannuated with nothing for the first year and but little more than nothing for the years thereafter. I have opportunities to look "behind the scenes" to discover the manner of living of these used-up prophets. They do not advertise their distresses. They wait and suffer, believing the "Lord will provide." As I study the conditions of their need I am amazed that a Church claiming the lowly Nazarene as her Master and Teacher can be guilty of such neglect. These tottering old superannuates will never inspire or lead a revolution to establish equities; they are too good and loyal for that. But as long as the Church goes on complacently and allows them to suffer from dire poverty she will not be morally strong enough to save the world from bloody revolutions which threaten to-day from other mistreated classes.

The paramount issue before the Church is an adequate support for her preachers in active service and a comfortable living for the superannuated preachers worn out in her service. Let this issue be met squarely until the preachers of the gospel, both active and superannuated, are comfortable, and the Church will then be able to meet the challenge to her influence and power which comes so emphatically to-day from the world's best thinkers and greatest leaders.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., sailed for Europe on July 26.

We learn from the Grenada Sentinel that Rev. and Mrs. Melville Johnson recently arrived at home after a month's vacation, most of which was spent at Lake Junaluska, N. C.

Dr. H. F. Brooks, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Shreveport, La., accompanied by his family, is spending the month of August on vacation at Mena, Ark.

Rev. J. D. Wroten, of New Albany, Miss., writes that the Bob Jones meeting at New Albany has been a great success, untold good being accomplished.

On the first Sunday in August the Big Brothers' Bible Class of Greenville, Miss., had an attendance of 119, with 15 visitors. Pretty good for midsummer!

An exchange says that Dr. Philander P. Claxton, former United States Commissioner of Education, has been elected superintendent of the city schools of Tulsa, Okla., at an annual salary of $13,800.

The many friends in Louisiana and Mississippi of Dr. R. P. Wilson, connected with the Publishing House at Nashville, Tenn., will be glad to learn that he has recovered his health after a long stay in the Barnes Hospital, St. Louis.

We learn with great sorrow of the death of Mr. T. M. Ragsdale, a prominent official member of the First Methodist Church, Shreveport, La., on Aug. 3. Methodism in Shreveport has suffered a great loss in his death.

Mrs. W. H. Scanland, long identified with our church in Benton, La., died at Monteagle, Tenn., on Aug. 13. She was buried from the new church in Benton—just completed—which was erected on a lot donated by her.

Rev. and Mrs. N. E. Joyner, of Ruston, La., are properly proud of the fact that they have a young grandson, born in Shanghai, China, on July 16, son of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Joyner. He bears the name, Nicholas Everette. Blessings upon him!

A report from the Brookhaven District, Mississippi Conference, indicates that the work is prospering throughout the district. The brethren are in fine spirits, notwithstanding the poor condition of the crops. Rev. H. M. Ellis is the hard-working and efficient presiding elder.

One of the features of the work of the organized men's Bible classes in Mississippi is the assistance that is being given deserving young men and young women who, otherwise, would be unable to attend college. Many of these students will be found this year in our church schools in Mississippi.

The Summer School at Millsaps College closed on Aug. 11, after a nine weeks' session under the direction of Professor G. L. Harrell. The regular session will begin on Sept. 12. Early reservations indicate a gratifying increase over the attendance last year. The dormitories will be conducted this year on the co-operative plan, thus giving students board at actual cost.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Yarbrough, of Nashville, Tenn., announce the marriage of their daughter, Mary Alva, to Dr. Elmer T. Clark, on Wednesday, Aug. 15. Dr. Clark has been prominent in the publicity work of the church for a number of years. The Advocate extends heartiest good wishes to the happy couple.

Rev. and Mrs. H. M. Ellis, Brookhaven, Miss., have been enjoying visits from their daughters, Mrs. R. H. Herring, of Courtland, Miss., and Mrs. H. C. King, of Cincinnati, Ohio; also, from Mrs. M. B. Sharbrough, of Biloxi, Miss., a sister of Mrs. Ellis.

Rev. N. E. Joyner, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, Ruston, La., accompanied by his family, spent part of his vacation at Biloxi, Miss., making the trip in his Ford. En route, he visited his mother at Poplarville, Miss., who will be 86 years old on Oct. 10. What a benediction to the world are these venerable saints!

Rev. W. A. Hart, formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference, but now a superannuato member of the West Texas Conference, paid an appreciated call at the Advocate office one day last week. His wife has recently undergone a serious operation at the Presbyterian Hospital, this city. We are glad to learn that she is convalescing satisfactorily.

Rev. L. Wesley Cain, of Franklinton, La., has just returned with his family from a delightful vacation spent on the Gulf Coast. He is engaged this week in a meeting with Rev. H. C. Murphy, at Tickfaw, La. Brother Cain writes that the new church at Franklinton is going up rapidly, the probability being that it will be ready for use by Conference. Rev. W. M. McIntosh will hold a meeting for Brother Cain in Franklinton the latter part of September, for which diligent preparation is being made.

We take the following from the Lincoln County Times of Aug. 16: "Rev. H. M. Ellis, who has been one of the best boosters of the Seven County Fair as he has gone about his ministerial labors in different parts of this section, has offered a prize of ten dollars cash, to be awarded at the Fair to be held Oct. 3 to 6, to the boy who writes the best essay on the subject, 'How to Make a Living on the Farm.' Any boy under eighteen who lives in the bounds of the seven counties is eligible to compete, and it is hoped that each county will present several competitors. L. P. May has been named as chairman of the committee on essays, and will give detailed information."

The second session of the State-wide Standard Training School of the Louisiana Conference will be held at Ruston, Aug. 26-31, under the joint direction of the General and the Conference Sunday School Boards. Credit courses under competent instructors will be offered in: Primary Organization and Administration; Junior Pupil; Intermediate-Senior Organization and Administration; Principles of Teaching; the Christian Religion; the Bible. Pastors who give notice in advance will be entertained free; others can secure board for a dollar a day by writing to Mrs. D. M. Atkins, Ruston, La. Rev. K. W. Dodson, presiding elder of the Ruston District, is chairman of the board of directors; Rev. N. E. Joyner is educational director, and Rev. C. D. Atkinson is Conference superintendent.

We record with genuine sorrow the burning of the office of the Southern Methodist, Memphis, Tenn., edited by Dr. R. A. Meek, and the death, caused by the flames, of Miss Viola Blackburn, assistant to Dr. Meek. The fire was caused by a passer-by's throwing a lighted match near a hose through which an underground tank was being filled with gasoline, the hose being set on fire and the escaping gasoline igniting and shooting up the side of tho building in an immense flame. Miss Blackburn was a graduate of the Scarritt Bible and Training School, and for more than ten years was engaged in missionary work in Mexico. At the funeral tender tributes were paid her memory as a beautiful Christian character. The contents of the Southern Methodist office were destroyed in the fire, but the paper will be continued.

THOSE "METHODIST FUNDAMENTALS."

By Bob Shuler.

We are all agreed that we are Methodists, not Fundamentalists; Methodists, not Calvinists; and, praise God, Methodists, not Rationalists, evolutionists, liberalists or any other kind or variety, new or old, of quibblers with or questioners of the truth. Therefore, when our bishops and other men of authority and wisdom caution us against the "Fundamentalists" and the Calvinists, we go them one better. In fact, we know of movements even more dangerous than Fundamentalism or even Calvinism.

Recently, in an article published in the majority of our Conference Organs, there appears a call of one of our leading church men to a return to the position of our Founders, who, according to this writer, emphasized scriptural holiness and the "living of a life" rather than believing a creed. Again, I more than agree. And I call the attentoin of my brethren to the fact that the movement of the Wesleys was a protest against the substitution of forms and ceremonies, attitudes and postures, culture and social standing for an inward holiness that begins, according to the Methodist Founders, with a New Birth, a conscious experience, a life, if you please, that was supernaturally produced within the soul and lived as a result of such a wonderful change. The living of such a life is the superlative privilege of every true Christian.

And so I believe thoroughly in "living a life," but I am quite certain that you must have it before you can live it. Moreover, I have the very Word of God as to how that life is obtained. A man must believe something before he can thus live. He must believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. Indeed, that Christ is the very life itself. No men ever stressed creed more positively than did the Wesleys and their co-workers, for they understood the nature of this life. They placed a superlative emphasis upon the doctrine of the Witness of the Spirit. They stressed Salvation by faith on man's part and by grace on the part of our Savior. They left no doubt as to their position relative to the fall of man, the deity of Jesus Christ and every other fundamental doctrine. As a young preacher I studied Wesley's Sermons and Notes, and have never read more positive deliverances as to the necessity of a man's knowing what he believes and having a reason for the faith that is in him.

If our leaders mean by "the living of a life" that our Christian lives should produce fruit, our works showing forth the fact of our salvation, I am with them. If they, on the other hand, mean to intimate that the Methodist Founders taught salvation by character, by good works, I can give them page and paragraph to disprove such a false contention, and I can show them where such a position is contrary to the Discipline of the church and has ever been. I agree that the "living of a life" is the proof of the genuineness of the New Birth and of the continued replenishing of the grace of Jesus Christ within that life, but I deny that the living of a life has anything whatsoever to do with the salvation of a soul, as it stands trembling before the mercy seat. Faith, and faith alone, is required there. This life is the gift of God and comes by grace through faith. It is not of ourselves and has never been taught by Methodist Founders to be.

Therefore, since this life is a result rather than a cause, what is back of it? What produces it? Belief. How can any man look up into the face of a Savior and accept him, unless he truly believes in and upon him? This Savior claims that he is God. He claims that he redeemed us by the shedding of blood. Within his Book, we are taught that he was Virgin born, that he was conceived by the Holy Ghost, that he gave his blood for our sins, that he came from the grave bodily, that he ascended on high and left the promise that he would come again. These doctrines are fundamental in their relation to our Savior. Aren't we going a little too far when we say that Methodism is more interested in the "living of a life," on the part of the individual Methodist, than she is in taking a firm and abiding stand in her support of those priceless truths, thus given us concerning that Christ, to whom we look for that life?

Those who would thus persuade us that creeds are relatively unimportant and that what a man believes is second to rather than responsible for the way he lives have referred us to the Articles of Religion of our church, a strange thing indeed, for four-fifths of the Articles of Religion are concerned with what we must believe, while less than one-fifth is concerned with the manner of our living. They refer also to our General Rules. The Articles of Religion are, as I understand it, the very foundation of Methodism's position relative to the Christian life and the salvation of the soul of man, while the General Rules give more emphasis to conduct, because they are written for the governing of conduct alone. The Apostles' Creed, that practically all Methodists repeat and which they must affirm to become Methodists, is ninety-nine per cent a statement of faith, of belief. Such stands as the evidence in hand of the position of the Founders relative to the importance of faith as compared to conduct, in the matter of salvation.

And yet, we must face the fact that there is a growing revival all over Christendom of the idea that man may be saved by character, by performances, by honor and virtue, by integrity, by good works. Paul faced and beat back such an agitation in his day. Great leaders have more than once since then met and vanquished this same erroneous idea. To-day, it is springing anew to the battle front, fortified by the fact that a mighty wave of rationalism and materialistic philosophy has swept the minds of men. Thousands are turning their eyes away from the cross and dreaming that there is hope in human organizations, in machinery, in the progress and advance of which man is capable, in campaigns and drives, in social service and reformation, in institutions, equipment, endeavor, work! The horses and chariots are being trotted out once more. We are numbering our thousands and preparing to go down against the foe. Indeed, we are "manning the situation" in more senses than one.

Scriptural holiness, which is holiness unto God on the part of those born of God, would be a great remedy for such a condition. For as faith has declined in these modern days, we find the church drifting in disastrous fashion toward the world and toward worldly methods and instruments. Our trouble is, we are trying to do the living ourselves, rather than permit Christ to live in and through us. Back of such living, there is always loss of faith and power. My bishops and other brethren may disagree with me, but I firmly believe that the bold statement of a positive creed on the part of Methodism, such as is laid down in the Apostles' Creed and our Articles of Religion, would do more to produce a revival of scriptural holiness over the church than any other thing that could be done. A statement of our faith would wonderfully fortify our living these days, I tell you.

And that is why the writer has not joined his brethren in tearing his hair for fear the Fundamentalists would injure our church. I am not afraid of anything fundamental. I am not afraid of Methodism's being harmed by men believing in the inspiration of the Bible, all of it, every book and chapter in it! I am not afraid of Methodism's losing something out of her soul by believing in the doctrines of the fall of man and the glorious remedy, Christ on the cross! I am not afraid of the Bible story relative to the earthly origin of my Savior. I am not afraid of the miracles disturbing the church of my fathers. I am not afraid of the fountain filled with blood, without any help, to wash every sin that the world knows completely away, without any help from the good deeds or clean lives of mortal man. I am not afraid of the bodily resurrection of my Lord or even of his coming again. And so I see no dark and stormy cloud in the coming of the tramp, tramp, tramping of any group of men, whatever they may call themselves, who contend for those doctrines that in the old Methodist meeting house I was taught and which I have had no cause whatever to abandon.

Of one thing I am very solicitous. I am exceedingly anxious that Rationalism do not substitute any processes for the old-time religion, and that the materialistic philosophies of this generation be not permitted to make war upon the very altars of our Holy Savior, and here again, I find my heart warm toward the defenders of the fundamentals. I see in all this man-made program of progress and advance, this character salvation plan, this living your way into heaven, this path of evolution from before the cradle to yon' side the grave, a challenge to the old cross and the old faith that harks back to clean-cut rationalism and unmitigated materialistic philosophy, and any ally who comes to my side in battling against them is welcome and my comrade-at-arms.

NEARER THE "TOP OF THE HILL!"

Dr. I. W. Cooper was interested in an article I sent to the Advocate the first of 1922 entitled, "Climbing the Hill." I was speaking of the work at Pearl River Avenue, McComb. When coming here I recognized there was a hill to climb and set about climbing it; and I can truthfully say we are nearer the top than ever! Our net increase in membership last year was thirty-eight, and I was gratified at that, as our territory is not so large; but up to the present we have exactly thirty-eight net increase this year, with seventeen on profession of faith, whereas last year we only had seven on profession of faith. We have had some very bright conversions—more already than last year—and our financial budget is up now to what we had last year the first of November. The Sunday school has gradually grown this year, holding up unusually well through the hot season; the prayer meeting has grown and is a place of spiritual power, while the Woman's Missionary Society is doing remarkably well. New members have been added during the year and they lack less than a hundred dollars of having over five hundred dollars worth of furniture in the new parsonage paid for. All this money for all church purposes has been paid without a single "oyster supper," etc., or any special drive, just carrying out the Biblical injunction, "bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse." Almost every member tithes, and those who do not are unusually liberal contributors. Some enthusiastic tithers in every church will undoubtedly create a liberal spirit among the whole membership. We have recently painted the church on the inside most beautiful[illegible]. We had the very best church social on the [illegible] lawn recently I ever attended in [illegible] life. We [illegible] the Municipal Band of McComb [illegible] sacred music. The whole [illegible]

We called off our Culpepper and received [illegible] from said meeting at least [illegible] large [illegible] were sent to the pastor, but all of [illegible] haven't shown up yet—guess they'll be coming [illegible] later. We received fifteen members during Moll's meeting. Most of the members have come in during the regular Sunday services. We have had some gracious revival services at the regular preaching hours, for which we are so thankful, and the end is not yet!

Rev. H. F. Carter and his wife have been invaluable assistants during the year. It is [illegible] when a pastor has to stop, as Brother Carter did last Conference on account of impaired health, but God has made them a blessing to McComb in general and Pearl River Avenue in particular during their enforced superannuation for this year. Our church will always love them and [illegible] them with fervent prayer. Brother Carter [illegible] going back into the regular work at Conference. Let earnest prayer be made for his complete physical recovery; we need them, God [illegible] them, and the church needs them!

On account of sickness in the family this year, my evangelistic work has been curtailed, but what few meetings I have conducted have been the best in ten years. How I do praise God that He is still with us, blessing, preserving, pouring out His spirit immeasurably on my thirsty soul, graciously satisfying every longing, supplying every need, and making us SO GLAD through the work He has called me to do. Blessed be His name for ever!

Friday morning, July 27, 1923, the sad news came of the untimely death of BROTHER JOS. L. LEWIS, who at the time was living at Boyle, Miss., and who was the victim of a neighbor's wrath, caused primarily from the stand the deceased took in an effort to have certain objectionable practices removed from the immediate neighborhood. His birth was at Spring Ridge, Miss., near Terry, on April 4, 1877, and in early boyhood he joined the Methodist church. On April 24, 1912, he was married to Miss Etna Skates, of Utica, Miss., and to them were born five little boys, Joe George, Aldridge, Lamar, Murry, and Victor, who, with their mother, survive him, also his father, George W. Lewis, of Terry, with four brothers, G. E., J. R., of Terry, and W. J. of Clarksdale, D. W., of Flora, and sister, Mrs. Ida Price, of Van Winkle. The funeral services were conducted Saturday, at 10 a. m., from his father's home by the writer, with a large number of relatives and friends in attendance, as Brother Lewis was held in high esteem by those who knew him best. At the cemetery here a representative number of Masons of Raymond took charge of the service. The floral offerings were many and beautiful, one large one coming from the Bible class of Boyle, of which the deceased was a member. Heartfelt sympathy is extended to the bereaved ones in this sad hour, which experience came as such a shock. May the grace of Him who doeth all things well be sufficient to sustain in this their loss and sorrow.

CHARLIE DOWNER, Pastor.

RESOLUTIONS.

A deep sense of our loss is felt in our church and Missionary Society because our friend and co-worker, MRS. HATTIE MARTIN SHERMAN, left us on Aug. 4. There is an aching void in our hearts, but we bow in humble submission to the will of our heavenly Father in calling her home.

Be it resolved:

1. That we extend our love and sympathy to her dear ones. May the memory they cherish of her beautiful life inspire them to greater service for him.

2. That we appreciate the privilege of having been associated with her in the Master's cause, and we thank God for her example of loyalty and devotion.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, to our Messenger, and the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed by: Mrs. Mamie Meyer, Mrs. W. D. Davis, Mrs. S. E. Morton.

Brookhaven, Miss.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, it has pleased God in his divine wisdom to call unto him MINNIE LEE JONES, daughter of Rev. M. R. Jones; and, whereas, we are sorely bereaved in the loss of our friend and associate; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That her life, though cut off before due season, was a joy and pleasure to her family and friends.

2. That the church and the Sunday school of Montrose, Miss., and her loves ones have lost in her one whose name stood for "Service for the Master."

3. That we cherish the memory of her trustful, beautiful life, and strive to emulate her example as a beacon light.

4. That we extend the family sympathy, rejoicing with them in the example and training of a godly child.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Sunday school, a copy be sent to the family, and a copy be furnished to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed by: Miss Lyda Sartor, Mrs. Roy Mapp, Mrs. Foster Neill, committee.

A GREAT MEETING AND THE RESULTS.

On July 29, Rev. C. N. Guice, one of the greatest evangelists of the Southern Methodist Church, whose home is in Conway, Ark., began a meeting in the Methodist church at this place, and continued the meeting eight days.

If I live till the next meeting of our Annual Conference, I shall have been in the itinerant work twenty-five years, and I can say without mental reservation I have never had a preacher to assist me whose work was more satisfactory than the work done by Brother Guice.

With his attractive singing and forceful preaching, he won the attention and admiration of his auditors in the first service he held, and throughout the entire series there was not a dull service, although rain interfered with the attendance somewhat at times. Every night, except one rainy night, the church was filled, and at times it was packed. Because of the large attendance, the services Saturday night and last Sunday of the meeting were held in the commodious school auditorium, and it was almost filled Sunday, morning and night.

The special features of the meeting were the downtown services, held each afternoon in the courtyard, where large numbers assembled to hear the ten to fifteen minute message of the preacher, the mass meeting for women and girls held at the church Friday afternoon, and the big rally for men and boys at the school building Sunday afternoon.

As a result of the meeting, yesterday we received into the Methodist church a class of twenty-three, all on profession of faith. Six offered themselves for membership in the Presbyterian Church, four for the Baptist Church, and one for the Episcopal Church. This ingathering into the various churches means much to the town, but the success of the meeting is not measured alone in the number of accessions to the churches, nor do I think it the greatest feature of the meeting, while it is great. Some other results which to me loom large are a strengthening of the Sunday school, putting new life into the Epworth League, the promise of some of the ladies to quit the card clubs, and the reviving of some of the men of the church who had grown cold.

To any pastor who wishes a genuine revivalist to assist in a meeting, I unhesitatingly recommend Brother Guice. His ability as a singer cannot but attract all lovers of music, especially the children and young people. His arguments are convincing, his diction is almost perfect, his theology is perfectly sound, his appeals almost irresistible. He does not resort to any kind of sensational methods or harrowing illustrations to stir the emotions of the people, but preaches a plain gospel in the clear-cut, old-fashioned style, and makes a personal application which drives the truth home so forcefully as to attract the attention of all hearers and bring conviction to the sinner and comfort to the Christian.

T. J. O'NEILL, P. C.

Rolling Fork, Miss., Aug. 13.

SAY THEM!

The preacher heard many good words and received many expressions of good will and co-operation from the people at the beginning of his pastorate. Say those kind words again, dear people, on a hot Sunday morning when the congregation is not up to the standard. Say them again as the pastor meets with the official board and makes the hard pull to secure the Conference collections in full. Say them again, especially when some may criticize. Say them kindly and gently as the experienced horseman speaks to the big strong horses when the load is heavy and the road is long. Yes, keep on saying kind words, and the preacher will pull every load put upon him, his own and many the people themselves should bear.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

If man lived like man indeed, then houses would be temples. People are always expecting to get peace in heaven, but you know whatever peace they get there will be ready made. Whatever of making peace they can be blest for must be on the earth here. —Ruskin.

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? ## A GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

Under the above title recently appeared in the Daily States of New Orleans the following editorial, which should be of interest to the people of our patronizing Conferences:

"Some sixty years ago a wise old citizen of New Orleans, the late Bishop John C. Keener, conceived the idea of founding a great Methodist institution on the Gulf Coast of Mississippi. Near the city limits of Biloxi he purchased a frontage of a quarter of a mile, running back a mile or more to the Back Bay, and established thereon a camp ground.

"The original idea was that this was to be a place where Methodist folks of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana could aestivate, and where an old-time Methodist camp meeting could be held, for calling sinners to repentance. A number of people were induced to build more or less permanent cottages on the camp grounds, and these are now in use by the owners or by those who rent them. They cluster along the beach front, in as pretty a setting as one can find on the Mississippi Sound. An auditorium has been built and is used for Sunday services and for the Divinity School, and a day school is maintained nine months in the year in its buildings.

So much for history and a statement of the case. The Southern Methodists are building slowly in the mountains of North Carolina, at Lake Junaluska, a Chautauqua that is becoming widely known as one of the beauty spots of the South.

May we not with propriety suggest that this great denomination is large enough and prosperous enough to duplicate the Junaluska institution at the Seashore Camp Grounds? In a few years there will be a widespread and impelling demand that the church do something with this enormously valuable piece of property that Bishop Keener's foresight secured for it. Why not make a bargain now, and as in the case of Junaluska, lay plans for a fifty-year development?

The Methodist people are numerous and well-to-do in Louisiana, Alabama and in Mississippi. If all the Methodist conferences in these States, comprising five and probably several hundred thousand members would take over this property and put it in the hands of business men, as Lake Junaluska was done, it could be financed and then made the wonder spot of the Gulf Coast.

What is needed there is first, a great college for men and women. Then a summer and winter Chautauqua bringing the best attractions in America to instruct and entertain. The land should be laid off by some great landscape architect maybe the one who laid out Junaluska and the lots sold to Methodists who will build homes of a style that will fit in with the general scheme of beauty. Parks and playgrounds for children can be laid out and developed all over the grounds and driveways that will [illegible] to back.

Let no one think that the religious [illegible] and restrictions will cripple the development of the property or make it less attractive than such places are under public ownership. It is not so at Chautauqua, New York, owned by the Northern Methodist Church or at Winona Lake, owned by the Presbyterians, or at Lake Junaluska or Black Mountain, or any of the many other places owned by religious bodies. Not even Asbury Park is a puritanical place.

Everybody in this Gulf Coast country has a direct or indirect interest in the development of the Seashore Camp Grounds, and so every one of us should give it a sympathetic boost.

Recovery From Influenza Hastened by

PE-RU-NA

Mr. C. A. Allen, R. R. No. [illegible] Bondurant, Iowa, gives testimony to the healing power of Pe-ru-na. Influenza left him much run down in health with catarrh of the nose, throat and bronichal tubes punctuated with attacks of asthma. He writes:

"While recovering from the Influenza I was so weak I could not gain any strength for two months. The latter part of the winter, I bought six bottles of Pe-ru-na and began taking it. My weight increased to 175 pounds, the most I ever weighed.

My usual winter weight is 155. If you can use this letter for any good, you are perfectly welcome."

Such evidence cannot fail to convince the rankest unbeliever of the merits of Pe-ru-na.

FOR CLEAN PICTURES.

By Rae D. Henkle, in the Christian Herald.

At a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce in California a few weeks ago the guest of honor and the principal speaker was a prominent Chinese business man.

"I want to ask you," he said with all the seriousness of which he was capable, "to be careful of the kind of pictures you send to our country. If you can't send any better illustrations of domestic life in America than those you have been sending, keep them in the United States, provided you want China to think well of you and Christian civilization."

This Chinese gentleman touched on a matter that has been emphasized by missionaries from all countries for considerably over a year. They tell us—these men who have given their lives to the work of the Master and who have spent hundreds of millions of dollars in their various missionary activities—that films of the worst sort of standard—immoral, and apprently uncensored, have poured into their countries from America and are rapidly undermining their missionary efforts.

The other day we had a letter from Japan, pleading that America give them pictures that illustrate the best side of American life, not the worst side—pictures that would portray and interpret the great truths of the Bible.

"Help us missionaries," it asked. "Our people go to the cheap motion-picture place and see films that could not be exhibited on any screen in America, and from these films many, many thousands obtain their conception of Christianity and a Christian civilization. Give us good pictures that would in some measure counteract the effect of the pernicious, immoral picture. Our people cannot understand your language, but they can understand your pictures."

And what is true of religious teaching, and moral, clean entertainment in the missionary field is of course equally applicable to the young minds in America. Fathers and mothers and religious workers everywhere have been appealing to us to undertake this motion-picture problem.

Isn't that a call to be heard and answered? So the Christian Herald, through Herald Non-Theatrical Pictures, has definitely embarked on its mission of aiding the people of America to get the maximum value out of the films, and it has called the best minds to its assistance. Pictures have been purchased. Others have been leased. Arrangements for the production of still others have been made. All of them bear the stamp of approval of a Christian Herald Reviewing Board, so that any church can exhibit them with a feeling of perfect safety without the necessity of viewing them privately before they are offered to the congregation.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

We issued 20 certificates out of an enrollment of 40 at the training school held at Durant. All who attended testified that they appreciated the importance of a thorough preparation for teaching more than ever before. Our aim in these schools is to train the teachers to bring the children to a personal knowledge of Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior, to train them in worship and in service. The more teachers we get to understand this aim and prepare themselves to realize it in their work, the more speedily will the kingdom come.

How are we to check and turn back the blighting influence of rationalism that is gradually and steadily manifesting itself in the teaching of some of our leaders? God is able to conquer if preachers will proclaim the gospel, live the Christ life under the power of the Holy Spirit. In addition to this, train thousands of our men and women to teach the Word of God to the rising generation. This latter mentioned work is not for a day or a week, but throughout the year. If the rank and file of our Methodist people could realize that we are in a fight for the very existence of our church as a soul-saving agency, we would be willing to pay the price that must be paid for the Holy Spirit to come upon us, to study and pray and suffer that we might save our precious heritage. A Spirit-filled ministry in the pulpit and Spirit-filled teachers in the classroom can save our people. The men called of God must lead the way, or else thousands will be lost.

It is not too early to begin preparations for the fall work. Many have been from home taking a vacation, quite a number who remained home have been frolicking, and the church has been practically vacated during the summer. Something must be done to get the people back to the church. Why not try the observance of Children's Week? Send to me for leaflets explaining this enterprise for town and country church; also the leaflets, "The Power of Example," "Home Training and the Power of Authority," and "The Child, a Citizen." The pastor may send for them, the "Key Woman" in the charge, any teacher, or a good mother who would like to help her own child and the children of others in order that the community may be made a better place in which the children must live.

A training school will be held at Sunflower, Sept. 3-8, for the benefit of the teachers in that section of the Greenwood District. Give us an opportunity to help you to take part in establishing the kingdom of God in your community. Write Rev. Frank McGee if you wish to attend.

Let us show our appreciation of the Ruston offer as ministers and write the Educational Director, Rev. N. E. Joyner, to enroll us in the school. The school opens Aug. 26, at 7:30 p. m.

FROM THE CORINTH CIRCUIT.

Dear Brother Carley: We have just closed a glorious revival on the Corinth circuit at Box Chapel. The preaching was done by the Rev. J. A. George, of the Duncan and Jonestown work, in the Greenville District.

We received into the church eight new members, four of whom came from other denominations on their own volition. The church life was deepened and quickened, and Box Chapel received a new vision. No doubt but that she has taken first rank among our churches, spiritually and financially. The stewards went out and collected $92 on pastor's salary, and will pay everything in full, I'm sure.

I tell you, Brother George is the man with a clear gospel message. He is fearless, consecrated, has a passion for winning souls and doing personal work. He succeeds well in holding up Methodism as once delivered to the saints, and forming a loyal church constituency. He surely is a pastor's friend. He also emphasizes strongly stewardship and tithing, obedience and consecration to God and his cause.

This week we are at Marvin church, and Brother George is there and at his best. He is bringing great messages, and the power of God is manifested. The people here, too, are being greatly stirred, and we can't seat the people as they come from far and near to hear the plain gospel truth as presented. Quite a number have accepted the Lord, and we have received on profession 17 at Marvin, making 25 in all at Box Chapel and Marvin.

Pray for us.

Yours in the work,
D. R. McDOUGAL, Pastor.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

On Sunday, Aug. 12, Wray Bowie, of the Vicksburg District, held what was said to be one of the best one-day institutes and get-together meetings ever held in his district. There were between 75 and 100 Leaguers in attendance, all eager and deeply interested in the work. The program was as follows:

Subject—"Builders."

10:30 A. M.—Registration of delegates.

10:40 A. M.—Devotional, Port Gibson League.

10:45 A. M.—"You are welcome and we are glad to have you," Miss Louise Killingworth.

10:55 A. M.—"We are glad we came," Miss Bowers.

11 A. M.—"Builders," Wray Bowie, district secretary.

11:15 A. M.—Consecration service.

12 M.—Dinner at church.

12:30 P. M.—Devotional, Crawford Street League.

12:45 P. M.—"Importance of handbook in your building," Thurman Lewis, Conference vice president.

1:10 P. M.—Reports from Chapters.

1:40 P. M.—"Building our Junior League," Mrs. T. M. Ford.

2 P. M.—"Building New Territory," general discussion.

2:20 P. M.—"Build your plans for the next Assembly," Miss Hagan.

2:40 P. M.—"Building through cooperation," B. F. Harrell, secretary, Hattiesburg District.

3 P. M.—Unfinished business and adjournment.

In the absence of the pastor, Rev. J. T. Legget, the Main Street Chapter, Hattiesburg, had charge of the evening service at their church on Sunday, Aug. 12. A very interesting program was rendered to a large and appreciative audience. Several Leaguers discussed very ably some of the grand old hymns of our church, giving the history of each, showing when and by whom written, and why the song came to be written.

It was a very impressive service. Some of the hymns discussed were: "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," "Just as I Am," "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," and "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

Miss Gladys Smith, of Laurel, Miss., was chosen as a delegate to represent our conference at Lake Junaluska.

We have the following letter, dated July 5, from one of our pastors whose presence we greatly enjoyed at the Assembly:

"I have just returned from Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., where it was my privilege to attend the second Epworth League Assembly, and I want to thank the staff of officers and workers for their untiring efforts which made the occasion such a wonderful success.

"The dominant Christian spirit, the unsurpassed good fellowship, the platform lectures, the group prayer meetings, the morning watch services and the classroom work, as well as the cultural programs running through the six days' session, deeply impressed me. The spiritual uplift can only be felt and not written.

"The Leaguers and the pastor who were absent missed a BIG EVENT. The Assembly was a veritable spiritual feast. Long live the Assembly!"

Signed, A Joe Beasley, Washington Miss.

And this from Brother Campbell, of Wiggins, Miss.- you remember him:

"I believe the Epworth League Assembly, Mississippi Conference Epworth League, was the greatest meeting I ever attended, and I believe it will mean more to the young life of the church than any gathering in the Conference. The conduct was perfect. No one seemed to be there just for a good time, but all seemed to have a good time. Every one was ready for the work assigned -a few hours for sleep, a few minutes to eat, and the rest of the time was lessons, business, lectures, songs, play, and prayer, and not a minute wasted.

"The deep consecration of the young people impressed me more than anything else. Surely the church is going forward in the hands of the next generation."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Jackson District Meeting.

The Woman's Missionary Auxiliaries of the Jackson District were entertained in their conference by the First Church of Yazoo City on Friday, Aug. 3. The meeting was opened by singing the hymn, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," after which Mrs. W. E. Phillips read the devotional, using as her subject Matt. 23:1-6. Mrs. Phillips emphasized that only the best is good enough for our Saviour and our church. After the lesson Mrs. W. J. Ferguson led in prayer. Mrs. I. S. Reed, of Yazoo City, welcomed the delegates in a few well chosen words, to which Mrs. B. W. Lewis, of Eden, responded. The next number on the program was a solo by Mrs. West, "The Old Rugged Cross." At the request of Mrs. Phillips, the District Secretary, Mrs. R. J. Coker, presided over the conference.

Mrs. T. B. Gaddis, of Jackson, the former District Secretary, presented the Belle Bennett Memorial work, outlining the plan of raising the fund as adopted by the Conference, to commemorate the life and work of the noble and departed leader, Miss Bennett. Mrs. Gaddis made the women see that this is to be a gift of love, not one of difficulty, but their offering must be made on their knees, for without prayer the gift would not be a true memorial to Miss Bennett.

Mrs. S. J. Taylor, of Jackson, in the absence of Mrs. Ewing, the Conference Vice President, explained the cause of Prayer Specials, asking each Auxiliary to select one of our missionaries as a prayer special and to fill out cards pledging themselves to pray for that worker at every one of their meetings.

Mrs. Will Bradley, of Canton, the Conference Director of Young People, made a plea that our Young People be impressed with the idea of life service either as a sturdy Christian at home or as a worker on the Firing Line. As a means to this end Mrs. Bradley urged that our Young People's work be made more attractive and spiritual, in order to impress them that the most beautiful life after all is the life of Christian service. She pleaded with the women that they pray for this work, for this is our biggest and best work and the one of greatest opportunity and our most precious possession.

Miss Mary Stokes, one of our volunteers for service, spoke of what the women of the Conference mean to the girls in training; of the daily life of the Scarritt girls, in which every phase of work, mental, physical, and spiritual, is developed; of the course of study, both literary and practical; of the special Christian work the girls have opportunity to do while at Scarritt. She stated that there are 215 deaconesses and home missionaries in the work, and a total of 428 Scarritt graduates in active service. In speaking of the needs of the school, she said that the greatest need was intercessory prayer—with reference to material things—there is a need for showers particularly—then of the need for more volunteers, there being at this time a crying need for at least 100. Miss Stokes closed by emphasizing what it means to the girls to feel that the women back home are standing back of them and that they are taking a personal interest in them. Miss Porter at this time stated that Miss Daisy Inez Ferguson, of Woodville, would be our Conference volunteer at Scarritt this year, and asked the women to write to her and pray for her.

Mrs. J. B. Warterer and Miss Cogburn sang a duet, "In the Garden," which was enjoyed by all.

Miss Addie Grecly, the deaconess who is serving Galloway Memorial, was introduced to the conference.

Mrs. W. E. Noblin led the Round Table discussion on "How to Interest the Church in the Woman's Work," to which representatives from Bentonia, Canton, Yazoo City, Eden, Satartia, Capitol Street, Flora and Vaughan added suggestions.

The next number on the program was a solo by Mrs. Eugene McGuire.

Rev. M. L. Burton, presiding elder of the Jackson District, talked on bringing in the unused resources of the church through the Woman's Missionary Society, showing that the problem is one of continuous presentation of the cause and of educating the women on the subject. Brother Burton suggested that the women ask that they be allowed to present the subject to the church once a month at the time of the four-minute speaker. He laid on the women the willful neglect on their part in overlooking those nearest them and in not urging them constantly and prayerfully to take part in the work. Brother Burton urged the stronger Auxiliaries to go, talk, and pray with the women who have not organized or who are weak in their organization.

The conference enjoyed a cornet solo by Mr. Uderwood, "The Holy City."

Brother Burton moved that the conference send a telegram of sympathy to Mrs. Harding. The motion was carried, and a committee was appointed to look after this. After a prayer by Mr. W. J. Ferguson, the morning session was dismissed.

The ladies of Yazoo City served a delightful plate lunch to all the delegates in the parlors of the church, and a pleasant social hour was enjoyed.

The afternoon session was opened by the singing of "I Need Thee Every Hour," after which Mrs. B. W. Lewis conducted the devotional, using as her subject [illegible] 19. Miss [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] ing the women see that the [illegible] full of opportunity for Christian service and [illegible].

In answer to Roll Call, 13 Auxiliaries responded, there being 52 delegates and 16 mission study classes and 16 Bible study classes. Brother Burton then called a roll of those churches where there are no Auxiliaries, showing the women where their opportunity for development lay.

A rising vote of thanks was given the ladies of Yazoo City for the splendid manner in which they had entertained the conference, after which Brother Burton dismissed the assembly with prayer.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

From Mrs. Darby.

Dear Friend: Our second quarter's report has gone to headquarters and I am glad to give you some of the figures sent. The full report will be seen in the Missionary News and the Advocate, but I want you to know of the increase in new organizations. We had 5 adult, 6 young people, 5 junior, and 4 baby divisions, a total of 20 organized during the second quarter. The first three months of the year showed a total of 15, which gives us a gratifying increase. However, there were several Auxiliaries dropped from the roll.

This is discouraging, indeed, to both your district secretary and to me. I am wondering, if, in case you know of some "dying or dead" Auxiliary near you, it would be possible for you to do some missionary work and try and revive interest in our great work.

I feel sure that you will be interested in knowing that our secretary of Home Cultivation, Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, Nashville, has been given a six months' leave of absence and sailed [illegible] Vancouver on July 12 for a visit [illegible] China. Quoting from a letter from her, written just previous to her sailing: "The [illegible] important matter [illegible] the standpoint of my office is that the regular collections shall not [illegible]. My [illegible], in the raising of the Bennett Memorial, and I have been greatly encouraged at the spirit of the women whenever I have had the opportunity of presenting it—but [illegible] singly keep the [illegible] the regular collections." FRIENDS NOTICED IMPROVEMENT

Wonderful Results from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Beloit, Wis.—"My female trouble was brought on by overwork. I had worked in stores and had to do heavier work than my strength could stand, and had to be on my feet most of the time. Finally I had to give up this work entirely and stay at home. Doctor's medicine did not give me much relief, and my mother wanted me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took a couple of bottles of it and thought it did not help me as much as it should, so I gave it up to try something else. Nothing I took helped me much, so I finally decided to give the Vegetable Compound another trial and to take enough of it to make sure it would help me. I have taken it over a year now and it has brought wonderful results. I have gained from 93 to 110 pounds and am keeping house now. My friends all notice the change in my health. I will be glad to answer all letters that women write to me about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. W. G. MONSON, 1515 Park Ave., Beloit, Wis.

EQUIPMENT UNSURPASSED.

It is gratifying to know what our own people think, of course, but when a prominent daily, in China, begins to congratulate and talk about "perfection"—it is particularly heartening. The North China Daily News, among other fine things, says: "The Southern Methodist Church is to be congratulated on having one of the most complete and beautiful hospitals to be found in China, in England, in America, or in Europe. The buildings are absolutely fireproof and are complete in every respect, even when measured by the highest medical standards. The lighting and ventilation of both the private and general wards have nothing to be desired, and the furnishings would compare most favorably with any finest hospitals. They are indeed perfection, viewed from either a layman's or a surgeon's point of view."—Missionary Voice.

THE PARABLE OF THE SHORTAGE OF TOWELS.

I rode one night in a Pullman car, and after I had slept, I still rode on. For my journey was a long one. And verily, I have many long journeys. And the Porter was very Parsimonious with his Towels.

And the day was Hot, and whatever Comfort a Traveler found was in Occasional Washing. And there were Very Few Towels in the Rack.

And I inquired of the Porter concerning the reason.

And he said, This is the Front Sleeper. And the men's end is next to the Day Coach. And men come in from the Day Coach, and wash, or pretend to wash, and they carry Away Towels.

And I inquired of him, Are the folk in the Day Coach less honest than those in the Pullman?

And he said, They who ride in the Pullman are none too honest; but they pay Company for the privilege of what they Steal.

And I said, Hast thou much trouble with them?

And he said, Every Porter hath checked up against him his losses, and if they grow so as to be larger than the average of those of other Porters, then he is Censured or Fired. And we learn to notice as we make up the Berths, and count the Linen and the Blankets.

And he said, Those Students in Colleges they have No Conscience. At Ithaca and Syracuse they must not teach those men anything but just how to Swipe Things. I believe that if I could go through their Fraternity Houses, I should find them full of Pullman Blankets. Verily, no man who is a College Student ought to be allowed in a Pullman Car with a bag larger than is necessary for a Tooth Brush.

And I heard from him much more.

And I asked, Do not the Porters steal some things when they find they are below their Average?

And he said, The Mark on the Pullman Linen will not come off. No, sir, there is no way to get it off. And what would I do if I should be sick, and some one from the Company should visit me and find my Delirious Head resting on a Pullman Pillow Case? No, sir, some Porters may steal a little to keep up their Average, but I do not consider that is Right or Safe.

And I said, Nothing is Safe that is not Right. Nevertheless, the Passengers on this Car desire that they keep themselves Clean. Therefore, I pray thee, get us some Towels.

And he said, Yes, sir, but it is a pity that all men are not Honest.

And I think so, too.—Index.

THINK IT OVER.

By Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, in the Christian Herald.

Our traffic cop says the only safe rule for driving a car is for the driver to take for granted that every one he meets and every one behind him is either drunk, crazy, blind, deaf, dumb, reckless, childish, crippled, or in a hurry. And even then, one is not sure of missing an accident unless he locks the car up in the garage and never takes it out. For the car may be stolen.

We don't go to the Sunday baseball games, so we are asking for information.

STANDARD TRAINING SCHOOL AT DURANT, MISS.

In the Grenada District Standard Training School in Leadership Training held at Durant, Miss., in the Sunday School Department of the Methodist Church, Aug. 6-11, under the direction of the Sunday School Board of the North Mississippi Conference, twenty-nine received a certificate for credit work, finishing one unit of the training course, out of an enrollment of forty. Though this was a school for the Grenada District for that part of the territory from Winona south, only Pickens and Goodman were represented in the out-of-town constituency.

Of the number from the Durant Sunday school receiving certificates, three were the oldest members of the school, being above seventy-five years of age: Mrs. A. C. Shine, Mrs. M. J. Moore, and Captain F. A. Howell. The holding of this school has marked an epoch in the church life of this community. In response to a request to give a reason for religious education, Captain F. A. Howell, eighty-four years of age, handed in the following:

"The strongest reason I know for religious education is that in the future it will give us a citizenship that will be both well informed in the things that will make for the material welfare of the country and the uplift of society. When people have an intelligent idea of God and his overruling providence, they are strong to do the right and can instruct those less informed, and train them to be useful themselves and helpful to their fellow-men."

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Conference Secretary; Rev. E. S. Lewis, chairman of the Conference Sunday School Board; Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, and Mrs. J. B. Randolph composed the faculty. These choice workers did splendid service and put a larger meaning into the Sunday school work.

IMPERIAL BRICK.

In 1922 Mrs. W. W. Pinson had the privilege of seeing the new hospital buildings at Soochow, and in commenting on them makes this most illuminating statement: "The main building, fronting the street, is a typical piece of Chinese architecture, crowned with one of those beautifully curved roofs so unique and attractive. Another distinguishing thing is that it is constructed of Imperial brick, and that no building can ever be erected of the same material again, for the reason that no more are made. These bricks were made of the famous Soochow clay, very large—about 28 inches square and 4 inches thick. On each brick is the name of the Emperor, the Governor, and the Imperial seal. They were used only for Imperial buildings. The penalty for using them otherwise was to have your most honorable head chopped off. Dr. Snell found a lot of these bricks unused, and as there was no longer any use for Imperial brick in a new Chinese Republic, he was able to purchase them for the new hospital, thereby giving us a building very distinctive."

THE SPIRIT OF GOOD WILL.

The following words are authoritatively reported as having been spoken by the late President Harding just before he started on the ill-fated Alaska trip: "I know my limitations; I know how far removed from greatness I am. But, be that as it may, I intend to approach every problem with good will in my heart instead of hatred. Most questions which are settled by armed force are never permanently settled. Problems can be solved fundamentally only as they are worked out of a spirit of neighborly good will. Good will is the only solvent of ill will. I believe that this is the time for good will to be used as the greatest and most effective political policy, in furtherance of that good understanding without which no permanent betterment in human affairs can be achieved. If I am misunderstood, and another course is demanded of me, then I shall accept, as I must, what fate may have politically in store for me. But I will not change my policy of good will, even though it lead to my defeat for another term to the Presidency and my relegation to private life."

There are many things that need emphasis today in view of the difficulties by which we are beset and the problems by which we are confronted; among them all, we know of none that needs more to be insisted upon and practiced by all parties to all disputes than the good thing that our late President declared to be the guiding principle in all situations—good will. There may be all of firmness, of positiveness, of unflinching adherence to the right as the right is seen, but without good will on all sides, bitterness and harsh speaking almost invariably are developed. Genuine brotherliness is one of the most beautiful expressions of good will.

BIBLE READING IN THE SCHOOLS.

According to a recent investigation conducted by the National Reform Association the laws of the various States permit or require the daily reading of the Bible in the schools of about 83 per cent of the American people, the remaining 17 per cent not being permitted to have it on account of Supreme Court decisions or by action of other State authorities. It is coming to be more and more realized that moral training is a necessary and vital part of any educational system, and there seems to be a growing feeling on the part of thinking people generally that the Bible, as the supreme revelation of moral law, should have a place in all schools. Some of the States have made Bible reading in the public schools compulsory for many years, Massachusetts having required it since 1855, and others are providing for it. Pennsylvania enacted a law in 1913, which is generally looked upon as a model one of its kind, being acceptable to all classes of its citizens. It follows:

"At least ten verses from the Holy Bible shall be read or caused to be read without comment, at the opening of each and every public school, upon each and every school day, by the teacher in charge, provided that where any teacher has other teachers under and subject to direction, then the teacher exercising the authority shall read the Holy Bible or cause it to be read as herein directed.

"If any school teacher, whose duty it shall be to read the Holy Bible or cause it to be read, as directed in this act, shall fail or omit to do so, said teacher shall upon charges preferred for such failure or omission and proof before the governing board of the school district, be discharged."

Somewhat similar laws to the above were passed by Tennessee in 1915, by New Jersey in 1916, by Alabama in 1919, and by Georgia and Mississippi in 1921. In New York City the Bible has been read daily in the schools under a by-law of the Board of Education, which provides: "All the schools under the jurisdiction of the Board shall be opened with reading a portion of the Holy Bible, without note or comment."

Whatever else people may or may not be able to agree upon, it certainly ought not to be hard to get them to agree upon the simple reading of the Word of God in the presence of their children.

HOW DO THEY STAND ON RACE TRACK GAMBLING?

According to newspaper announcements, four candidates are already in the field for the governorship of Louisiana. So far as we know, they are all estimable gentlemen, and doubtless every one of them has at least some qualifications for the high office he seeks. Their platforms are not yet before us for consideration; we want to remind them, therefore, that there are some thousands of voters in the State who want to know how the candidates stand on the question of race track gambling before they make up their minds whom to support. We hope they will express themselves unequivocally on the matter, so there may be no uncertainty as to what their attitude will be if elected. Horse racing as it is conducted in New Orleans is, by every token, an economic folly and a moral crime. Away with it!

THE FAITH OF A SCIENTIST.

We do not undertake to say whether Thomas A. Edison holds an orthodox faith or not, but we have no disposition to question his sincerity and earnestness when he makes a clear-cut declaration concerning his acceptance of Christ. The Associated Press quotes him as saying, while he was attending the funeral of his friend, the late President Harding: "There is a great directing intelligence [illegible] who [illegible] of the [illegible]. I have faith in [illegible] the soul [illegible] [illegible] to them. * * * [illegible] body [illegible] that [illegible] [illegible] When the [illegible] the body, [illegible] and dead. ## THE DAILY MIRACLE.

The following is worth passing along: "The supply of time is truly a daily miracle, an affair genuinely astonishing when it is examined. You wake up in the morning and lo! your purse is magically filled with twenty-four hours of the unmanufactured tissue of the universe of your life. It is yours. It is the most precious of possessions. No one can take it from you. It is unstealable. And no one receives either more or less than you receive. Talk about an ideal democracy! In the realm of time there is no aristocracy of wealth and no aristocracy of intellect. Genius is not rewarded by even an extra hour a day."

THEY ARE MURDERERS.

Efforts are being made in West Virginia to have the Legislature enact a law making persons who sell poison liquor liable to a charge of first degree murder. When we read the analyses of some of the [illegible] that have been seized from bootleggers, which show the presence of deadly poisons, we feel that the enactment of such a law would be an adequate punishment for [illegible]. These [illegible] be all the [illegible] the poison stuff [illegible] the profits they are to [illegible]. They are murderers [illegible]!

PIFFLE!

Not long ago a well-known national politician [illegible] Europe at the expense of the United States. The point of [illegible] is the statement that the wife says to the husband: "Bill, let's go to Europe for a couple of months and have a good time without bothering about [illegible]." "Europe for [illegible]" [illegible] spend all the money [illegible] as long as the dollars [illegible] they cannot spend their money [illegible] for liquor at home. If this is the process of reasoning followed by those who are the leaders in politics no wonder the country is in a poor way politically. It is pure piffle.

LABOR SUNDAY MESSAGE, FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

The twelve months just closing have been marked by industrial events which, although of less sensational interest than those of the preceding year, have large significance for the industrial life of America. A period of unemployment has given way to a period of greater business activity and of rising wages. The upward swing of the business cycle has greatly altered the relative position of capital and labor in industrial relations. The activities of labor organizations are no longer so aggressively or so successfully opposed, and the economic power of the unions is much increased. This economic advantage may indeed be but temporary, but while it lasts it is labor's opportunity to set new standards of public service.

With the essential aims of the labor movement, the Christian church has deeply sympathized. The criticism is not without foundation, however, that both in its particular objectives and in the means by which they are sought, organized labor sometimes fails to take sufficient account of the needs of the whole community. The fault by no means rests with labor alone; when forced to devote all its energies to a defense of its right to live, the labor movement could not be expected to develop social leadership. But the new economic advantage which, with the turn of the business tide has come to labor, enhances the stewardship for which it must give an accounting. To the extent to which they are relieved of the necessity of defending rights, labor leaders may give their attention to more constructive undertakings.

Such complaint as may be fairly brought, from the Christian point of view, against the activities of American labor unions, arises out of the fact that they have placed too great emphasis upon the preservation of their own status and too little provision has been made for the growing demands of the community in goods and services. No permanent advantage can be gained by any group which does not enrich the life of the people as a whole. This has been repeatedly asserted and often demonstrated with respect to combinations of capital, and it is equally true of organizations of labor. Labor itself has as large a stake as any other group in the prompt and adequate fulfillment of the community's needs.

It is not to be denied that the distribution of the product of labor is far from equitable, and this fact inevitably weakens labor's incentive to produce. But the basic economic fact in America today is that instead of a surplus, the nation has an actual deficit; not enough goods are produced, even assuming the most equitable distribution, to provide the material needs of all our people. Labor cannot, of course, by its own efforts create an economic surplus. It may even be admitted that responsibility for greater industrial efficiency rests primarily with management. But the attainment of this end seems to be waiting upon the leadership of an industrial group that will give second place to defensive considerations in the interest of greater service. There must be a new lead, a breaking of the industrial deadlock. Would any other single act be so potent economically as a concerted effort by the great labor organizations to make industry a public service? The preponderance of economic power still rests with capital, but the improvement in labor's economic status has brought an extraordinary opportunity for moral leadership.

Employers have undoubtedly been too ready to make labor bear full responsibility for low production. Recurring periods of unemployment have struck fear into the hearts of the workers, lest increased production should mean a flooding of the market with goods and a consequent shortage of employment. But this fear must give way to a fuller understanding of the nation's needs. In the future, labor unions must attempt more and more to justify themselves by functioning, as the guilds of the Middle Ages functioned, in creating, and to the limit of their power, presreving high standards of production. It is to the interest of labor, as well as of the community, that union membership should have a significance akin to that of membership in a profession. It should be a guarantee of the attainment of high standards in craftsmanship and of a high order of integrity and fidelity.

We are not without examples of such industrial efficiency and statesmanship. Definite efforts have been made by more than one labor union to create higher standards of service. The absence of the skilled craftsmen from the railroad shops during the present strike has made the country newly aware of its dependence upon them. Likewise the maintenance of efficient production by means of a long-tried agreement in the garment trades proves that vigorous unionism is not incompatible with industrial efficiency, loyalty to the industry and orderly government. This regime of joint government has not ended strikes in the industry, but it has very considerably reduced their number.

Not only the aims of labor but the methods by which they are sought must justify themselves before the conscience of the community. In this connection, several events of the year should be instructive to the leaders of the labor movements.

The continuance on several of the railroads of the conflict, now more than a year old, over recognition of the shop crafts' unions, has caused great hardship to the striking employees, enormous expense to the railroads, and a very considerable hazard to traffic. The public has been divided in its attitude, but the resentment caused by the interruption of transportation has made it almost impossible to secure attention to the issues involved. From some points of view the results of such a contest may, in the minds of those who participate, justify the undertaking. Nevertheless, labor cannot afford to overlook the cost and the hazard to its own cause that are entailed by an appeal to economic force.

This does not mean that the effectiveness of collective action by working men can be doubted, or that the propriety of such action should be questioned. The material gains to the working people of America which have resulted from organized effort on their own part cannot be denied. It would be superficial to say that the continuance of strikes is necessarily an evidence of a lack of social motive on the part of labor organizations.

It is quite conceivable that serious disturbances may be rather an evidence of a devotion to high ideals of liberty. There have been undoubted examples of justifiable and splendidly executed struggles on the part of labor. What is essential, however, from the social and Christian point of view, is that the aim of every act on the part of labor should square with labor's declared purpose to raise the standard of life for the whole community.

Of much import are the developments of the last few weeks with reference to the long continued regime of the twelve-hour day in the steel industry. An appeal to public opinion based solely upon a regard for the human values involved has brought an unequivocal declaration from the industry that the twelve-hour day would be shortly abandoned. Might not this end have been accomplished much earlier by an insistent and sustained appeal to the nation on the part of organized labor? Labor has played an important part in developing public opinion with reference to this question, but it can hardly be doubted that the labor movement has given too little attention to the possibilities of an appeal to the great body of public opinion which it has helped to create. It is inevitable, and just, that when elemental rights of working men are persistently denied, their economic power should make itself felt in protest, but even then that protest can be effective only in so far as labor commands the confidence of the community as to the breadth of its vision and the sincerity of its purpose.

Of perhaps equal significance is the continuing record of orderly settlement of disputes, in strongly organized industries, through jointly maintained arbitration machinery operating under an impartial chairman. An important feature of this new development is the increasing dependence that certain labor organizations are placing upon research and upon the substitution of proved facts for partisan propaganda and warlike methods. As labor becomes more secure in its right to collective action, the community expects that an appeal to fairness and justice will take the place of an appeal to force. This does not mean weaker organization; on the contrary, it means more effective organization. But it means that such organization shall justify itself by its social purpose rather than its might.

Labor very properly insists that as its dependence upon economic power is lessened the moral responsibility of the community increases. There can be no question that the public interest is paramount, but it is coming to be recognized that in time of excitement and stress the most conspicuous factor is less likely to be the public interest than the public's immediate convenience. It will not do to substitute for arbitrary action on the part of labor an equally arbitrary action on the part of the State. In one of his last public utterances, President Harding declared himself against any legislative attempt to compel men, or any group of men, to work against their will, even when a public utility is involved. It is true that this principle has not been fully established in the public mind, but the statement of the late President may perhaps be taken as defining the American public policy on this important issue. Can there be any question that the price of such freedom is increasingly wise and conscientious action on the part of organized labor?

The trend toward a greater measure of social control by no means affects labor alone; witness the report recently made public by the Federal Coal Commission on the anthracite branch of the industry. Perhaps more notable than any specfic recommendations in that report is the doctrine laid down that the industry in question "cannot continue to be treated as if it were not affected by a public interest." Can any one doubt that the great basic industries will be increasingly held to be "affected by a public interest," or that in the development of public policy with reference to them the primacy of that interest will be increasingly asserted? Labor has an important stake in the application of this principle. Justice in industry rests upon mutuality of responsibility and the greatest possible approach to equality of privilege. It is for this reason that spokesmen of organized religion have been reluctant to call upon labor to abandon aggressive measures, when these measures constituted the only means of balancing the economic power of capital. But as the community checks the aggressiveness of capital; as it increases the stated obligations and reduces the immunities of industrial employers, labor must expect to be likewise judged by more exacting social standards.

Another issue that labor must face is that involved in the country-wide controversy over the closed shop. The question cannot be settled by a mere declaration of abstract principles. It must be worked out with pa[illegible]ce and mutual respect by the parties involved. To the ardent supporter of trade unionism there is no violation of individual freedom in the closed shop principle. He considers it quite as just as the compulsory payment of taxes on the ground of participation in common benefits. From this point of view the individual worker has a moral obligation to the labor movement. But this doctrine cannot be impressed upon the community by force. Open-minded employers are coming to recognize the right of labor to organize and the impropriety and injustice of any interference by employers with such activity. This recognition is far from universal, but it will be increasingly difficult for employers to withhold it, if labor uses its power wisely. Possessed of the right peaceably to persuade workmen to affiliate with the labor movement, may not the representatives of organized labor abandon aggressive attempts, where they are now practiced, to enforce union membership through the instrument of the closed shop? The labor movement aims fundamentally to give the worker greater security of status, freedom of expression, and a juster share in the product of his labor. It can hardly be maintained that this ideal is consistent with the use of compulsion, either upon a fellow-worker, or upon an employer, in the matter of membership in a labor union.

The controversy over accountability of labor organizations for their own acts has too often taken the form of a demand for drastic court action or for some purely legal device to insure responsibility. The liability of labor organizations for damages resulting from unlawful acts has now been established by the United States Supreme Court. In the light of this fact it can hardly be longer contended that labor is legally responsible. But the ultimate questoin is one of ethics more than of law; responsibility is not accounted for by the mere satisfaction of a legal formula. There can be no doubt that the continuing power and influence of organized labor, and its standing with the community at large, will depend in great measure upon the degree to which it can be said that labor's word is as good as its bond.

It seems fitting and useful to call attention to these facts as Labor Day for 1923 approaches. Organized labor in America is faced by an unusual opportunity. The liberal policy toward labor organizations which was adopted during the war under the patronage of the Government was all but obscured during the depression period; but it is probable that in a fair test the public will support the right of labor, uncoerced and uncoercing, to organize on a trade union basis and to bargain collectively through appointed representatives for the improvement of its own conditions. It thus becomes more and more incumbent upon labor to make an earnest effort to introduce social ideals into industry.

The labor movement has a history of important achievement and of patriotic service. It promises to be greater in the future than in the past. But the public will increasingly insist, and the teachings of religion require, that in undertaking to serve the workers organized labor should serve the whole people. In no other way can the interests of labor itself be permanently advanced.

There is reason to believe that organized labor is not unaware of its opportunity and the responsibility which it entails. The recent appeal of the American Federation of Labor for the observance of Labor Sunday gives a clear recognition of the spiritual factors in industrial relations, and declares the essentially spiritual aims of the labor movement. This statement commands the respectful attention of the public. The public in turn will expect that the spiritual aims of the labor movement will make themselves manifest in very definite ways during the new period upon which we have entered.

THE SEASHORE CAMP GROUND—SOME REMINISCENCES.

By Payton A. Sowell.

NO. 5.

It is thought that more than a thousand people—perhaps several thousand—were converted at the camp meetings. There were fifteen or more years of religious prosperity.

It is possible, had Mississippi not pressed the matter of taxation, and even back taxes for the several years, the devotional feature of the grounds might have continued in a real sense to this day. But the value of the property greatly increased since 1871, and the burden came to the Trustees to meet the revenue, and it was a great burden to the cottage owners, for the Trustees increased the "ground rent," and the State increased "revenue" on the cottages, and, in 1923, the Trustees added a large per cent to ground rent again. It would be an unbearable burden to cottagers were it not the lovely situation adds greatly to their "gladness of spirits."

Bishop Marvin was once one of the wonderful preachers at the grounds. And in his case, I would not hesitate to say as a great spiritual orator—the Methodism of America had no superior. If there was ever a "lightning rod to the Spirit," Marvin was one.

At one service, after a powerful sermon, he called on Mrs. Ahrens to pray. She was born in Germany. She was a remarkably furnished woman. She began to pray in English, but rising into a state of high experience, she began to use her native tongue and pray. Bishop Marvin exclaimed, "Pray on, God understands German as well as English." How I would sacrifice, to hear again, this "strangely attractive man of God!" The Methodist church has never had in its ministry and episcopacy a man more unique in unction and power. It was not froth or sweetened wind; but he was endowed and furnished. His lectures on "Catholicism," on the "Atonement," and his sermons carried into the printed pages even the highest quality. How he reveled in the privilege of encircling the globe, and preaching the living word in the temples of idols! And if human voice and intonation could add virtue, in his, it had it added.

One, after knowing Bishop McTyeire, would imagine he had no taste for "camp meetings," for he was seemingly as quiet and cold as he was great. It was evident he rose up before the eyes of his generation, wide and high as a mountain; to the casual observer he was as cold as a mountain. But no man in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, loved "camp meetings" more than he. And Rev. W. G. Evans—of whom we have spoken—went back to see the "sea captain" assured of Divine power after he had heard Bishop McTyeire at the Camp Ground.

Rev. Dr. Tudor was originally of the Baltimore Conference, but then in New Orleans, and looked on as one of the finest preachers in the South. He attended once, and perhaps ofterner, the "camp meeting." At the same time that Rev. Dr. Tudor was in New Orleans, in another one of the churches, Rev. Dr. John Mathews was also a pastor, as was Rev. Dr. Walker.

When three such high-grade men filled the pulpits of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in one city, it was a loss to miss any one, and no loss to hear any one. The church had a high privilege in such circumstances.

Dr. Mathews was as fine a city pastor as the church had in its ranks. No man turned away from his sermon uninterested and unhappy with it. Some man who was bitterly opposed to the presence of manuscripts in the pulpit, was told not to hear Dr. Mathews, as his was always present. By circumstance he heard him. When through, the gentleman said, "If you knew what to do with them as Dr. Mathews, I would not object to them." They were certainly not in his way—nor of his audience.

After hearing him, I am sure it might be possible to "save many a scatter gun"—and reach the "Doxology" earlier and more directly, if many preachers had near a large-letter manuscript—and stuck to it.

At one great service, Dr. Tudor preached a fine sermon, but by no sort of urging could a move be secured. At last, in utter despair, he turned to Dr. Mathews, who was on the pulpit, and said, "Dr. Mathews, I can do nothing, you try." Dr. Mathews rose, and, saying softly and tenderly and beseechingly, and beckoning with his hands to every part of the great assemblage, "Come on, come on, come on!" And from every part of the room they came and came, until a hundred or more were at the chancel. Dr. Mathews had a strange charm and power over men.

These great men are gone. The lithe bodies in which they came to the camp meetings are as the dust of the valley. Those voices that rang out in such eloquent pathos in the ears of the thousands are stiller than the hushed winds. Personally, it gives me prideful pleasure to think of Drs. Mathews and Walker, for they were from Tennessee.

Rev. Dr. B. Caradine—then a pastor in New Orleans—preached at the camp meeting one night with great labor and time, and long use of argument, and, by his own sermon at the Camp Ground, convicted his own spirit that he needed a "second" work of grace in order to his sanctification. Not long afterwards, he claimed to receive it.

A literary flavor is given to the Camp Ground, for while Bishop Keener perhaps did not write here "The Location of Eden," or "Post Oak Circuit," I doubt not he discussed them and entertained many with them. But Rev. Mr. Van Valkenburg actually wrote a valuable book on an interesting and vital subject "Why Four Gospels," and did it here under the trees, and in sound of the tides.

Ex-President Jefferson Davis attended the camp meeting in 1885—perhaps oftener.

THE PASTOR'S STUDY.

Poor man, he hasn't any; that is, some men haven't. They should, however. You complain your pastor cannot preach much. How could he? Go to the parsonage and see. There are a few children, dear little things, and they fret and cry, all children do at times, and some at all times, and, poor man, he has no room of quiet seclusion where his books and papers and thinking are at his command. Give him a man's chance. Outside the kitchen the pastor's room should be the best room in the house. Try it on, parsonage committee.

Give him lovely surroundings, good atmosphere, quiet. Give him in the winter time flue connections; put a good stove in his room; let him have wood, so he can chop it. Indeed it would pay big returns if a good friend, or the official board, would hand the pastor a yearly allowance of ten to twenty-five dollars to replenish his bookshelves, on condition he himself duplicate that amount. Just watch your pastor then when he gets up to preach. They used to say open your mouth and the Lord will fill it. Now we say, in better form, "fill your mouth and the Lord will open it." We live in a much-thinking world of thinking people. —Dr. John Maclean, in Atchison District Messenger.

OUR NEIGHBOR.

What is meant by our neighbor we cannot doubt; it is every one with whom we are brought into contact. First of all, he is literally our neighbor who is next to us in our family and household; husband to wife, wife to husband, parent to child, brother to sister, master to servant, servant to master. Then it is he who is close to us in our neighborhood, in our own town, in our own parish, in our own street. With these all true charity begins. To love and be kind to these is the very beginning of all true religion. But besides these, as our Lord teaches, it is every one who is thrown across our path by the changes and chances of life; he or she, whosoever it be, whom we have any means of helping—the unfortunate stranger whom we may meet in traveling, the deserted friend whom no one else cares to look after.—Dean Stanley.

O Lord! that I could waste my life for others,
With no ends of my own;
That I could pour myself into my brothers,
And live for them alone.

—F. W. Faber.

THOSE "METHODIST FUNDAMENTALS."

By Bob Shuler.

II.

Nor is it strange, my brethren, that those who thus teach what seems to be Salvation by Character or good deeds should deny the doctrine of the "Substitutionary Atonement" and brand it as Calvinistic and pernicious. For back of it all is a philosophy as to the beginnings of life and the processes thereof that makes a "Blood Salvation" altogether impossible.

If it is true, as many leaders among us contend, that man began his being with some kind of prehistoric speck, some germ or infinitesimal particle of original matter, and, having thus had a common origin with all animal life, has advanced, climbed, progressed, by innate and self-accumulative processes, to where he is, then, certainly, there is no need that he be washed with the washing of regeneration in order that he may continue to advance, climb, progress. Sure it is that he has a thousand times better chance for his future climbing and advancing than he had when he started on his upward way. With the accumulated momentum that he has gathered by this day, when he has harnessed all the forces of nature and chained to his chariot wheels every hidden wealth of the world he inhabits, he ought to make great headway in the days to come, if indeed he has done so well, pulling at his boot-straps, since he was a little wiggling speck, about as big and strong and powerful as nothing.

This theory of man's origin and advance, which is more largely accepted even in the Methodist Church than many suppose, has no place within it for the fall of man, as taught by the Founders of Methodism and the revival-kindling circuit riders of her early history. Man began at the bottom and has been cilmbing ever since, according to these modernists. Our Methodist fathers taught that he began in the image of God and fell so low, by reason of his disobedience, that his poor soul was lost, doomed, damned, requiring the very shedding of the blood of the Son of God for his redemption. But certainly not, if indeed our so-called scholarly leaders are correct.

More and more such leaders are demanding that we believe that man has come thus far by "living a life," a little better life, a little bigger life, a little stronger life, a little more perfect life, generation after generation, century after century, age after age. Thus he got up off the belly he was crawling on. Thus he ceased to walk on all fours. Thus he got down from his cocoanut breakfast, unwound his tail from a limb, took it off and proceeded to go forward. Thus he has lived his way, if you please, to where he is. And if he has, why should Christ die for him? Isn't he doing pretty well of himself?

And so this progressing, advancing, victorious man installs more machinery, promotes more organization, proceeds with his reforms, engages in his social programs, places his hands upon the world's affairs, solves its questions, betters its conditions and thus "lives a life" of such progress and advance as causes some pulpiteers in this modern day to refer to the "fountain filled with blood" as the butcher-shop salvation. Certainly if man can thus "do the stunt," these pulpiteers are right, dead right.

But as a lad, I sat in the old log meeting house of Methodism and heard the long-bearded circuit rider tell the story of a man created in the image of God and set over God's world as master of it all. They told me that by transgression that man fell, and I believed it. I still believe it. They told me that original sin was the corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and of his own nature inclined to evil and that continually. These old men of Israel did not depend overly much on the "living of a life" as a means to salvation, for they taught that we are accounted righteous before God only for the merit of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, by faith, and not for our own works or deservings; wherefore that we are justified by faith only, was to them a most wholesome doctrine and very full of comfort.

These mighty men of Methodism believed in the "living of a life," you understand, but they wanted the whole world to know that good works were the fruits of faith and followed after justification and that they could not by any means put away our sins. They even declared that when we have done all that is commanded us, we are still unprofitable servants. And they stressed the fact that Jesus Christ, very God and very man, truly suffered, was crucified, dead and buried, to reconcile His father to us and to be a sacrifice not only for original sin but also for actual sins of men.

Now here, in the very heart of the gospel message of the Methodist fathers are still remaining, thank God, in the Discipline of the Methodist Church, is the statement of the "Substitutionary Atonement," not a pernicious doctrine of Calvinism, but a certain statement of Arminian Methodist theology. Methodism has ever agreed with the Prophet that all we, like sheep, had gone astray and that the Lord has laid on his precious shoulders the iniquity of us all. It is indeed thoroughly Methodistic to shout aloud that he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows. Yea, verily, my brethren, he was wounded for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him and with his stripes we are healed. Methodists have ever known that he was manifested to take away our sins. We have never doubted that the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin. Ah, it was the business of this Savior to be made sin for us, he who knew no sin. Thus he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself and publish the glad, good news to all the world that as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

All this is old and tried in Methodism. But this is indeed new and strange to those men, who, posing as the scholars of our generation, have found that man is such a splendid climber that he is capable of so "living a life" as finally to "win a place in the sun" if he is left free to continue his climb. Such men feel that the doctrine of the "Substitutionary Atonement" is altogether unworthy of modern-day credence, having discovered, as they think they have, that by living and doing and working, man has come all the way from a wiggling worm to a super-animal.

And here indeed is the key to the very insides of the mighty battle that is being waged between those who class themselves as liberal and others who are termed orthodox and sometimes in derision and hate called "Fundamentalists." I do not hesitate to say that the Bible and the Methodist Discipline are unalterably opposed to the liberal school. Isaiah is against them. Paul is against them. Thousands of passages in the Word of God stand in the record against them. With that, many of them are not discouraged and they smilingly go about the task of disqualifying these their opposers. But Methodists, on the whole, are prejudiced tremendously in favor of Isaiah, Paul and others who have spoken in that old Book. And thus the matter stands.

Brethren, the forces are gathering. The lines are being drawn. The battle is on. It behooves every Methodist preacher to know what he really believes and to take his stand in brotherly but firm fashion by his faith. For this battle will decide the issue of whether or not the supernatural shall be longer recognized in life and the world's march of events as well as the larger question of the place of the blood of Jesus our Savior in the salvation of the souls of men.

CENTENARY COLLEGE NEWS.

Dr. Sexton and the Faculty Committee of the Board of Trustees scored another success in the new teachers they are adding to the faculty for the coming session. Dr. Sexton has searched the country over and selected from the greatest universities their best qualified men. Speaking of this, Dr. Sexton said: "If Centenary has not one of the strongest faculties in the Southland, it is the fault of Harvard, Columbia, Chicago, California, Vanderbilt and the others, for they have sent us their very best material. We are sparing neither time nor money in selecting our faculty."

Not content with what the big institutions say of these professors (for we are a little skittish sometimes and shy off when they recommend too highly), we have had personal interviews when there existed any doubt of orthodoxy or any probability of danger. For instance, we couldn't take chances on our Professor of Science, so we sent for him to come down. Here came Dr. P. M. Ginnings, the honor man of the greatest chemical laboratory in America, a Phi Beta Kappa man, Master of Science and Ph.D., from the University of Illinois. It was my good fortune to be present when Dr. Sexton interviewed him. The President explained very carefully to the scientist that it was not the policy of Centenary College to put the human mind in shackles or limit any one's freedom of thought or speech. But there are standards of truth within which there is ample freedom, and he asked him to state whether he considered himself bound by these standards. Dr. Ginnings replied that he did so, and frankly admitted his humble faith in God, the Bible and Jesus Christ.

Then at some length Dr. Sexton insisted that "In the beginning God" should be the motto in the laboratory and the class-room. It was a most satisfying interview out of which we all came as from sacred ground. Dr. Ginnings was employed (this interview was last year), and he has been giving great service to Centenary during the past year. He will remain at the head of the Department of Science. With Dr. Ginnings in charge of this Department (which is the breeding place of evolution and error in many schools), ably assisted by Professor George M. Reynolds, son of our Dr. J. H. Reynolds, Director General of the Methodist Education Campaign, and assisted also by Professor Raymond B. Sawyer, M.S., of the University of Wisconsin, we are not only sure of the highest scholarship but also certain of the soundest Methodist orthodoxy.

In the Department of Bible—which is the next breeding spot of poison germs—I am not saying much, for I teach that myself, and, of course, no lunatic admits that he is insane. Neither does any schismatic admit his own heterodoxy.

In the Department of English, we have Professor George M. Palmer, M.A., of the University of Illinois. He has had long, unvarying success in teaching this important subject. Mr. Palmer is also a noted speaker of our native tongue. During the war he was sent by the United States Government to speak to our boys in France. Reports from army authorities state that he was the most popular speaker who appeared at the front. He never failed to leave the boys at a white heat and yelling like mad. Professor Palmer will also be assisted by Mrs. A. R. Campbell, M.A., of Wellesley.

Dr. C. E. Green, a Ph.D from Syracuse University, comes to us for the headship of the Department of Modern Languages. He is a thorough, painstaking teacher—a brilliant Phi Beta Kappa man and a Christian gentleman of the highest order. He will be assisted by Miss Cornelia Compton, B.A., of the University of Missouri. Miss Compton is also a Phi Beta Kappa.

Likewise in all the other departments we have men of the very highest attainments. For instance, in Ancient Languages comes Prof. W. G. Phelps, B.A., from Oberlin, and M.A. from Princeton, who sat the the feet of Woodrow Wilson. He will be assisted by Prof. Roy Moore, M.A., B.D., from Vanderbilt University and Columbia. In Education we have Prof. W. C. Gleason, B.A., from the University of California and M.A. from Harvard. In Mathematics, Prof. John A. Hardin easily holds a mastery. He is a B.A. from the University of Tennessee and M.A. from Chicago. Prof. Pierce Cline, M.A., of Emory, remains for his fourth year as head of History, with S. D. Morehead, A.B., Hendrix, and M.A., Columbia, to assist him. Harry M. Prevo, A.B., Earlham, assisted by Prof. C. W. Rhoads, graduate of Gregg School Stenography, will have charge of Commerce.

Finally, the only Bo McMillin, aided by H. H.

Norton, the old reliable, will be in charge of the Athletics. Let me say in conclusion that the regular departments of the college, such as Science, Languages, Mathematics, are manned just as thoroughly as is the Department of Athletics.

Prospects are bright for Centenary. As I write, concrete machines are barking and hammers ringing on the new building, now going up. Brethren, pray for us. Come and see us.

R. E. SMITH, Dean.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE BOARD OF LAY ACTIVITIES, LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C., AUG. 9-10, 1923.

Whereas, the Christian Education Movement, by reason of its great importance, has been given the right of way in the church from Aug. 1 to Nov. 30 of this year; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we give this Movement our unqualified endorsement and call upon all our Boards and Lay Leaders to co-operate in every possible way in carrying on this work.
2. That as an organization we regard it as our major task during these months, especially in the local congregations, to promote this Movement and to assist in the collections of the pledges.
3. We urge that the Christian Education Committee be appointed in every church and be requested, with the co-operation of the pastors, to hold meetings in the interest of this cause; to provide lay speakers; to organize teams to assist the local collectors, and to promote the Movement in such other ways as seem wise.
4. That our General Secretary be instructed to send out to the entire organization full information as to these plans and such other suggestions as he may determine.

GRENADA COLLEGE NOTES.

In the thirteen years of my administration at Grenada College, we have abolished the grammar school, have eliminated the first two years of high school, and have brought the enrollment in college classes proper above the total registration of 1910. Five members have been added to the faculty. All students are required to take physical training. The department of religious education has proved both popular and helpful. The college requires fifteen units for entrance to the freshman class and sixty-four session hours, or one hundred and twenty-eight semester hours, for graduation. This is a standard college course and enables students at any time to transfer to other colleges without loss of standing. Beyond question it is far better that young girls should spend at least their first two years in the small college under wholesome Christian environment rather than in the larger institutions.

Our graduates receive license to teach without further examinations. Out of 154 graduates during my administration, 145 have become teachers—more than 95%. We have never been able to supply the demand for teachers. As many as seven positions were offered to some of the class of 1923. Only one graduate in thirteen years was not an avowed Christian, and most of them have been active church workers, three of them foreign missionaries, and six of them teachers in church colleges.

More than two acres have been added to the campus. Two good residences were acquired with this purchase. The administration building was erected on this lot at a cost of $160,000. It is perhaps the handsomest of its kind in the South. Living rooms have hard-wood floors, tiled baths and linen closets attached.

The cost of operation has kept pace with the times. More is now paid for salaries alone than the entire income for board and tuition thirteen years ago. While living costs have advanced from sixty to seventy-five per cent, we have been able to carry on by increasing charges fifty per cent. However, we have reached the limit. To meet competition and the demands of the hour, the institution must be endowed. Endowment has always been desirable. It is now vitally necessary. Our trustees are asking for it. Generous gifts will be ready the moment the North Mississippi Conference is ready in good faith to put on the movement. The matter will be placed before that body at its coming session. It is a momentous question, but the 66,000 Methodists in North Mississippi have the answer. May they give it with a will!

"ENGLAND MOURNING."

By Rev. Wm. B. Van Valkenburgh.

Is the war over? "Why ask such a question," says some one, "certainly the war is over." But I refer not to the massing of armies and the training of soldiers, nor to the making, handling and shipping of vast stores of ammunition; not even to the final adjustments that are realized after an armistice is signed and the plenipotentiaries gather at a peace conference and finish up its deliberations. I refer here especially to the tragic experiences which humanity is called to endure during and after the shouting dies, and the glamour and glory fade away.

Is the war over in England? Not if we mean that peace is made, normalcy has returned, and things from henceforth will go on as they were before, for to England things can never be again as they were before. And when I say that to England things can never again be as they were before, I am fully persuaded that I speak with candor and a due reserve. England can and will go on—but England will never be the same again. The old order has been broken up and has forever passed away.

One only needs to-day to stand at the crossroads and observe the passing throngs, throngs of pilgrims that are no longer on pleasure bent (and there are multitudes of these, as witness the crowds on a bank holiday), but these sad-faced pilgrims of whom I speak have lost a son, a brother, or a husband in the great war, and with a great caravan travel to the battle fields and war cemeteries in Belgium or France to locate the grave and to place a wreath upon the last resting place of a loved one. It was my good fortune to be domiciled in the Red Triangle Hostel, Euston Square, while in Loondon, through which many of these pilgrims went.

Upon inquiry, I learned that the Central branch has booked and cared for in personally conducted tours more than ten thousand relatives who, seeking to locate the grave of some loved one, have sought their assistance. The hostel at which I stayed has cared for over three thousand this past twelvemonth. And to see and mingle with these mourning relatives is the only way one can truly understand and sympathize with them. Their grief is too deep to unbosom to a passing stranger. To some, already past middle life, whose only son, young, vivacious and heroic, went forth to battle, writing letters of good cheer back home, but himself never returned, the only consoling mission now remains to them to see and know that "this is my son's grave, here my boy lies in his last quiet resting place."

I talked with many of these pilgrims, but give only a few of our conversations: The first was a man and his wife, easily past sixty, from Edinburgh. They had and lost an only son in the war, were returning from the battle fields, where they found their boy's grave. By his side lay buried an American boy, and, strange to say, they met there at the grave the father of the American soldier boy. This father had come all the way from his distant American home to see and lay a wreath upon his boy's grave. Thus on the cemeteries these parents met and consoled each the other.

My second acquaintance was with a gentleman, his wife and her sister, who were going over to locate the grave of the wife's brother. He was only thirty-two, but was a hero. The husband, too, had seen service—was four years in the war. Yes, he knew where his brother-in-law's grave was located; he felt that he owed that much to his wife, that she should see and lay a wreath upon her brother's grave.

The third party I met consisted of three ladies, all dressed in black. An only brother of theirs lay buried in France. He was a college graduate with a brilliant career ahead. He and five five others, all college chums, enlisted and went to the front together. At the end of the war only one came back—the others all lay buried in France.

The fourth was a young man in company with his girl and her parents—their son lay buried in France, and they must needs go and search out the grave.

Such is the picture of England to-day weeping. The British Y. M. C. A. is doing a fine piece of work, using the old war-time huts in the battle areas as hostels, and escorting parties at a very nominal sum, and also helping them, through the proper agencies, to locate the graves of their loved ones. Two hundred went out early the first Saturday morning I was there.

Two young sisters, just returning from the battle fields, told of how they two were both widowed by the war; then of how they had found the graves of their loved ones; but some five Germans were buried alongside. This much distressed them, but they had a partial promise from the authorities that the Germans would be taken up and removed.

Another case was that of a gentleman and his wife who sought the grave of his wife's brother, who lies buried in Etaples cemetery, where eleven thousand lie buried. This man had himself seen four years in the service. He was much pleased with the accuracy and care with which the graves were kept. He and his wife were from near Belfast, Ireland, and had taken considerable pains to locate the grave of Private G. Logan, who was killed on the 9th of August, 1917, when he, with fifty-seven others, were mined and blown into eternity by the Germans. The father and mother of this young Logan were living, but had had no word as to the whereabouts of their boy. The father is a jute rope manufacturer twenty-five miles west of Belfast. The mother, like Rachel of old, refused to be comforted, lest perchance her boy lay unburied in some forest, torn and eaten by the dogs or the birds as carrion. A load would be lifted from the mother's mind could she but know how and where her son met death, and where he lay buried. Here was news—good news for a heart-broken and disconsolate mother.

The tragedies of that great war have all not yet been written. On a casual call upon a local physician, he told me he, too, had lost his only boy in the war. He was a brilliant college man, a member of the Royal Engineering Corps, and had designed and built some valuable boats for the service; but at the end of the first year he paid the price and made the great adventure. Can you wonder, then, that I say: "England Mourning?"

A new England will arise from the memories of a great sacrifice; if it is to be a better England, a bigger and finer type of manhood and of womanhood, yet remains to be seen.

England has great burdens to carry, and reforms that are stupendous if ever realized; yet upon the exterior England wears a stolid countenance and marches to the step of martial music. England is a nation of large dimensions, and she has great people; but when one looks upon poverty, drunkenness, and lack of employment (now two million upon the government pension roll of unemployed), one is led to say:

"God Save England!"

The Call of the Conference Claimants

EDITED BY LUTHER E. TODD, SECRETARY

Board of Finance, M. E. Church, South.

510-513 Security Building, St. Louis, Mo.

PLEDGE OF CO-OPERATION.

On July 30 I received a letter from a prominent minister of the great Virginia Conference, and its contents were of a nature to give me much encouragement concerning the fast-approaching special effort for superannuate endowment. The writer of this letter stated that at a meeting of the Board of Managers of the Pastors' Association held on June 27, 1923, representing all the districts of the Virginia Conference, they unanimously adopted a resolution touching this great cause and instructed their Secretary to send a copy of the resolution to the Board of Finance, and it is as follows: "That the Board of Managers of the Pastors' Association of the Virginia Conference assembled in Ashland, Va., June 27, 1923, give our hearty endorsement of the plan for the special effort for superannuate endowment and pledge ourselves to untiring efforts in its behalf."

There are one hundred and seventy-two members of the Pastors' Association in the Virginia Conference. Knowing these pastors as I do, it can be safely stated that their determination to make the superannuate cause the keynote of their year's program guarantees the success of the movement so far as that part of the Church is concerned. I have contended from the beginning of my secretaryship of the Board of Finance that nothing can keep this great cause from succeeding in the fullest measure if the preachers of the Church are willing to give it their undivided attention and faithful leadership.

The Virginia regiment of real fighting men have raised their war cry. This means, in the words of Uncle Mose, "Sumthin' gwine 't drap." I have never read of the great State of Virginia failing in anything she undertook, and the State is mostly what the preachers have made her.

Three cheers for the Old Dominion: "Rah, rah, rah! Rah, rah, rah! Rah, rah, rah! Virginia!"

ANOTHER TROJAN ENLISTS FOR THE BATTLE.

It is strange how God leads us into vital relations with some fundamental truth. The other day I met two soldiers. One of them was a Union soldier and was well dressed and apparently happy and well fed. I fell into conversation with the gentleman and found out that he had given three years of unselfish service to his country in bearing arms during the years of 1862-65. I could not ask him how much money he received from the government, but I learned that he has his home and clothes and food furnished him and money to meet all his other needs. There was something in my heart that said to me: "This is right; it is just as it should be."

While I was thinking over the happy lot of this veteran soldier of the government another gentleman approached me and wanted to sell me a brush of some kind. He had several different kinds of brushes with him, and I bought one. He was hot and tired and poorly clad. He, too, was an old man and had a very fine face, and his voice was soft and his manner very gentle. I learned that he was a retired minister of the gospel and had given forty-seven years of unselfish service to his country, and now at his advanced age there is no place for him in the regular ranks of the ministry, and he is turned out to sell brushes to pay house rent and meet his other expenses. There was something in my heart that said this is not right. This man not only gave his life to his country but also went about building churches, helping to build hospitals, schools, towns, and contributing his best to the building of such immortal monuments. I could not respect his Church for neglecting him in his old age. I have always been committed to a course of positive action for adequate superannuate endowment, but now I am for this cause more than ever.

Since the incident referred to above I have read "The Forgotten Law," and I could not for a while see anything but the "forgotten man." I am now reading three great books—"Social Insurance," by Seager; "Getting a Living," by Bolen; and "Profit Sharing," by Gilman—and all of them have deepened my impressions that we must do something for our aged ministers. Every worthy business enterprise has endeavored to make provision for their employees when they are retired. Can the Church of the living God treat this cause lightly? The low salaries paid by the various denominational bodies to their clergy and the inadequacy of philanthropic methods to meet the problems of old age relief have been leading considerations in the movement for clergy pensions for some time. May the Lord lead us to a realization of our duty in this matter! I believe the Church will be glad to have the opportunity of doing this thing for her "forgotten man." This old soldier of the cross should have as good a living as any man on earth. The Lord bless his Church in this work.—Rev. H. E. Corbin.

THE VIEWPOINT OF AN AWAKENED PASTOR.

Not long ago one of the Shreveport daily papers carried a very pathetic story under the headline "Old Horses' Home Proposed." According to the report, a certain lady whose name was given had made the suggestion, after seeing the cruel treatment and inhuman neglect of many of these old worn-out but one-time faithful servants of man. It was pointed out that after years of toil these poor beasts of burden, crippled and shrunken with age, were allowed the privilege of starvation pasture—to suffer for a time and then to die. As I read this story my sentimental nature was stirred to its depths. There was basest ingratitude on the one hand and Christlike human tenderness on the other.

Then I recalled another touching story as told by Rev. T. B. Fisher, of the Tennessee Conference. He said that years before he had made a promise to his horse friend with him in a ministry of twenty-five years that if the horse would be faithful to the end he should have a decent burial. The day arrived at last when this faithful horse die. True to his agreement, Brother Fisher gave the animal a burial hard by the church.

Such tenderness shown by the good woman and the old superannuate referred to above serve to remind us that we should all have at least good horse religion in dealing with the old war horses of Southern Methodism. How can we longer neglect or forget those among us who have pulled the heavy loads through the years? How few of them have kicked out of the harness, no matter how heavy the load or long the journey! How many times they have with strength of faith in God pulled the State and Church out of the mud and got the wheels of civilization on firm ground! Yes, and they have fought other battles, too: they have charged through the thick ranks of all forms of sin, from personal vices to social and political unrighteousness. And now, battle-weary and service-marred, they are permitted to shift for themselves the best they can, not even having the care which human gratitude provides for old horses.

I believe with all my heart that there is going to be an uprising in Southern Methodism. Thousands and tens of thousands will say our superannuates must be cared for and with the gratitude and concern which are their due. In the name of all that is high and holy let us bring in twenty million dollars for superannuate endowment in behalf of these retired servants.—Rev. J. W. Pearson.

FROM THE PENTECOSTAL HERALD.

He was an old minister of the gospel. For many years he had traveled large circuits and faithfully preached the word. He had served important stations. He had been a presiding elder. His financial remuneration had always been meager. He was old now, had been superannuated, and was in poor health.

He lived on the edge of an old field on the borders of a ragged, broken forest in a log house that, like the man and the field and the forest, had seen its best days. He hacked his wood down, rolled the logs on a sled, and hauled it to his door. He hacked off the logs and, with the assistance of his aged wife, rolled them into the fireplace. It kept the dear old man busy to supply fuel sufficient to have enough fire to keep fairly comfortable. He had a little garden and took great interest in it. He would hoe a while, lean on his hoe handle, and wipe the sweat from his brow with an old faded red handkerchief. His floor was barren of carpet, except a small piece made of rags, lying at his bedside to protect his bare old feet as he prepared to retire. The fare at his table was very simple. I bought some of his books. They were great old friends of his, and he was sad to part with them, but he needed a few dollars badly. I could scarcely keep from crying. I was choked with emotion. I could but feel some indignation, and I believe it was righteous indignation, against the host of people to whom he had ministered so faithfully and who had remunerated him so sparingly and now neglected him almost entirely.

Dear old man, he's home in heaven now and having a wonderful time. I can imagine him in beautiful robes of white walking and rejoicing in the light of the countenance of the Lord he loved. He was a very cultured man, refined, gentle, uncomplaining. There are such men living to-day. May the Lord bless them! May the Church do her duty by them!

BERT'S WILDCAT.

"O Bert," cried Polly, "father says we're all going to the mountains for the month of August!"

That was good news to Bert, but he only said, "Huh! That's fine!"

The family arrived at the small mountain hotel early one evening, and the next day the brother and sister were all ready to explore the neighborhood. They made friends with Ben, an old man of all work on the premises, and asked him all sorts of questions about the big woods near the hotel.

"Yes," drawled old Ben, "thar's a few animals wandering round on the mountains; foxes and wildcats and now and then a bear."

"Ho!" he said. "Bears always run away, Poll. And as for wildcats, they're no bigger than ordinary good-sized cats. You can tell them by their stubby tails. I'd just as soon walk right up to one and stroke it."

Polly shook her curly head doubtfully, and Ben remarked that he should call a wildcat a "savage critter."

A few days after that Bert and his sister set out for a ramble up the side of Whiteface, the nearest mountain. After an hour or two of pleasant climbing they halted to eat the sandwiches they had brought with them. Afterward they stretched themselves out on the moss to rest awhile.

After they had been silent and still for a long time, Bert said drowsily: "This is the jolliest place I ever saw."

Just as he spoke there was a slight sound like the crackling of a twig in tho thicket just behind them. Bert sat up. "What was that?" he said.

They listened, and presently they heard the sound again. That time it was a little nearer. "Do you suppose it's a bear or anything?" asked Bert in a low tone.

"It might be a wildcat," Polly suggested rather shakily. "You said bears always ran away."

At that moment they both caught sight of two bright eyes shining in the shadows of the firs. "Look!" Bert said in a loud whisper. "It is a wildcat, I do believe. What shall wo do?"

"Perhaps we'd better sit perfectly still," Polly whispered back.

Nearer and nearer camo tho eyes. The two watchers—sitting like statues, but rather shaky statues—could now see plainly the animal's gray fur and erect, pointed ears.

The creature advanced softly, step by step, until it was only a rod away.

"I can hear it growling," Bert said in a low whisper.

Polly listened a moment. "No," she said softly, "that doesn't sound like growling. It's more—why, it's more like purring."

As the big cat came slowly nearer they could hear it purring loudly. Suddenly Polly had an idea. She reached out one trembling hand, snatched up a fragment of beef from a left-over sandwich and tossed it toward the strange visitor.

The animal halted and sniffed at the meat, then, crouching, began to eat it.

"I declare," said Polly in a bolder tone, "it acts just like a common cat!"

When the cat had finished the morsel it came still closer, purring more affably than ever, and accepting another piece of beef. That finished, it walked over to the shrinking pair and began to rub against Polly's knee.

The little girl drew back at first; then all at once she cried, "Look, Bert, it has a long tail just like any common cat. It is a common cat!"

She put out a hesitating little hand and stroked the silky fur.

A little later two rather shamefaced travelers came stealing back to the hotel. They might have kept their adventure a secret, but the cat followed close at their heels and would not leave them.

As they walked into the back yard old Ben saw them. "Hey," he said, "where did you find Big Tom? In the woods, I suppose; he's a regular tramp. Didn't see any wildcats, did you?"

Then somehow the whole story came out. Old Ben was good enough not to laugh very hard, but he could not help giving Bert a little thrust. "When you saw the critter staring through the bushes did you walk right up to it and stroke it, son?"

Bert was honest. "No, sir-e-e, I didn't" he said. "Wildcats are easier to talk about, I guess, than they are to meet."—Willis Boyd Allen, in The Youth's Companion.

SOME SWIMMING BIRDS.

Most of us if asked to name the swiftest thing in the water would answer that fish are the best swimmers and divers. But that is not true. It has been well said that a fish has no more chance to escape from a cormorant, after the bird has once spied it, than a cottontail rabbit has of outrunning a greyhound.

An observer of these birds, as they "hunt" on San Francisco Bay, describes them as "a pirate crew in black." They line up on the weather rail of an old wrecked vessel in the mud flats, and watch the fish hunting for crabs and worms on the moss-covered, rotting timbers. Then, quick as a flash of lightning, a cormorant dives. He has seen a fish, and nine times out of ten that fish is doomed, for the bird has wonderful sight, can dive fully as well as the fish and swim decidedly faster. Cormorants—at least in some countries—are protected by law; not because they destroy fish, but on account of the fertilizer, guano, which they deposit. Wherever their fishing is good, millions of these birds gather, and the guano becomes a valuable commercial product.

The penguin has been called as much fish as bird, and an examination of its feathers shows them to resemble scales. Accordingly, one writer has suggested the name squami-pennis—scale-feather. The penguin's wings are useless for flight, but he can strike out and swim fifty miles to sea with astonishing ease; then, with his appetite for fish and exercise satisfied, he returns to his home among the rocks near shore. The female penguin is a stanch defender of the home nest; she will fight anything, man included, in defense of her eggs.

The pelican is another good swimmer, though not so fast as cormorants or penguins. He is a little too fat and clumsy to dive well, so he adopts strategy and co-operation in his fishing. A flock of pelicans, selecting some shallow lagoon that is full of fish, form a line across it, and, according to Edward T. Martin, who has been favorably situated to study bird habits, splash the water and beat their wings until they drive the fish up the gradually sloping bank and out into the mud. Here they fill their bags at their leisure. The pelican's greatest foe is the fish eagle, but here again he resorts to "head-work," dropping one fish and making his escape with the rest while the eagle secures that one.

Among the smaller water birds none are more clever than the dippers. They like a waterfall, and find most of their food in the eddies and around the stones. Usually they go through some interesting preliminaries before the plunge, but once they have made a dive it is surprising how easily they progress under water. They actually fly beneath the surface, staying near the bottom and searching among weeds and rocks for food. I do not know just how long they can remain under, but the fact that they do not hesitate to enter through a hole in the ice indicates that they have but little fear of suffocation.—L. E. Eubanks, in Our Dumb Animals.

AN ORTHODOX REPLY TO BISHOP MOUZON.

By Rev. Thomas H. Lipscomb.

Since Bishop Mouzon persists in bombarding the church with article after article ostensibly in emphasis upon Christian experience but obviously in protection of the modernists and in censure of the orthodox who stand boldly for their historic faith, it need occasion no surprise that the orthodox wing of the church should continue to defend that sound doctrine out of which root alone Christian experience has ever sprung; and should analyze searchingly the utterances of Bishop Mouzon that they may stand or fall according to their consistency and truth.

The Bishop declares: "A false note has been sounded in Methodism—a note which calls attention to things to be believed rather than a life in Christ to be lived." (Black-faced type his.) "There have arisen among us some who insist that a correct creed is of more importance than a good life." (I challenge him to name such a man in Southern Methodism or quote a line in proof thereof!) But ah! Over against the "false note" alleged we have a miracle proposed by the Bishop! People are to be led to live a life in Christ without even having their attention called (the false note "calls attention" remember) to the things which they must believe concerning Christ, his deity, his atoning death for them as sinners, his resurrection and his power to save to the uttermost all who come unto him by faith. Surely such is the very suicide of thought; a veritable obliteration of the intellect in religion and an enthronement of the feelings and intentions, without even allowing the feelings and intentions the causal reasons and convictions which alone can so affect them. The Bishop even admits that he has come to "a large indifference to things, whether of creed or of practice, that make no difference to the Christian life." I can but wonder what portions of the creed are thus indifferent—all Methodists solemnly affirm their faith in the whole, "All this I steadfastly believe," on being received into the church; and what kind of a "life in Christ" this is which is so independent of a proper faith in Christ. Finally, on this point, let me say that it is no new thing in Methodism for emphasis to be placed upon orthodoxy of belief—witness the "Restrictive Rules" and Ritual; the new thing in Methodism is for a bishop of the church to write as Bishop Mouzon writes concerning theology. I had as soon expected a surgeon to delight in discounting the science of surgery.

But who dare speak on questions such as these? Has not our good Bishop, have not two indeed, shamed all preachers and laymen into silence, except such as may lay valid claim to being theologians and scientists? Silence, you ignorant ones! Let the Doctors speak! Whence have you wisdom, having never learned? Why, then, Bishops Moore and Mouzon, do you administer to us of the humbler sort the ordination vow, "Will you be ready with all faithful diligence to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's Word?" Surely only our truly scholarly bishops and doctors should take that vow! But, verily, how sacredly should they guard, then, the obligation to fulfill it, since they alone have the light to guide all these multitudes of ignorant preachers and laymen! Yet inconsistently "mixing things" in the very way that he reprehends, Bishop Mouzon, in defense of the liberals against the orthodox, vehemently cries: "Whoever denies to another this liberty to read the Bible for himself is essentially a Roman Catholic—and he ought to go home. He is out of place in any of our Protestant churches." So, liberty to interpret loosely or deny must be upheld, and the right of way given the liberals in our periodicals and upon our platforms; but liberty to oppose such interpretation must be denied, even though the Bible in the hand of the believer, backed by all the Creeds and Articles of Faith of Christendom, is the foundation on which he stands in opposition to "erroneous and strange doctrines." The Bishop censures others as intolerant, but, frankly, I have never seen before such intolerance as he manifests, or such disposition to exercise imperialistic power; though the authority before which we must now bow is not the Bible, or the church, but modern science and scholarship, and Bishop Mouzon!

So, Bishop, though ignorant we are, neither a doctor nor a bishop, and with no hope of becoming either, in the name of God and for his truth's sake we make bold to put to the searching test of analysis your many utterances, and the utterances of all our modernists whom you—rashly shall I not say?—take under your protecting robes. For you go even so far as to exhort, "that the present agitation concerning orthodoxy and heresy cease," adding, "I am greatly afraid that if something is not done (?) to stop this agitation, multitudes will be driven into the camp of the 'liberalists' and some may be driven into actual infidelity." In effect, then, you tell us to oppose nothing which the hertics are disseminating, without even suggesting that they cease questioning and denying truths established by Scripture and the consensus of Christian thought in all centuries. You propose a truce, yet ask one side only to stop fighting. Amazing! And from a Bishop who has taken and administered the ordination vows! Shall we, then, let the poisonous leaven of error work unrestrained? Shall we not turn the light of truth in upon the sophistries, the duplicity, the equivocation, and the outright assertion of unbelief which is now rampant in Protestant America? and which even State legislatures are trying to check? What becomes of the truth, then, as revealed in God's Word and our vows to contend therefor as this German army of materialism and rationalism tramples triumphantly upon those things which have been most surely believed among us, and which all hell and all the ecclesiastical powers of earth cannot ultimately destroy?

> "Truth crushed to earth will rise again,
> The eternal years of God are hers;
> But error wounded writhes in pain,
> And dies amid her worshipers."

It is the purpose of this reply to wound error; and if perchance we are crushed by superior might alone, as was Belgium, we much prefer to suffer than prosper at the price of honor and truth. While truth lies prostrate we do not desire to rise.

Bishop Mouzon, in a labored article in the Advocates, attacks the "Fundamentalists," and their doctrines; and though the general assemblies of Protestant evangelical churches north and south were meeting at about the same time, and defending almost identically the same doctrines the fundamentalists upheld, one would never know from the Bishop's article that the fundamentalists are but a part of a great army lined up from Maine to Mexico in defense of our one precious faith. Why he should enumerate with censure the fundamentalists' nine articles of faith and ignore the five articles, almost identical, insisted upon as fundamental by the Presbyterian General Assembly (North), as against Fosdick and the liberals, I do not understand, especially as the Bishop's article appeared six weeks after the General Assembly adjourned, and the discussion had been nation-wide, and going on for months. It is easier to knock down a little fellow than a big one, both physically and in public estimation; so, leaving the "fundamentalists" wounded and bleeding by the wayside (as we do not believe they deserve to be), we would ask the Bishop what he thinks of the five points enumerated by the truly scholarly men of the Northern General Assembly. Would he have us take sides with Fosdick, and Kelman, and Van Dyke, and Clarke, who scornfully reject them all? And if he accepts them as fundamentally true when upheld by a great sister church, why should he oppose them when advocated by the Fundamentalists?

Here they are as upheld by a majority vote of the Presbyterian Assembly. They affirm it to be essential Christian faith common to all denominations:

"1. That the holy spirit did so inspire, guide, and move the writers of Holy Scripture as to keep them from error.

"2. That our Lord Jesus Christ was born of the Virgin Mary.

"3. That Christ offered himself as a sacrifice to satisfy divine justice and to reconcile us to God.

"4. That on the third day our Lord Jesus Christ arose again from the dead with the same body with which he suffered, and with which also he ascended into heaven, and there sitteth at the right hand of the Father, making intercession.

"5. That our Lord Jesus Christ showed his power and love by working mighty miracles. This working was not contrary to nature but superior to it."

Yet even such elemental truths as these many of their outstanding leaders rejected, saying, "In all frankness I do not believe one of those five points"; Kelman, the Vanderbilt Cole Lecturer, affirming: "If it had been necessary for me to profess my agreement with it (this statement), I could not have accepted a call to any church in America."

But on these fundamental matters, wheresoever or by whomsoever stated, where does Bishop Mouzon himself stand? I should be delighted to affirm it my conviction that he stands in harmony with the faith once for all delivered unto the saints. But "By their fruits ye shall know them," and the Bishop is increasingly free in the expression of his new convictions, publishing them broadcast throughout the church. For his published utterances he, of course, accepts responsibility, and cannot complain if they are weighed by others in the light of Scripture, reason, and the canons of the church, so long as he is not misrepresented and is dealt with in all fairness and courtesy. But the dictum of Heine, "Of thine unspoken word thou art master; thy spoken word is master of thee," sets before us a truth which binds us all alike. In a second article we propose to review some of the published utterances of Bishop Mouzon, the influence of which, in behalf of sound doctrine and living faith, we would counteract so far as possible in the church.

THE FINANCIAL COST OF CRIME.

According to a report made recently by the National Surety Company, our country's annual bill for crime foots up to $3,000,000,000, five per cent of the nation's yearly income. This enormous waste is based on careful estimates of losses through stock frauds, credit frauds, fake bankruptcies, burglary, larceny, general petty thefts, embezzlement, forgery, seaport robberies, piracies, customs frauds, railroad freight thefts, home building frauds, and miscellaneous financial crimes. It should be noted that this study of the financial cost of crime does not include the far more staggering and tragic indirect damage done to the individual and collective life of the country. Crime is growing in the United States. How can we stop its spread? Something can be said in behalf of the enactment of new legislation and the stricter enforcement of the laws already on the statute books. But the remedy most needed in the face of the present situation is a more wholesome public opinion and clearer ethical distinctions. Here to a very large extent we must depend upon the churches. It would be interesting if the National Surety Company should make another estimate, in this instance of the amount of crime prevented by the preaching and teaching of religion, and of the activity of organized Christianity. We venture the prediction that the amount would total many times the $3,000,000,000 of crime waste.—Zion's Herald.

TESTIMONIAL TO WHITWORTH COLLEGE FROM HON. D. W. BUFKIN, PROMINENT CITIZEN OF JACKSON, MISS.

Dear Dr. Cooper:

I expect to enter my niece September 12, as a student in Whitworth and therefore request that you reserve a room for her.

I feel sure that it would be impossible for me to place her where the Christian influence as well as the personal supervision would be better than under your care. It was my pleasure to send one of my sisters through Whitworth, and I feel sure that she is a much finer woman for having gone there.

Assuring you of my friendship for you and for those in charge of the College, I am

Yours,
D. W. BUFKIN.

On Aug. 1, 1923, MRS. OLIVER BELL fell asleep to awake in her Father's house, the heavenly mansion. Mrs. Bell was born in Union County, Feb. 4, 1877. She was married to Mr. Bell in July, 1912. She was a faithful wife during these years. She did her best to make her home pleasant. She was successful in this, as is evidenced by the testimony of the members of the family and all who knew her. Early in life she joined the Methodist Church and lived a good and consistent Christian life during the years. Her good life made her to number her friends by her acquaintances. Many weeks ago she was operated on, and it was soon seen that she could not get well. She suffered much, but was patient in it all. She died easily. Her spirit now lives free from pain and suffering in the world beyond the skies. To mourn her loss are her husband, Oliver Bell; a brother, Bufford Tate, and Miss Aurella Tate, her sister. She will be missed by these relatives and by a host of friends. The funeral services were conducted at the home of Miss Aurelia Tate by Rev. J. D. Wroten, assisted by Rev. Mr. Snider, of McGee, Miss., and John P. Heath, of New Albany.

A FRIEND.

OSCAR WEIR CONNER was born in Louisville, Winston County, Miss., on April 22, 1868, and departed this life on Aug. 4, 1923. At the age of nineteen years he went to Hattiesburg to begin his career upon his own initiative, possessed of an unusually strong will as his main asset. When, at the age of 22, he was happily married to Miss Gertrude Sennett, who cheerfully shared his heroic struggles in laying the foundations of their modest fortune. Of this union there were born three sons and one daughter—M. Sennett, Walter M., Oscar W., Jr., and Mrs. Bernice Mayfield. Nobler and worthier sons and daughter I have never known. It was the good fortune of the writer to receive this entre family into the Methodist Church in May, 1908. Through all these years no one has had truer friends than these dear people have been to me. More than twenty years ago Brother Conner, with his family, moved to Seminary, where he engaged in the lumber business with splendid success. To those who were in need, he ministered with a lavish hand, and many are those who were uplifted by his beneficent heart. His going away has filled our hearts with sorrow; but, by God's grace, we expect to meet him in "fairer worlds on high." On Aug. 6, in the Main Street Methodist Church in Hattiesburg, attended by a large concourse of friends and loved ones, the funeral service was held by Revs. M. L. Burton, H. J. Maddox, and the writer, after which the Masons conveyed the body to the family burial lot, where it was tenderly laid, with due Masonic honors, beneath a most beautiful floral display, there to await the resurrection call. So long as we live we shall cherish the memory of this good man and hold sacred those vital ties which have bound us together these more than fifteen years. We sorrow with his heartbroken family. Their heartaches are our heartaches.

Affectionately,

J. EARLY GRAY.

Moss Point, Miss.

IT IS WELL.

Yes, it is well! the evening shadows lengthen;
Home's golden gates shine on our ravished sight;
And though the tender ties we try to strengthen
Break one by one—at evening time 'tis light.

'Tis well! The weary way was often dull and dreary;
The spirit fainted oft beneath its load;
No sunshine came from skies all gray and dreary,
And yet our feet were bound to tread that road.

'Tis well that not again our hearts shall shiver
Beneath old sorrows once so hard to bear;
That not again beside death's darksome river
Shall we deplore the good, the loved, the fair.

No more, with tears wrought from deep inner anguish,
Shall we bewail the dear hopes crushed and gone;
No more need we in doubt or fear to languish,
So far the day is past, the journey done.

As voyagers, by fierce winds beat and broken,
Come into port beneath the calmer sky,
So we, still bearing on our brows the token
Of tempest past, draw to our haven nigh.

As sweeter air comes from the shores immortal,
Inviting homeward at the day's decline,
Almost we see where from the open portal
Fair forms stand beckoning with their smiles divine.

'Tis well! The earth, with all her myriad voices,
Has lost the power our senses to enthrall;
We hear, above the tumult and the noises,
Soft tones of music, like an angel's call.

'Tis well, O friends! We should not turn—retracing
The long vain years, nor call our lost youth back;
Gladly, with spirits braced, the future facing,
We leave behind the dusty, footworn track.

—Chambers' Journal.

SENSING THE GOOD IN MEN.

One of the finest glimpses we get into the sensitiveness of Jesus' leadership is in his conversation with Nathanael. Here was a noble spirit, a devout and loyal Jew who, in the shade of a fig tree, had evidently been meditating shortly before Philip had brought him to Jesus. The very greatness of Nathanael's soul was written upon his featuros. In admiration and with a nature as sensitive to goodness as it was to sin, Jesus said as he approached, "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!" Wherever the true leader finds this quality of moral goodness in men, he prizes it above all talent. Talent sometimes works unevenly. Skill often fails in moments when it is most needed. Genius works sporadically. But solid honesty, purity, and integrity are the real foundations of life. These Jesus saw in Nathanael and praised him with unmistakable enthusiasm.—Dr. E. A. Leslie.

FIRING MEN WITH ENTHUSIASM.

In a real leader there is the capacity to inspire. He strikes men as warm, never cold. Men go out of his presence with the fires of their spirits lit by his fire. They come in as disciples to learn. They go out as his apostles to spread. One of the finest proofs of genius in the leadership of Jesus is such phrases in the record as "He (Andrew) findeth first his own brother Simon" and "brought him to Jesus." 'Philip findeth Nathanael" and thrilled him with his challenge, "Come and see." Men who touched him found something electric there that made them his backers and advocates. He filled them with enthusiasm. He lit their fires. He took their tongues of flesh and made them tongues of flame.—Dr. E. A. Leslie.

SALOON MONEY NOW SAVED.

The financial report of the Ohio State Savings Associatoin for the year 1922 shows a big increase in assets, the largest amount in its history added to reserve, plenty of cash and no purchases of real estate at foreclosure.

But there is really nothing very surprising in this, because the millions of dollars that used to go over saloon bars in the United States are now being diverted into legitimate channnels of commerce. Much of the former saloon money is going into the purchase of homes and home furnishings.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. "Benjamin Franklin Hattiesburg Harrell," with a party of helpers from Broad Street Chapter, Hattiesburg, composed of Misses Allsup and Timmerman, and Truman Lewis and Thurman Lewis, went to Avery, Miss., Sunday afternoon, Aug. 19, on Brother Porter's invitation, to organize a Senior Epworth League Chapter. After many hairbreadth escapes (for Thurman was the driver) they arrived at Avery about 4 o'clock; not amid the rattle of drums and cannon, but amid thunder and rain-drops. Mr. Harrell says, "It rained all the way there and back, and some more besides." However, they found a fine band of young people waiting for them, and after extracting as much mud as possible, they proceeded with the service, which was begun with the singing of several good, rousing hymns. And Mr. Harrell says those young folks are "some singers," and the song service was the most enjoyable part of the program. (Because after this he and Truman talked.) After reading a Scripture lesson—Second Timothy, second chapter—Mr. Harrell outlined (he says briefly) the purpose and relative position of the Epworth League in our church and its organization. Then Thurman Lewis outline the work of the four departments and the work of the Council and business meetings. After all this oratorical display, it was decided by those present that it was time to proceed with the organization. Eighteen members were enrolled, officers elected, and the organization completed. The president, Mr. Miller, was furnished necessary literature for the completing of his organization, and the organizing team departed to the tune of more rain for Hattiesburg.

This promises to be one of our very best Chapters. The pastor stated there would be many more young people to join later who had been kept away by the rain, and those who assisted in the work stated they never saw better prospects for a live, up-to-the-minute Chapter.

The young folks seemed to be deeply interested and the kind that make things go. Those who went say they look forward to the time when they can return to Avery and learn something from these young folks.

Rev. Mr. Campbell, of Wiggins, writes as follows: "I have put new life into the League since the Assembly, and we are doing things according to the Standard; sixty-three members in the Senior and thirty in the Junior." We warn all the Chapters now who are working for honors at the next Assembly to watch Wiggins. With such a band as this and a leader like Brother Campbell, they are bound to be heard from.

We are giving you a letter this week written to President Hawkins in regard to our Brookhaven Assembly. Mr. Fisher, recently returned from Japan, is at the present time a professor in Emory University. His letter is dated July 17:

"The spirit of your Epworth League Assembly was so great that it would be easy for me to speak of it in superlatives, but I certainly do not go beyond the strictest accuracy when I say that there was in it both a prophecy and at the same time an actual realization of the future state of human society in general which we all hope for and are working for with God. There we had the fellowship of a common spiritual interest, and the fellowship of pure human joy together, which beautifully epitomized what we mean when we speak of the Kingdom of God. When, from one Conference, nearly three hundred young people come together and attend all meetings with as manifestly keen an interest in spiritual things as was that of your delegates, and when we remember the hundreds of others of whom they are representatives, we ought all to go on with our work for Christ with redoubled energy, for here we see the sign that we are really making progress down that long path that leads to a Christ-like society.

"The six days there in Brookhaven were so full of real joy that I felt, when I came away, as if I had been off on a long vacation with that many of my most intimate friends. The only thing I regret is that I shall not be able to be with you next year.

"Cordially yours,
"STERLING FISHER."

We announce the appointment of Miss Ruth Corley, Lumberton, Miss., assistant district secretary, Seashore District, and Mr. Lloyd B. Price, McComb, Miss., secretary of the Brookhaven District.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

SHREVEPORT NEWS.

City Union Meets.

The monthly rally of the City Union Epworth League of Shreveport was held at Noel Memorial Church recently, the gathering of young folks being more representative than has been the case for several months past. An interesting program was enjoyed by the Leaguers and visitors. During the course of the meeting, Mr. C. H. Perryman, president of the Noel Memorial Senior League, was elected president of the City Union, owing to the resignation of Mr. H. W. Brown, the former president; and Mr. J. F. Carroll, vice president of the First Church Senior League, succeeded Mr. Perryman as vice president of the City Union.

Dr. R. H. Wynn, the presiding elder of the Shreveport District, made a very interesting address at this meeting, in which he mentioned a number of ways by which the Shreveport City Union could materially assist the churches in their expansion.

The meeting concluded with a watermelon feast, which every one present thoroughly enjoyed.

Mangum Doing Good Work.

Louisiana Leaguers may be interested in a line of religious activity recently begun by the Mangum Memorial Senior League. This chapter, a short time ago, visited the Christian Endeavor Senior Society of the Westminster Presbyterian Church, located in the same community, at its weekly devotional meeting, and from this joint meeting a friendship has sprung up between these young people's organizations which bids fair to solve in a great measure some of the difficulties with which the Mangum Memorial League has had to contend for some time. The Christian Endeavorers have returned the visit of these progressive Leaguers, and steady progress and improvement will result from the co-operative work which is being inaugurated.

Word from the District Secretary.

The Pelican Senior Epworth League was the first chapter in the district to send in a report to the district secretary for the first quarter of this Epworth League year. "Let there be more 'Pelicans' in the Shreveport District," is the earnest prayer of your district secretary.

Attention, Leaguers!

If you have any special activities that your chapter is participating in, be sure to write about it to your district secretary, addressing your communication to J. D. Blair, 2832 Milton Street, Shreveport, La.

NOTE FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Pickens, Durant, and Goodman have agreed to observe Children's Week. The leaders in these schools have the leaflets and posters and are preparing for better things. What is to be done in observing this special week? We can emphasize the importance of training children in the way they should go; the elementary teachers can visit in the homes of the children and secure the aid of the mothers in giving the best instruction to the children, and, in the third place, establish family altars in the homes they visit.

The world can be made better by instilling the principles of Jesus Christ into the lives of the childhood and youth of our land. It is all right to devote a great deal of thought to the adult membership of the church, but it is all wrong to neglect the children.

The school at Shaw lacks only one item of attaining the "C" program of work. How many other schools are making an effort to keep pace with this plucky school? Let us have a dozen or more schools reach this goal before Conference. A strong pull, a long pull, and a pull all together will bring victory.

The training school for the Greenwood District will be held at Sunflower, Sept. 3-8. The three leading courses will be offered: "Organization and Administration," taught by R. H. B. Gladney; "The Pupil," taught by Mrs. W. N. Duncan; "The Principles of Religious Teaching," taught by Mrs. J. M. Wyatt. Any teacher who has a knowledge of the principles in these three courses will be far better prepared for service in bringing in the Kingdom of God than the one who is ignorant of these principles. Write Rev. F. H. McGee, Sunflower, Miss., for a home if you wish to attend this school.

MEMBERSHIP MONTH.

Stress the Doubling Campaign.

Make September Membership Month. Secure names of all women who are members of the church, but not members of the Missionary Society.

Divide the list among the members of the Auxiliary, asking each to visit and solicit certain ones for membership.

Arrange a get-together meeting and let each member of the Society give a personal invitation to the women she is seeking to interest. Secure their membership if possible at this meeting.

Be sure to write the Secretary about your success.

Dear Secretary: Please send me the literature on the Doubling Campaign. I have divided our membership into four teams and will start them to work Thursday night at our August meeting, with four captains. We hope to make a great success of our campaign. When the women are kept busy they are happy I find.

Laxatives Replaced By the Use of Nujol

Nujol is a lubricant—not a medicine or laxative—so cannot gripe. When you are constipated, not enough of Nature's lubricating liquid is produced in the bowel to keep the food waste soft and moving. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication. Try it today.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Picayune, Miss.

The Picayune Auxiliary has been doing splendid work under the leadership of Mrs. C. McDonald, as president. Meetings are held every Monday afternoon: First Monday, business meeting; second Monday, Bible study; third Monday, Mission study; fourth Monday, social in some home. The social meeting in June was made a "Belle Bennett Memorial Service," and was most imppressive.

There has been a beautiful spirit of helpfulness and co-operation among the members, and every meeting is well attended. It is the ambition of every member of the Society to be on the Honor Roll this year.

REPORTER.

"Training a Social Conscience and Directing Community Service."

In the march of progress and under the providence of God, we, as women, find ourselves full citizens of the United States, citizens of a democracy, with all the privileges, the opportunities, and the responsibilities of citizenship. We stand beside our fathers, our brothers, and our husbands, equally responsible for the forward movement toward a better governed nation, toward a State that shall year by year advance in its care for people, in all ways that belong to good government.

Mrs. Newell says: "Women have been so long accustomed to thinking of the process of government, elections, law-making, office-holding and campaigning, as belonging to men exclusively, that it has taken some time for most of us to think of ourselves as having any active part in any of these matters. This is not strange, since it has not been many years since the phrases 'dirty politics' and 'tricky politicians' indicated the aloofness of 'nice people' from the political machinery. Men also prided themselves on an utter lack of concern in primary elections. But the spirit of these times is different. Our best men are responding to the call to take their places as citizens actively interested in good government.

"This has prepared the way for women to take up these duties, simply and honestly asking themselves, 'How can we make the gospel of Jesus Christ express itself, in this new call and in these new opportunities?'

"Since we have been given the right to vote, should we not study the laws of our State, the character of the candidates, and vote intelligently? not letting malice or prejudice influence us. Lady Astor says: 'Don't forget, men, when called on, have laid down their lives for their country's good; now it is up to us, the women of all countries that have the vote, to lay aside our prejudices, and, above all, our narrowness, and accept the great and glorious responsibility that lies before us, to help not only our own country, but all countries. Let us see to it that our Christian civilization is more than a name—men and women working together to bring a real peace on earth.'"

Mrs. Newell tells us that we as church women have been trying to serve the common good, in promoting the church's program for social welfare. We have gone into new fields of service, as we have carried Christ's message of healing and succor and cleansing, where we saw the need.

In the case of the child labor laws and others, we feel that the women of the country are surely the ones to speak in this matter, so deeply affecting the homes and future welfare of the mass of our people, who labor at wages for bread.

Every woman will need to put forth all her energy and summon all her faitb. Let us remember here Miss Bennett's conviction, quoted by Mrs. McDonell: "One good, righteous law, properly enforced, will do more than all our woman's work can do to reform and make over."

This is the adventure of faith, in many aspects, faith that times are in God's hands, faith in humanity. The advance in education in State universities and public schools, public health measures, experimental work in agriculture, the support of home and farm demonstration service, forest preservation, purchase of great tracts as people's playgrounds, all these testify to the enlightenment and faith of the few, each of which has been a triumph of faith over doubts, ignorance and difficulties.

And faith in ourselves, that we as human beings and as women, have something to contribute, through active citizenship, to the bringing of the kingdom of God a step nearer realization on earth, as our Council Superintendent of Social Service has told us.

She also says that the Superintendent of Social Service has such a broad field of labor, that any phase of work that touched women and children was within her province. Social service work is a task that requires courage and tact as well as an amouut of specified knowledge. This difficult goal is being reached, as testified by the many reports from the different States—clean-up campaigns, baby clinics held, nutrition work in schools, and visits to town councils in the interest of law enforcement. One society has a member detailed to attend juvenile court cases; several serve as big sisters. Other things that the social service workers have done are: Homes opened for the entertainment of children; employment found for men; milk furnished children; one has a member on each civic and welfare organization in the city; others try to influence parents to unite against unchaperoned automobiling; secured Bible reading in some schools; protest against bad pictures, and worked for censorship of pictures; visit county institutions and call attention to unsanitary conditions; petition councils to close filling stations on Sunday; assist in community work among the negroes; conduct nursery for mothers at Sunday morning services; help get school term for negro children extended, and work with county election board.

One of the fallacies of our day is that which declares the decay of the rural church. Absentee land ownership is destroying some rural churches, but statistics show that when the rural church is composed of home owners, it is making tho most rapid growth of any section of our great church. Three-fourths of the membership of the Methodist Church in the South is found in the country and small villages. The acute problem of the church, in the South, will be the country church. Since the advent of the automobile and the good roads, travel has been made possible and success surer.

Some things tho social communities of the rural churches may do are to organize rural Sunday schools; give loads of wood to the poor; co-operate in community "sings" and illiteracy campaigns; distribute Sunday school literature to children in remote places; help locate orphan children in Christian homes; visit the sick, and carry shut-ins to services.

We mention the fact that our East End, Meridian, social service workers give programs at the mothers' meetings at Wesley House, furnishing refreshments; send boxes to the Wesley House; furnish cars to carry children to picnics, and carry sick lady to and

JOINT COMMITTE ON YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK MEETS.

By Garfield Evans.

The joint committee on Young People's work, composed of three members from the Epworth League Board and three members from the Woman's Missionary Council, are called to meet Sept. 6 and 7. They will consider the practicability and ways and means of organic union of the Young People's Missionary Society and the Senior Epworth League, as well as the juvenile organizations of the two bodies.

What will be the result? And what ought to be done? Many of us have our ideas as to what ought to be done. There is abundance of experience and conviction demanding a conservation of our efforts as well as the necessity for a united advance. As to what will be done depends very largely upon the united demand of the young people and leaders who are vitally interested. This demand is not that of delegations or of petitions, but the demand of an intercessory faith. The youth of the world are knocking at our door. It is a timo for heroic action.

Will you be concerned to pray for the success of this committee?

FAITH IN MAN.

By Rev. J. E. Godbey.

Faith in God, that he will lead us on into more perfect conformity to his will, is faith also in man that he will choose light and truth, the right and the good as experience and increasing knowledge make them manifest. To predicate success of the teacher is to trust the capacity and docility of the pupil. We may, therefore, say that we believe that, as the result of clearer revelations, the progress of mankind to more perfect conformity to God's laws is assured. When we lose faith in man, that he will in the main, follow truth and choose the good, as he has knowledge of them, we lose faith in God also. It is in vain that the Master wills that all men should come to the knowledge of the truth if truth as here known will be rejected. It is in vain that he bids us overcome evil with good if it cannot be done. When we cease to pray and teach and work and wait in full confidence that God's will will be accomplished, we are no longer united to him as fruitful branches. We are out of harmony with his life and spirit and scheme to save men.

Jesus had faith in men—tremendous faith in men. "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." He says: "If they kill me, if they lift me up on the cross, I will break the heart of the world; I will win the faith and love of the world." Love of men and confidence that love and truth will win, and that men will give their own lives to strengthen the teachings of righteousness and truth, invests us with an optimism that will not falter or doubt or grow nervous. But Christian optimism is not based on any doctrine that God will end this struggle against evil in any sudden or arbitrary or miraculous way. He is ever dealing with man as a pupil to be instructed and won by the truth. That is the way of moral government, and there is no other way.

This is a glorious war we are waging against the powers of darkness. The glory of it is an inspiration.

SEEING MEN IN LIGHT OF POSSIBILITIES.

Another trait in his leadership is revealed when Simon was brought to him by his older brother, Andrew. Fastening his eyes upon him, Jesus said: "Thou art Simon . . . thou shalt be called Cephas." Looking beneath the impulsive, unsteady Simon, he saw the possible rock-like Peter—firm, reliable, certain—and dared to call him by the name of his possible self. Here is an element quite distinctive in Christ. We to-day in estimating men usually say: "What is he worth? "What can he do?" Jesus ever put it in the future tense: "What can he become?" "How much can he develop?" He called men on the basis not of achievement but of direction. He asked, not "How far has he gone?" but "Where is he headed?" The men who were faced in the right direction, these were the big possibilities in the thought of Jesus. He was more interested in comers than in arrivals.—E. A. Leslie.

SAUCE FOR THE INDIAN.

By Alice L. Pearson, in the Christian Herald.

The following incident illustrates the red man's ability to keep a calm exterior under trying circumstances. Certain Indian chiefs were visiting the city of Washington. At a hotel where they were dining, one of the number seeing a white man use pepper-sauce, took the bottle when passed to him, and shook it over his food. After taking a mouthful of the fiery condiment, he kept his expression unchanged but could not keep back the tears. The Indian who sat next asked him why he was crying. With solemn gravity he answered: "I was thinking of my dead grandmother."

A moment later the second Indian took the bottle of pepper-sauce and plentifully besprinkled his food. Soon the tears began to roll down his immobile face. The first sufferer leaned toward him and asked: "What are you crying for?"

Tho imperturbable reply came: "I am crying because you didn't die when your grandmother did."

THE ETERNAL QUEST OF A LEADER.

A leader knows he cannot do it all. He must find men, commit tasks to them, and then trust them. Hence the leader is on an eternal quest. He is constantly hunting for men, and Jesus was no exception. Moreover, Jesus had a genius for finding them. When he laid hold of Philip, he was not taking advantage of an accidental discovery made on a chance walk along the sea. He had gone out looking for men, and Philip was the man he had found. The secret of leadership in every field is just this—finding men. One of the strong points of Mr. Curtis of the Curtis Publishing Company has ever been this. He travels far and wide throughout his branch offices and is always looking for men who accept and administer responsibility. When he finds a man he knows his company has moved a notch forward. —Dr. E. A. Leslie.

KEEP SWEET UNTIL 10 O'CLOCK.

"Keep sweet until 10 o'clock; the rest of the day will take care of itself," was the message of a placard that hung in several places in the big publishing house where all the employees could see it. "Keeping Sweet" is one of the biggest donations that we can make to the world.

Eleanor had been reading in the paper of the hundred thousand dollars that the man in the big house on the hill had given toward an orphanage. "It's nice to be rich and be able to give a lot," said she. But she did not realize what a gift her own sweet smile, and her willingness to help every one, was to the world. Just keeping sweet is giving something the value of which can never be reckoned in dollars and cents.—Exchange.

from the Mattie Hersey Hospital; also send fruit and clothing to Wesley House, and the social service workers in the Young People's Missionary Society; teach sewing classes and help with Christmas tree. We have helped to buy graduating presents for the Wesley House girls. We have sent boxes of linen to the Mattie Hersey Hospital, and assisted the social service committee of the church in holding services at the T. B. and charity hospitals and jails. We are also helping to keep a girl in Vashti.

To carry forward these and other purposes and in order to plan more efficient work, would it not be a fine plan for the social service superintendents of the different cities to federate, as Mrs. Newell has suggested? She says she counts it one of the choicest opportunities the church has to offer, to touch the motive springs of thousands of women, plain women, untrained women, to point the way to carrying the gospel of loving service of Jesus Christ to the folk whose lives touch theirs; to bring knowledge of more efficient ways of lifting our lives into the cleanness and freedom and joy that Jesus would crave for us and lead them into fearless citizenship.

In the picture of the Christ's crucifixion we have the four emblems or instruments of his sufferings for us—the scourge, the crown of thorns, the spear and the cross.

He suffered in silence to save me,
I will silently suffer to serve Him.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

"IT IS I; BE NOT AFRAID."

It was a wonderful word of cheer that Christ spoke to his disciples when they were in distress on the sea, laboring against a contrary wind. They had taken the boat at his command. Their obedience had placed them in a perilous situation: on the sea, away from men; in a storm; afraid; worn out with rowing; and it was a desolate hour—probably between three and six o'clock in the morning. But disaster does not befall those who do what Christ tells them to do. While the disciples were in trouble, Christ himself was praying on the mountain-side—getting ready to help them. No situation is so desperate that Christ cannot appear. It is often in our darkest hours that Christ is most real and most precious to us. And where Christ is, fear has no place. "It is I; be not afraid"—that word brings sweet assurance to-day to all who obediently keep Christ's commandments.

THE EFFICIENT METHODIST.

The test of any organization is its efficiency in the performance of the task that brought it into existence. The task of Methodism is to spread Scriptural holiness over the land, and its success is to be measured by its efficiency in doing that work.

The efficiency of an organization, however, is conditioned upon the efficiency of the individuals who make up that organization. We measure, therefore, the efficiency of the Methodist Church by the efficiency of those who compose it. What are the marks, then, of the efficient Methodist?

First of all we place a religious experience. A man who knows what it is to feel the burden of sin; who has repented of his sins and, through faith in Christ, has known the blessedness of forgiveness; who, in the joy of that consciousness, hears the tender words, "Thou are my son"—that man has a religious experience that all the vain philosophies of the world cannot deprive him of. He knows whom he has believed—and it is very precious knowledge.

The efficient Methodist, then, out of that experience, finds joy in attending upon the ordinances of the church. All the efficient Methodists we have ever known have been those who believed in and practiced, so far as they were able, regular attendance upon the preaching and other services of the church, not merely as a matter of form, but because it ministered to their growth in grace.

The efficient Methodist also is constantly acquiring knowledge—knowledge of the Word of God, of the church and its work, of the world and its needs. Ignorance is always the enemy of efficiency.

And the efficient Methodist is active—doing all he can to advance the interests of the Kingdom of God, and giving all he can for the promotion of the cause of Christ.

A religious experience, conformity to the obligations of church membership, knowledge, activity—these are the marks of the efficient Methodist. What are they also but the marks of the true Christian?

WHAT IS IT WORTH?

Who can estimate the value of a single life lived for God? The salvation of that life itself adds to the Kingdom of God an infinle value, for the Master has taught us that one soul is worth all the world besides. But the saved soul is not content with its own salvation—it invests itself in the salvation of others, and dividends are reaped that extend through eternity.

The September number of the Sunday School Magazine gives us a glimpse of the life of a man who deserves a high place among those who are called heroes of the faith—Mr. J. D. Flowers, of Dothan, Ala. Converted in 1874, at the age of twenty-eight, he learned to read and write after his marriage, and in January, 1877, he started a little Sunday school at Bolling, Ala. From that time until the present he has missed only five sessions of the Sunday school—twice on account of deaths in his family, and three times on account of personal sickness. In his Sunday school work he has come into contact with many young people, boys and girls, eager for an education, and many of them he has helped through college. Among these are several preachers, one of whom is a noted evangelist.

Who can tell what this man's life has been worth to the world? We do not know whether he is wealthy in material things or not; but we do know that he has accumulated treasure that moth and rust cannot corrupt, and that thieves can never take away from him. Happy? We have never seen him; but we venture the assertion that he is one of the happiest men in the world. What is such a life worth? We wish we could read his ledger account in the books of the recording angel.

Friend, what is your life worth?

WHY ON SUNDAY?

We understand perfectly well that the race for the governorship of Louisiana is fraught with tremendous interest, and we have no disposition to say or do anything that would in the slightest degree interfere with the full presentation of the claims of all the candidates to as many people as possible. But we do not understand why Sunday should be the "big day" in the campaign. We venture the assertion that the candidate for the high office who would courteously but firmly declare that he would fill no political engagements on the Sabbath, would by that very act command the earnest and thoughtful consideration of some thousands of men and women in the State who are predisposed to cast their votes for candidates who "remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy." Sunday is no day for political picnics and speech-making.

A WISE MULE.

A mule was hitched to a wagon that was backed up against the curb. Quite nonchalantly he was standing with his head extending over the car tracks so far that it seemed inevitable that the first car that passed would give him such a bump as would make him see just about all the stars in the firmament. The car was approaching, and we watched to see what would happen. Without even an extra twitch of his tail, that mule calmly moved his head to one side, giving the car plenty of room to pass, with some to spare, and then he resumed his former position. He had not moved his feet—he stood where he stood before; his body had not perceptibly moved—he was still between the shafts of the wagon, and the contents of the wagon had not been so much as jostled. The big, lumbering car passed on—and the mule was just where he was before. Wise mule!

YOU CAN NOT "GET RELIGION."

Religion is not a thing to be picked up, as we might pick up a pebble and put it in our pocket; it is not a thing to be put on or laid off, as we might put on a coat or remove it as occasion might demand; it is not a thing we can go into the market and buy, as we might buy the materials for to-morrow's noonday meal. We do not "get religion"—we become religious. Religion is a power which dominates all the faculties of the heart and soul; it is a principle of living which regulates inner attitudes and outward expressions; it is the impartation of a new life by the Spirit of God by which the whole nature is changed, so that all things become new. It means a new central passion, a new purpose, a new affection, a new activity. The man who "gets religion" may quickly lose it; the man who becomes religious is a new creature in Christ Jesus.

KNOW YOUR JOB.

The word "job" may not be very high-sounding to those whose ears are accustomed mostly to "vocation," "position," etc.—but it is a word that expresses unequivocally the means by which most of us get our daily bread and meat. Even if we do not like it, it is a hard word to get away from; much harder is it to get away from the things it represents. That being so, we might as well not try, but give our attention to learning all that is to be learned in connection with our "jobs." If we prefer a "position" to a "job," the best way to get it is to know all that is to be known about the "job" we have. We are in no sense flippant when we quote in this connection the significant words, "Study to show thyself approved, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

AN ORTHODOX REPLY TO BISHOP MOUZON.

By Rev. Thomas H. Lipscomb.

ARTICLE II.

The outstanding characteristic of Bishop Mouzon's recent articles, it appears to me, is that they are usually written in behalf of piety, Christian experience, "Fundamentals of Methodism"; but before getting far one is amazed at the contrariety between the subject announced and the position taken; which position is one of outspoken opposition to the defenders of the faith—with never a word of censure for the liberals who are undermining it.

For instance, pick up the April number of the Methodist Quarterly Review. You find the opening article entitled, to your joy, as follows:

"The Faith Once for All Delivered Unto the Saints."

By Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

"Contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints." (Jude 3.)

Ah! How attractive! Surely the reports are untrue that the Quarterly Review is unsound! We begin to read: "We should inquire just what Jude means by 'the faith' which was once delivered. How much is included in that term? We should proceed carefully. We should make sure not to read into Jude's language thoughts and theories which Jude knew nothing of * * * The point is just this: to know what Jude means by 'the faith' once delivered to the saints, we must go to the Epistle of Jude itself." Now, whoever heard of such a principle of exegesis? We must cut out the rest of the Bible on this subject, though Paul and Peter and John all use even the very phrase "the faith" with an evident fullness and wealth of meaning which all Christians understood; yet a bishop of Southern Methodism, in her leading theological journal would confine the content of "the faith once for all delivered to the saints" to the contents of the one chapter of the brief epistle of Jude! And as he finds the epistle of Jude, after the opening exhortation, to contend earnestly for "the faith," devoted primarily to moral emphasis as local conditions required, the Bishop infers that "Jude evidently does not mean 'a body of doctrine,' 'a correct theology';" and the grand old faith is so emasculated that if any one accepts "the Lordship and Saviourhood of Jesus Christ" (very ambiguous words as now used) and the "necessity of a good life in consequence of that faith," it is all that is implied. Christ's divinity, his incarnation, his miracles, his atoning death, his resurrection, his ascension and coming again to judgment, all may be and are being rejected by scholars who would gladly admit and speak of his "Lordship and Saviourhood," and the necessity of a good life; yet pride of intellect "compasseth them about as a cart rope," and they bear not the first marks of Christian humility or grace.

But as we tread disappointedly through the article, we find the Bishop has much to say about the Bible; and he certainly does not increase our veneration of or confidence in it as an authoritative, inspired, divine revelation. Hear him, we quote a paragraph in full:

"It is time to be done with such views of the Bible. Such claims of verbal infallibility and universal authority only serve to make unbelievers out of people. For when men who have not been brought up as Christians from childhood come to read the Bible in the light of such claims, they see at once that the Bible is not the kind of book they have been told that it is; and when our own Christian young people take up the study of the Bible in real earnest, they soon find that a mistake has been made somewhere, and the tragedy is that instead of rejecting the false theories they have inherited (black-faced type ours), they sometimes reject the Bible itself."

Well, the Bishop has committed himself a little more than is usual. So the "theories they have inherited"—and that can mean nothing more nor less than what they have been taught by godly fathers, mothers, pastors, the church (for these are "Christian young people") are false; and "It is time to be done with such views of the Bible!" Verily a "false note" has been struck in Methodism, and it is quite apparent whence the false note comes, even though it be subtly imbedded in an article entitled—"Contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints."

But Bishop Mouzon is dreadfully concerned lest "We should make unbelievers out of people." In the Review just cited and in the Advocates he harps on the same string: "If something is not done, multitudes will be driven into the camp of the 'liberalists,' and some may be driven into actual infidelity." The kernel of the matter is simply stated thus: If you call on them to believe the Bible as really and truly God's Word from cover to cover, in harmony with the old views, they will not believe it and will have to be classed as unbelievers; so let us not ask them to blieve it as the orthodox have always believed it; and lo! these unbelievers can be classed as believers, and the trick is turned. The "liberalists," then, who deny that Adam ever lived, or that man ever fell, who affirm evolution instead of creation, who deny the historical truth of most of the Old Testament, and much of the miraculous and theological element of the New, can then still be good Christians, professors of theology, preachers, even bishops; whereas, judged by the old standards, they are heretics, as verily they are, but they don't like the name which belongs to them. That is no new way of making "Christians" (the Jesuits were adepts at it long ago), though God save Methodism from adopting it! and God save the church that is made up of such "Christians," who are received with an obsequious bow to all their intellectual pride, whereby they sit in judgment on the Word of God, and say "I don't believe" this, or "I do believe" that, according to their subjective impression backed by whatever intellectual theories they may deem acceptable.

But where are these "multitudes" who must be classed as infidels, not if we don't convert them, but if we don't revise our views of the Bible? I have been born and have lived in as intelligent an atmosphere, I think I may say, as our good Bishop; I have touched the lives of ten thousand students in State and church schools within the past ten years, and not one have I found drifting in unbelief, except where his intellectual pride was aroused by professors who taught him thus to doubt and sometimes ridicule. But "like begets like," and I suppose we all find what we look for. But I have seen this: The blighting effect of all this doubt upon preachers and people alike in Methodism, chilling all hearts and destroying all zeal; and testimony to this I recently found in a book by a Harvard professor, to which I trust Bishop Mouzon and others will give heed. William James, in "Varieties of Religious Experience," says in a footnote: "See how the ancient spirit of Methodism evaporates before such delightfully written rationalistic booklets (which every one should read) written by Professor Borden P. Bowne!" So we see it evaporating still more as men come back from almost every Institute for Christian workers or teachers with expressions of this same subtle rationalism from imported or domestic leaders, numbing their souls; yet the Bishop has the temerity to charge the orthodox with originating the trouble, and exhorts, almost commands them to leave the heretics alone—sends them out indeed among the Catholics if they insist upon authority anywhere in Methodism—excepting, of course, the authority of bureaucratic administration, which is being exercised almost to the enslavement of the ministry to-day.

But Bishop Mouzon has a good word to speak for the Bible, and he formulates it very carefully and uses black-faced type as follows in the paragraph succeeding the one quoted above: "In answer to the question, What is the Bible? the following may be given: The Bible is the record of God's progressive self-revelation in history and experience, culminating in Jesus Christ, who 'brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.'" Now, that sounds well, but it is just about as full of holes as an old leaky roof, through which every rain of heresy and wind of unsound doctrine may go unhindered. Let us examine it a little. "The Bible is the record." What kind of a record? He does not say. Infallible? Authoritative? Trustworthy? Inspired? Historical? Pseudo-historical or quasi-historical? Perfect, or imperfect? Fill in as you please. He commits himself to nothing. "Of God's progressive"; ah! what a loophole is that word for reducing the early portions of Scripture to myths and legends; and the early patriarchs, prophets and saints to men very crude and imperfect in their views of God or even of morality, and very unreliable in their so-called history. If only the infidels like Robert Ingersoll had lived long enough, with our new views of "progressive revelation" we could not only have agreed with him as to the "mistakes of Moses," but Dr. Rice could have assured him that Moses did not even write the Pentateuch. That "From Moses to Samuel: Society was disorganized, crude; there was a dearth of high men. The will of God was supposed to be learned from wizards, necromancers, sorcerers——" He might, in short, have been informed of our new views and given the right hand of fellowship as a good Christian himself, finding congenial company in modern professors of theology, and all indeed who are abreast of modern thought. But go yet a step further with this definition; "God's progressive self-revelation." The Bible is much more than God's self-revelation; it is a revelation concerning man, his origin and destiny, his fall and Redemption; and the revelation concerning man and the world which contains him is as vital and necessary as the revelation concerning God. To limit the Bible as being only a self-revelation of God is again to make a loophole through which modern evolutionary scientific speculation and modern psychology can take the place of divine revelation concerning man and the cosmos. So nothing could be more vulnerable to an orthodox Christian than the Bishop's definition, but we are confident it would be praised by all the heretics, for it leaves them all standing room within the fold. If the Bishop had tried, I do not believe he could have framed a definition more loose, yet sounding more plausible.

But the uncertain sound of the Bishop's trumpet is heard not only concerning the Bible, but concerning some of its specific vital doctrines, the truth of which our people are amazed that a bishop should call in question. He first objects to, and then openly repudiates the "Calvinistic" doctrine, as he terms it, now advocated anew as he thinks by the Fundamentalists, of a "Substitutionary Atonement." Hear him, and wonder all ye Methodists that a Methodist bishop should write thus (from Article "Fundamentalism and Methodism"): "Now, when we come to speak of the atonement made by Christ in his own precious blood, it behooves us to take off our shoes, for we stand on holy ground." (Agreed). "But as I understand our friends the Fundamentalists to use the words "Substitutionary Atonement," they mean that the penalty that was due me on account of my sins fell on Christ (black-faced type ours)—that violated law demaded a victim, and that Christ was punished in my place. If that be what they mean, then it is the old Calvinistic (Calvinistic, the Bishop is made to misspell Calvinism twice here) doctrine over again in naked form, and we Methodists are not Calvinists. (Editor's note: The editor of the Advocate of course accepts full responsibility for the typographical error.) And this is not my chief objection. My chief objection grows out of the fact that it is not theology that saves a man; it is Christ that saves."

Two observations we must make here. First, that the Bishop's representation of Calvinism is about as correct as the spelling of the word in the article before me. Everybody knows that our difference with Calvinism is over the extent of the atonement, not the theory; Calvinists holding to a limited atonement, that "Christ died for the elect only," while we hold to a universal atonement! so let none depart from the old faith frightened by the bugaboo of "Calvinism."

Our second observation is that this doctrine exactly as stated and denied by Bishop Mouzon is the obvious, undeniable teaching of Scripture (though it is ever "to the Greeks foolishness") from the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah on through the New Testament into illimitable, endless glory, where, "in the midst of the throne, a Lamb as it had been slain" will still symbolize this sacred truth; and we cry to Bishop Mouzon in the language of St. John: "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world!" Who "bore our sins in his own body on the tree," and died "the just for the unjust that he might bring us to God." As we said long ago in concluding an article on "The Theology of St. John" in the Methodist Quarterly Review, "Whoever would eliminate from Christianity these words and truth must also reform the theology of heaven and teach ethics toward the very throne of God." Surely it ill becomes a bishop to wipe out the whole significance of the atonement with the superficial statement: "It is not theology that saves a man; it is Christ that saves." Yes, Christ. But Christ WHO? Not man but God Incarnate; and Christ How? By his life and teaching and example? No, though all the liberals would say so; but by his death upon the cross for our redemption. By his blood, not as a martyr, but only as that blood is understood to signify not the death of a martyr having no relation to our sins; but as an expiation for sin—my sins, Bishop, and yours; and you nor I can be saved through Christ except as we believe in "Christ Crucified," by whose "stripes we are healed." To repudiate theology as you do is to retain the use of words, while robbing them of all content and meaning. Why a bishop, of all men, should delight in such is strange beyond expression.

Well, enough for this time. "The agitation concerning orthodoxy and heresy" will cease when the Goliaths of error no longer stalk abroad even among the hosts of Israel. Until then the little Davids, trusting in God, must hurl their smooth stones. Perchance the vulnerable spot may be found; and God's church, bearing triumphant testimony to his eternal truth, may again go forth to victory.

Perhaps in another article we shall further expose current error and sophistries under the title "The Search for Truth," as finely phrased by the liberalistic editor of our Quarterly Review.

THE TREASURE.

We devote ourselves to the acquisition of the whole field of life and character until we are able to say that the new-found treasure is love. The only price of divine treasure is love. We cannot pay for it in any other way. And love comes out of faith. Nothing in the world enriches a soul, develops its power, completes its real life more naturally than the faith that there is somewhere, not far away, a pure and true and perfect Being, whom we can love without reserve.—Herbert Snell.

"AS HE THINKETH."

By Rev. H. M. Ellis.

The ultimate purpose of all God's dealings with man is a man's worthy and right living—call it righteousness, sanctification, holiness, Christliness or whatever name you prefer. "And you, who were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled in the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblamable and unreprovable in his sight." (Col. 1:21, 22.)

The means appointed, and relied on by infinite Wisdom for the achievement of this great end is the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." (Mark 16:15.)

Sincere belief in this gospel unfailingly results in the supreme and divinely-purposed salvation, evidenced by holy life. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." (Acts 16:31.)

Could anything more strongly emphasize the fact that faith determines life?

Not that so-called "faith" which accepts theological tenets as one does the fashion of his garments, that he may not be unlike his neighbors. Not that "faith" dropping glibly from one's tongue in memorized, but indifferently understood, formulas of his "creed." Not that history, traditions and dogmas for which one, though scarcely apprehending their import, has acquired considerable reverence. Not that "faith" one has been taught it is his duty to accept, and he, therefore, hopes he has accepted. These do not grip and dominate his life for the simple reason that these are not really his beliefs.

When his audience put the question to Jesus, "What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?" Jesus answered and said unto them, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." (John 6:28,29.) The tree will determine the fruit.

Life is not by any means all exterior. The real, the essential life is interior, hidden from eye of man. It is within that the forces are born and mobilized that go forth to conquest.

The exterior, like overalls and dress suits, may be put on for the occasion—not nature and spontaneity, but expediency determining. The real life within, motivizing and determining all, is not only known to him who keeps the record, but it will inevitably ultimate in character and conduct which will make it known to any observant person. The thoughts, the moods, the volitions, the aspirations, the resolves, and purposes are of the very essence of living. These originate, initiate, dominate. Primary in determining all of these are the vital beliefs. "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." (Prov. 23.7.)

A thoughtless, illogical and reckless evangelist in an alleged sermon on "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved" (Acts 16:31), laid down the proposition, "Believing on the Lord Jesus Christ will not save"—the direct contradiction of his Scripture text. To his own superficial mind, he proved this by saying, "All of you believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, but some of you are not saved." His dogmatic assertion was grossly false. True belief in Jesus Christ never has and never will fail of salvation. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." (John 3:36). One who assumes to preach or write for the instruction of others should at least be able to discriminate between the vital faith which, though tiny as a mustard seed, grips, creates, dominates—"moves mountains" (Matt. 17:20), and a mere acquiescence, for sundry reasons, in the religious tenets of family or community.

Ultimately the words, the acts, the fixed and unchangeable character of the life are the legitimate outcome of that life's beliefs. Hence God's chief business with men concerns their beliefs. He sent his only begotten Son, the Incarnate Word, to set men the true pattern and reveal to them the heavenly fashion of life, and at the same time, both by his life and by his shameful, agonizing death on the cross, enable man to sense the unspeakable love of his yearning heart. He would right men's beliefs by putting the facts before their eyes, because the beliefs are basic, fundamental, determining.

Men choose their own vital beliefs. "If any man will come after me" (Luke 9:23) it is for the man to make the choice. "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to as many as believed on his name." (John 1:12.) But, though "Light is come into the world," there are some who "love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." (John 3:19.) "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" (Matt. 6:23.) The result of the rejection of light is inevitable, and history has made it conspicuous, for "even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind," (Rom. 1:12), a mind abandoned altogether to evil. What a state! But farther, "For this cause" ("because they received not the love of truth, that they might be saved") "God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." (II Thess. 2:10-12.) Believing the lie unfailingly results in doom.

Since one's belief is the fundamental and causal factor in his life, and since it is evident that God himself depends on belief in the truth for rational alignment, right expression and heavenly development of life, the supreme task of the church is manifestly to clearly, decisively and insistently declare the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. This is its supreme obligation. For this it exists. For this its ministers are called and commissioned by the Holy Spirit. It is not responsible for the reception or rejection of its message by the hearer, but it is responsible for the soundness, sincerity and urgency with which the whole truth in Christ Jesus is declared.

And in exact proportion to the clearness and heartiness of its message of salvation in Christ Jesus may the church be sure of the co-operation of the Holy Spirit, and of fruitage in holy lives, that will carry light and power to the selfish and sin-sodden world.

Brookhaven, Miss.

THE WISDOM OF THE HEART.

God bless the practical, matter-of-fact people! What would the world do without them? And yet I am glad that we haven't a world full of them. That is, of the extreme type; the people who hardly quite believe in anything that they cannot see and handle, who have something of a scorn for mere sentiment, and think day-dreaming is utter waste of time. A world full of folk like that might be a very comfortable world, and things might be always done up in it, but it would be at the same time a very uninteresting and unattractive world. The things we can see and handle are not the only things. Indeed they are not the big and important and interesting things at all. And the man who busies his whole life with them is missing the very cream of living. When it comes to scorning "mere sentiment," it is well to remember that it is the mightiest force in all this world, notwithstanding it is sordidness that we hear so much about. Some people say that men will do anything for money, but history shows that money has been a very wooden and unattractive thing compared with mere notions and sentiments. The things that people may see when they close their eyes are the things that make life vastly more than the other kind. It is an utter folly to scorn them, or not to believe in them. It is the vision of the soul and the wisdom of the heart that really matter.—Christian Guardian.

MARTYRS.

If they persecuted me, they will also persecute you.—John 15:20.

They therefore departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer dishonor for the Name.—Acts 5:41 R. V.)

RUSTON DISTRICT NOTES.

The pastor and people of Arcadia are watching with interest the walls of the new church going up. This will certainly be an addition to Arcadia.

* * *

The Athens circuit has had revivals at all the churches. At Athens the three churches went in together and held a union meeting, the pastors doing their own preaching. They speak of the meeting as being one of the best they have had. Brother Sheppard will have a good report at Conference.

* * *

Bernice charge is moving along fine on all lines. An excellent young man from this charge has decided to enter the ministry. He graduated with honors from high school and intends entering Centenary College this fall. Rev. O. L. Tucker is in high favor.

The pastor at Castor, Rev. E. J. Buck, has had to undergo an operation, but is now recovering, and is closing out the year in good shape.

* * *

Homer had an organ recital on Aug. 31, and the first preaching service in the new church was Sept. 2, with the sermon by the pastor. The pastor and members say (and they are not far wrong) that they have the prettiest church in the State.

The pastor, Rev. W. C. Childress, did his own preaching in the revival at Minden. The attendance was splendid and the results were very gratifying.

* * *

The Conference Training School held at Ruston from Aug. 26 to 31 was quite a success.

* * *

Winnfield circuit, where Rev. E. W. Day is the pastor, is having a good year. Rev. D. F. Anders, of Cotton Valley circuit, assisted at Atlanta and Joyce with good results at both places. Two are coming up for license to preach from this circuit.

We haven't space to enumerate all the good things in this paper. At all the charges, both pastors and people are getting busy for the fall campaign to close out with a full report and everything in full.

The third quarterly conference for Mansfield charge showed splendid results from the work of the year. The finances of the church were never in more encouraging condition. In South Mansfield, where the Union church building was demolished by a storm last year, an attractive building has been leased for five years, free of cost, in consideration of its renovation. President Bratton is much encouraged by the indications pointing to a fine opening for Mansfield College on Sept. 9.

FROM THE PELICAN PINES.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

After ten delightful days with the Georgians in the Hartwell Camp Meeting, I headed in at Union, West Virginia, as the speaker on the "Old Rehoboth" anniversary This is an old church, built in 1786, and dedicated by Bishop Asbury. He held three Conferences in this old log sanctuary, which still stands in a fairly good state of preservation. Its walls are pierced with holes for the rifles of the worshipers in case of attack by Indians. It is a rare link between this day and the pioneers, and the good people of the community of all denominations realize its historic value as a relic of a heroic era. If the weather is fair, they turn out by thousainds on the anniversary; but on this anniversary lightnings flashed, the thunders boomed, and the rain poured in torrents. The slick mountain roads forbade cars, and so it was a water-haul. I preached three times to small audiences that braved the elements. Brother Wilcher, the pastor, was sorely disappointed. He expected the "forgotten man" to come away with a nice offering that would keep the pot boiling for some time; but, poor fellow, he had to hustle to raise expenses, and the "forgotten man" had to buckle up his belt again to suit the size of his rations. It has become a "habit," but he keeps out of jail and keeps kicking. In spite of our disappointment, I greatly enjoyed the occasion, and Wilcher got some "ideas." It is a great thing when a young preacher gets to having "ideas." According to old Plato, ideas are the seeds of things, and I expect Wilcher's "ideas" will spront and grow into a big tabernacle at Old Rehoboth and a two days' meeting to double the chance against the weather. Luck to the young man and his ideas. He treated me nicely.

I wanted to go from Union to the West Virginia Conference, but Yoak, the pastor at Barbourville, wrote me not to come as their slate was full. I am sorry, for I like the West Virginia itinerants that I have seen, and wanted to get acquainted with more of them. But headed off there, I accepted an invitation to Graham, Va., and doubled back to Charlottesville, and around to Graham. There I broke my rule, and instead of going to a hotel, I accepted the hospitality of Mr. W. F. Morton. Of course, I enjoyed it. Who wouldn't enjoy such charming people? Mr. Morton is a Methodist who reads his church papers, and has read the history of his church, and keeps in touch with its work; so he is not a dummy Methodist. The pastor at Graham, Rev. A. S. Thorn, is a brainy chap, meddling with knowledge as if a modern preacher had time for such intellectual activities, instead of devoting his energies to getting up his collections! That is the old style, when the preacher spent the morning in his study; the new style spends the morning in going over accounts and the rest of the day in "social service" a la Junaluska and Blue Ridge, etc. Friday night I lectured to a full house on "Home Life in Dixie During the War," and preached to a fine congregation Sunday morning. I found I was booked for Bland Street, Bluefield, at night. Dr. Hamilton, the pastor, gave us a fine audience, and we had a good service. I found the climate of Bluefield the best yet—summer weather, bracing, invigorating. I would enjoy a whole month of it; it suits my lungs exactly.

From Bluefield I dropped back and rested for several days in the home of my son-in-law, Mr. J. H. Creighton, in Roanoke. Until recently, Mr. Creighton was the General Secretary of the Roanoke Y. M. C. A., and whatever changes may come, that fine institution will be his monument. I greatly enjoyed his delightful home. Its quiet refinement and cultured atmosphere, and the unsurpassed surroundings of mountain scenery, are ideal. I had a short interview with Dr. J. W. Smith, the pastor of the great Green Memorial Church, and I never meet such men as Smith without wondering why the pilots of the Old Ship of Zion will send off for men like Dr. Shailer Mathews, who admits he does not know where we came from or are going to, and such men as Dr. Bland, who destroys our faith, and overlook our own men, such as Dr. Smith, when they want to train men to steer the vessel. I think the next General Conference ought to let some of these connectional men go fishing. The declaration made by the committee on the soundness of the faith sounds like irony in view of the utterances of Dr. Bland; yet I understand those rank opinions are upheld by Dr. Shackford and Bishop Atkins and others. No wonder such intelligent and loyal laymen as Judge Hall, of Texas, and Mr. Laird, of West Virginia, whom I met at Bluefield, are alarmed. They well may be, for if Bland's views prevail, the Methodist Church is doomed.

I have traveled all over the United States, and as far as my knowledge goes, there is no equal stretch of country where one sees such glorious mountain scenery as on the Memphis special from Charlottesville, Va., all the way to Chattanooga, Tenn. It is a day-time ride, and every mile is full of beauty and grandeur, lofty mountains, rolling hills, wide meadows, rippling streams—a world of beauty to one who loves nature! We climb over the divide at Christiansburg; pass huge piles of pig iron at Pulaski; enjoy views of fat cattle around Wytheville; and all the time the mountains! Marion! Yes, fifty-odd years ago I slept one night with Bishop Doggett there. The mercury had dived below zero, and it was cold enough to make a Laplander shiver, and that bishop took all the cover. Like a goose, such was my regard for bishops in those days, that I lay there thinking, the bed is long enough, but the covering is narrower than two can wrap himself in it. That was before I caught a bishop with his coat off and saw he had no wings sprouting under it. I wouldn't do it now. I would nudge his episcopal ribs, and say, "Here, neighbor, divvy with that kiver"! O tempora! O mores!

Emory and Henry College! How beautiful the lawn, the trees, the green grass! How natural the brick houses near the railroad! Wiley lived in one, Longley in the other, Buchanan in the one further up the hill. The whole place is wreathed with blessed memories for me, more fragrant than the old-fashioned roses that used to grow in the yards, or the violets that sprinkled the lawn, and as evergreen as the cedars that send their roots among the rocks. This is the same steep grade the boys greased in revenge for the road refusing to stop certain trains on which they were accustomed to ride to Abingdon. Such snorting and blowing of whistles, for trains were backed up almost to Glade Springs, three miles away! No, I had nothing to do with it, except to laugh at the "cussin' engineers" while the performance lasted. It was effective. The road stopped the trains after that. I understand an "Institute" for Holston preachers was in session. I wonder if they had the Canadian faith-destroyer there to pull down what the fathers built.

Abingdon! They were mowing the grass on the campus of Martha Washington College. There is where I met her, my first sweetheart. She was teaching music in the college, and was as shy as a deer and as alluring as a nymph. We played croquet under those big trees. I cared nothing for the game, except that it let me be with her. How my heart almost jumped out of my mouth when she thoughtlessly admitted that she was "heart whole and fancy free!" I said to myself: "Hurrah, now we are in for a race!" And a race it was. She did not fall to the first proposal. She was a Virginia lady of the old South, with all its romance and sentiment, and a devout little Christian, to whom marriage was almost a sacrament. When she gave her heart and her hand it was for life. When the boys at Emory tricked me once, and made me miss the train, and went in troops themselves to the concert, I walked ten miles to hear her sing! It seemed but a few steps, and she amply compensated me by a long talk under the trees after the concert was over! She led me a race, sure as you live. But when I finally got her entangled in the nuptial noose, no conqueror ever captured a fairer prize. For thirteen years she sang to me her sweetest notes, making the whole pathway of life melodious, and strewing my way with the flowers of a wonderful, worshipful love. Her memory is blessed. It was the auroral time of life—morning was breaking; and to this day there hovers over all that region the mystic beauty of youth and love in its dewy freshness, and the very brooks that bubble over the rocks seem to sing to me the ballads she sang divinely, and I hear again in fancy "Annie Laurie," "Kathleen, Mavourneen," "Robin Adair," and "Within a Mile of Edinboro Toun." How wonderful! Thank God for the past, and for dear old Emory! I shiver when I think that the faith, resting on a divine revelation, that inspired the ideals that blossomed into such consummate experience, must wither under the blight of such infidelity as Dr. Bland propagated at Junaluska. It shall not with me!

God of our fathers, keep us true,
  And steadfast to our lastest breath;
That we, like Paul, may say at last,
  We kept this holy faith till death.
Faith of our fathers, holy faith.
  We cling to thee in life and death.

TO OUR PASTORS AND SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

Dear Sirs and Brothers: Our schools and colleges will open early in September, and we would take it as a kindness if you will drop either of us or Mrs. C. A. Bowen, superintendent of the young people and college department of the Galloway Memorial Sunday School, a card giving us the name of any party leaving your school or section, so that we may look them up immediately upon their arrival.

Thanking you in advance, we are,

Sincerely,
J. C. CAVETT AND W. E. MORSE,
Superintendents, Galloway Memorial Sunday School,
Jackson, Miss.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION MOVEMENT

HAS THE RIGHT OF WAY

August - September - October - November

The Committee authorized by the General Conference to harmonize and correlate the forward movements of the Church has given the CHRISTIAN EDUCATION MOVEMENT from August to November, inclusive, for cultivation and collection of pledges. During this period all the general organizations and public agencies of the Church will be mobilized in the interest of Christian Education.

THE BISHOPS

have issued a strong address to the Church and are leading in the work.

THE PRESIDING ELDERS

will co-operate and direct the work in the Districts. A live Presiding Elder brings things to pass.

THE PASTORS

will give the message to the people and guide the efforts in the local churches. The wise pastor believes in Christian Education and shows his faith by his work.

THE CHURCH COLLECTOR

has a place of great opportunity and responsibility. It is harvest time. He thrusts in the sickle and gathers the golden grain.

THE SUBSCRIBER

is the most important of all. Money talks, and he has the last word. If he fails the efforts of all others are futile. But a true Methodist will not fail. His word is out. He has promised. He will pay.

"AFTER CENTENARY" PLEDGES

Many subscribers made their pledges payable "after the Centenary." This means the payments will begin November 1st, 1923, since the last payment on the Centenary was due January 1, 1923.

"After the Centenary" means November 1, 1923.

CHECKS TO CLAIMANTS RETURNED UNCLAIMED.

On July 1, 1923, the Board of Finance made the 1923 pro rata distribution to all the claimants of the Church, the same representing the net income of $41,469.75 from the Superannuate Endowment Fund for the fiscal year which closed March 31, 1923. Any information that can be furnished the Board concerning the present addresses of the above-named claimants will be appreciated. They should have the money due them, which is represented in these unclaimed checks, and it cannot be paid until the correct addresses are in hand.

THE TUG OF A LONE WOMAN SHUT-IN.

About two years ago a letter was received from Mrs. Kate C. Shaw, 211 Walnut Street, Wilmington, N. C., in which was expressed the desire to do something practical for the benefit of the Superannuate Endowment Fund. The letter indicated that the writer was a shut-in and that whatever she did would have to be done through difficulties which surrounded her.

Mrs. Shaw called a number of her personal friends into council, and they decided that each one would attempt to raise a few dollars for the purpose stated, placing same in a savings box to be opened on the birthday of Mrs. Shaw. As a result, on Aug. 2, 1922, Mrs. Shaw sent to the Board a check for $52 for the fund. In the letter which accompanied this check she was radiant with enthusiasm at the success achieved by her efforts, but regretted she could not do more, stating: "It is hard to live and work when one-half of one's body is as dead and as lifeless and as helpless as if the whole were ready for the grave O, the pain and misery that I daily endure makes my spirit sink down! But I feed my soul on the rich promises that are in his Word, which manna sustains me from day to day. My pastor's secretary has promised to call the women of the church to meet at my home again, and I am going to ask them to help me in getting together a Christmas gift for our dear old heroes. I do hope they have become interested enough to do it all over again. I will do my best in writing to friends, soliciting them to help; and if I do not get but $10, that will be better than nothing."

On Dec. 26, 1922, Mrs. Shaw wrote another letter, in which she sent a check for $87 for the fund, the same being the Christmas gift alluded to in the foregoing. She wrote: "I wish I could send more, but for one in my condition I can only look to God and thank him for enabling me to do this much. He has done it. Not I. And I am thanking him for using me a little. The ladies met at my home yesterday, and after we counted our Christmas offering one of them proposed that we go on with the work. This made me very happy. Therefore we will have another opening of our boxes at the Eastertide. I may be in the hallelujah land at that time, but I assure you that if I leave this world others will come forward to help you in this great work. When you write please do not praise me more than you do the other women who are helping. I am afraid they will feel it. Encourage us all. We are just a few women who want to help you in the tremendous task which you have undertaken. When the time comes for the special effort to raise the ten million dollars, I feel that you are just as sure to carry it to successful issue as can be. I do hope the joy bells may ring for you their sweetest Christmas joys."

On April 24 Mrs. Shaw wrote again, sending a check for $55 for the Superannuate Endowment Fund.. She stated as follows: "The good ladies who are helping me with this work have unanimously decided to continue our efforts at least until my birthday, which is in August (should I live that long). So I can count on one more donation to send you. I hope the work will continue as long as I live. I try to make the meetings as pleasant and interesting as possible, and so far the ladies seem thoroughly to enjoy it. We have readings and singing, and anything I can find concerning our superannuates is read. I am doing all in my power to keep up the interest, and will continue to do so while I live."

It has not been my privilege to meet this saintly woman face to face. However, everything that she writes bears evidence that she is truly one of God's elect. If sweet-spirited and kind-hearted Mrs. Shaw, though a shut-in and a great sufferer, can find ways and means to assist the great cause of superannuate endowment, what should be done by thousands of women of the Church who are blessed with the best of health and strength? Sometimes I become discouraged under the strain of the heavy work upon me, but then it is I think of letters such as those quoted above received from Mrs. Shaw, and I am ashamed of myself and determine to go forward with greater enthusiasm than ever. God bless this good woman, make his face to shine upon her, and give her peace. She is giving her last strength to the promotion of a cause which will erect for her a monument more lasting than the chiseled granite. I trust that many lovers of the superannuate cause will write her a letter of appreciation. Such expressions of love and gratitude would be to her like the music of springtime.

FROM THE WILDS OF CENTRAL AFRICA.

On July 25 a letter was received from the Board of Missions with a check for $40 for the Superannuate Endowment Fund, the same being sent by order of Rev. E. B. Stilz, missionary. I wrote Rev. W. M. Cassetty, Jr., Acting Treasurer of the Board of Missions, requesting the details concerning this contribution and asking for a copy of the letter sent by Brother Stilz to the Board of Missions when he directed that this $40 be paid to the Board of Finance for superannuate endowment. Brother Cassetty replied promptly as follows "This amount ($40) sent at the request of Brother Stilz was on one of our regular 'order for payment blanks.' On this order he makes no explanations; merely instructs us to send $40 to your Board and deduct from his salary. He is a missionary in Lusambo, Sankura District, Congo Belge, Central Africa, and his salary is $770 per annum."

My purpose in calling attention to the above is that the readers of this page may appreciate how far the interest in the cause of superannuate endowment is reaching. There has never been an appeal made to the Church for any purpose that has received a more emphatic and universal response than the cause of the "forgotten man" is receiving. Little children, invalid men and women, preachers on scant salaries, missionaries—all, of every hard condition thinkable, are already responding out of their hard situations in a spirit of sacrifice. The interest in this cause even now so manifest and from such sources should shame the thousands of our people who are better situated into doing for the "forgotten man" something that will forever relieve his necessities and let him spend his last days in comfort and in peace.

So far as I am concerned, I am wholly committed to carry on what has been begun by the Board of Finance with every bit of nerve and force and endurance given me until my Church shall be acclaimed by all the world as being just to those whom she has used in achieving her greatness. Will you, dear reader, make solemn covenant with me to do likewise?

THE BLOSSOMING.

By Lilian Leveridge.

So many lovely things I've tried to do,
But failed, alas! to make the dream come true.
In many a race I've fallen far behind,
And heard the victor's shout ring down the wind.
I've seen my shining castles sink and fall
And leave upon the air no trace at all.

But this one thing I have with joy achieved
Beyond the dream my budding hopes believed:
I've placed a tiny seed within the earth
And seen the living atom spring to birth,
A growing thing, a promise of delight,
A touch, a token of the Infinite.

I've daily nurtured it with loving care
And watched it grow more vigorous and fair.
Its fairy buds unfolding made me glad;
"'Tis scarce worth while," they whispered, "to be sad."
Now joy out-breathes from every starry bloom
That fills the air with delicate perfume.

In dewy dawns they smile up from the sod,
And seems to say, "Good-morning, child of God!
You in your way and I in mine may bring
Some thought to his sweetest blossoming,
And he who paints the roses and the rue,
Whose love is life, has not forgotten you."

THE TWO PROCESSIONS.

By Eleanor W. F. Bates.

The sun shone in the east window and lay across the kitchen table, on which was an array of dishes. Mollie looked at the dishes, and a few tears came, but she wiped them away quickly when she heard a knock at the door.

She opened the door saying, "Oh, Dora, I was just wishing you would come!"

"I came to get you to go to see the procession," said Dora, who was Mollie's dearest friend.

"I can't," said Mollie sadly. "I want to ever so much, but I've got all these dishes to do. Just look! See how many there are!"

"I should think there must be four times as many as we had," said Dora with surprise. "But your family is bigger than ours."

"That isn't the only reason," said Mollie. "We had five extra people to breakfast, because the lady across the way was sick, and mother invited them all over here, and then she went back with them to help them a little, and—and—she said I was big enough to wash dishes once in a while alone!"

Mollie could not help sniffling a little, but she bravely stopped a sob, which she was afraid was really going to have its own way, and added, "Of course I've seen the Boy Scouts' procession before, but not since Billy joined, and I do want to see my brother march!"

"Well, they haven't started yet, and maybe, if you let me help, we could get the dishes done before the procession gets by."

"It would be something just to see the tail end of it," sighed Mollie, "but Billy's in the front rank!"

The girls flew to work. Mollie stirred up a big pan of suds and put another of hot water beside the drainer, then handed some towels to Dora.

"This is tho glass-towel," she said, "and here is another for the china."

"Oh, how pretty!" said Dora, looking at the towel she held in her hand. "Who marked this?"

"I did, for mother's birtdhay," said Mollie proudly. "I learned how at sewing school, and she was so surprised!"

The hot water and smooth towels made quick work, and the girls laughed and talked until piles of dishes showed the task finished.

"Now, where shall I put them?" asked Dora, some cups in each hand.

"Mother told me to leave them on the dining-room table, because I am not tall enough to put them on the shelves."

They began to carry them carefully into the next room.

"Oh, see this pretty spoon!"

"That's mine," said Mollie.

"And this one?"

"That was Billy's when he was a baby."

"Then they shall lead the dishes," said Dora. "Oh, Mollie, let's make a procession of them! There's a pile of knives, they are nice, straight soldiers, and here are lots of forks—they're soldiers, too, only in different uniforms."

"And here's father and mother," gleefully continued Mollie, placing two tablespoons to the right and left. "But where's the band?"

"There's the drum," chuckled Dora, putting the little round silver sugar bowl down, "and here are the drumsticks," adding the sugar tongs.

"Well, let's not have any band except a drum corps," and Mollie with much laughter put all the napkin rings right behind the sugar bowl. "There!" she cried. "I don't know how many drums there are in a drum corps, but this is all right for our procession, anyway!"

"And these two little platters just alike shall be ambulances at the rear, in case any soldier is too old or tired to march very long."

"Yes, but what shall we do for flags?"

"There they are!" and Dora caught up the towel that Mollie had marked, waving it over her head. Mollie took another, and they began marching around the table, singing, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home."

They laughed so much that they did not at first see a lady come to the dining-room door. When they did, she was laughing, too.

"This is our procession, mother!" cried Mollie.

"The Boy Scouts' procession is coming down the street," said the lady, "and you and Dora have just time to see it before it turns the corner. Hurry up!"—Zion's Herald.

PLEASING OTHERS.

"Dad," called Mary, bursting into the house, "can I go out with Mollie Jones on Sunday? She's going to have tea with her brother, who's married, and we'll have lots of fun."

Daddy looked up from his book, and said very gravely: "Well, dear, you may go if you wish, but it would please me much more if you went to Sunday school with Betty Smith."

"Why couldn't daddy say 'Yes' straight out?" thought Mary. Anyway, she would go with Mollie.

At last Sunday came, and Mary was delighted to think of the good time she was going to have.

"Well, little one," said daddy, as he kissed her good morning, "have you decided where you are going to-day?"

Then somehow Mary felt very queer inside and wanted to cry, and suddenly she couldn't bear to tell daddy she was going with Mollie. She just stood for a minute trying not to cry, and then she flung her arms around daddy's neck, and said bravely, "I'm going to Sunday school," and daddy hugged her very hard.

It was wonderful how happy she felt all through breakfast.

When they had finished breakfast, mother said: "O, Mary, wouldn't you like to bring Betty home to tea? There's a very special cake."

It was such a happy Sunday, after all, and when Mary went to bed she thought to herself: "Why, it's much more fun pleasing people you love than just pleasing yourself all the time. I don't believe I ever knew that before, but I'm going to try to keep on pleasing others."—L. Ladyman.

BE THE BEST OF WHATEVER YOU ARE.

If you can't be a pine on the top of the hill,
Be a scrub in the valley, but be
The best little scrub at the side of the hill;
Be a bush if you can't be a tree.

If you can't be a bush, be a bit of the grass,
Some highway the happier make;
If you can't be a muskie, then just be a bass,
But the liveliest bass in the lake.

We can't all be captains; we've got to be crew;
There's something for all of us here.
There's big work to do and there's lesser to do,
And the task we must do is the near.

If you can't be a highway, then just be a trail;
If you can't be the sun, be a star.
It isn't by size that you win or you fail—
Be the best of whatever you are.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. P. H. Howse, of Silver Creek, Miss., reports steady progress on his charge.

Rev. D. L. Griffin requests us to say that he will have some open dates after Sept. 11 for evangelistic work. His address is Shreveport, La., R. F. D. 1, Box 155.

Due to the fact that Labor Day—last Monday—was a legal holiday and no mail was delivered, it is probable that some items intended for this issue of the Advocate failed to reach the office.

Rev. George Tucker, one of our general evangelists, will begin a meeting at West Monroe, La., on Sept. 9, and continue until Sept. 23. Rev. J. Lambuth Evans is the Methodist pastor at West Monroe.

Of the recent Macmillan book, "The Jesus of Our Fathers," by Dr. John W. Good, Bishop W. A. Candler says: "It is a capital book, and I am taking occasion to commend it on all suitable occasions."

The Donaldsonville (La.) Chief gives a full account, in its issue of Aug. 25, of the wedding of Miss Lillith Lelane Hines and Mr. Gordon Gisclard, Miss Hines being the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. H. B. Hines, of Plaquemine.

Rev. W. M. Nelson, of Holly Springs, Miss., a senior at Millsaps College, preached at his home church at the 11 o'clock hour on Sunday, Aug. 19. Brother Nelson expects to apply for admission on trial when he finishes at Millsaps.

Dr. H. F. Cope, General Secretary of the Religious Education Council, died on Aug. 4. His writings on religious education had a wide reading. He was one of the lecturers at the Seashore Divinity School several years ago.

Rev. F. N. Sweeney has just closed a good meeting at Varnado, La., in which he was assisted by Rev. D. L. Griffin. There were 12 additions to the membership of the church—10 on profession of faith. Several family altars were established, a prayer meeting was organized, and quite a number promised to become tithers.

At the regular summer meeting of the Executive Committee of the General Sunday School Board, held on Aug. 8, action was taken requesting the General Secretary, Dr. J. W. Shackford, and the Director of Training Work, Mr. L. F. Sensabaugh, to report fully to the Board at its next meeting concerning the situation resulting from the lectures delivered at Lake Junaluska by Dr. Bland.

The Board of Church Extension receives many contributions to the funds administered by it, but it reports one recently of an unusual kind. A minister, seventy-four years of age, sent the Board jewelry and diamonds at an estimated value of $3,000, with the request that they be sold and added to the Church Extension funds.

Rev. W. L. Hannah, a local preacher of the Holly Springs Methodist Church, North Mississippi Conference, assisted the pastor, Rev. W. R. Lott, in a meeting at Pine Mountain church on that charge. Brother Hannah will enter Millsaps College this fall. For ten years he has been a railroad man, but he feels impressed to give his life to God in the ministry.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, and family, of Shreveport, La., who had planned to spend the vacation season at Mount Sequoyah, were compelled to return home after having been at the Mountain only two days, on account of the illness of their daughter, Margaret. She developed a case of typhoid fever, but it was mild, and we are glad to learn that she is able to sit up a little now.

One of the greatest disasters of history befell the Japanese cities of Tokio and Yokohama on Saturday of last week, an earthquake, followed by a tidal wave, destroying 200,000 lives, according to the best information available, and practically wrecking those great cities. The civilized world sympathises with Japan in its sorrow. The Red Cross and other agencies will render all aid possible.

THE SEASHORE CAMP GROUNDS—SOME REMINISCENCES.

By Payton A. Sowell.

In 1885 it appears certain that the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held at the "Grounds" one of their official meetings.

Rev. Sam P. Jones was at one of the camp meetings, and spent at least one Sunday. The time of his visit was 1886—thirty-seven years ago. How time flies! It appears but yesterday that this unique preacher—bold as a lion—went through the land as a prophet of righteousness. His ministry had a power over men. Men crowded the auditoriums to hear his excoriations, and by thousands they pledged to lead a new life. His converts were among men, rather than women and children. Some estimated that seven thousand people were on the grounds the Sunday Jones preached; at any rate, that Sunday marked "high water" in attendance in the fifty years of the history of the Camp Ground.

The trustees—in the first twenty years of the existence of the Camp Ground—charged an admission fee, even on Sundays, and there was then a fence around the tract south of the railroad, so it was possible to collect. When Sam Jones discovered this, he said "No, you cannot charge people a fee to hear me preach."

Among the "tent" owners in 1899—twenty-four years ago—were: J. A. Woodville, J. H. Larkin, Dr. E. F. Griffin, William Griffin, Mary Key, Kate Chapman, C. M. Bancroft, Rev. R. S. Isbell, Amanda Goodwyn, W. J. Hearin, Bishop John C. Keener, A. S. Daniel, Mrs. Zable, L. N. Dantzler, T. N. Pharr, W. W. Sutcliffe, Rev. Christian Keener, W. B. Thomson, Mrs. Meyer, W. J. Bentley, Rev. E. G. Hocutt, Misses Boss, and many others whose names I cannot well secure. There were supposed to be over one thousand of them. There are very few of these who own a cottage here now. Among the very, very early cottagers was Mrs. H. C. Swift, of New Orleans. She was the first to serve food on the Camp Ground, and fed thousands before eating places were opened. She was a happy Christian.

Rev. Dr. Featherstun, of the Mississippi Conference, prominent in all its affairs and a writer of pleasing style, tells me he has long been associated with the Camp Ground, and that at his first visit he brought his own tent with him and pitched it on the "grounds," and lived in it during the meeting. Dr. Featherstun says that for twelve or fifteen years in the '90s the Conference Epworth Leagues met for their annual conferences here. He has been identified with the undergraduates, and for years, now, he has been a teacher and lecturer before them, and at the Divinity School.

Rev. Dr. McNeill is the efficient Dean of the Divinity School, which for about fifteen years has met here. At these sessions, of ten or twelve days, the very best quality of religious, theological, intellectual, Biblical—and any other descriptive asked for if the very highest be named—is in the reach and use of the young preachers—and for preachers up to 100 years old. The men from the three patronizing Conferences are of the "best grade," who conduct these exercises and lectures. And one needs only to go back through the years of its existence and read the high names of those who have been on the programs, to know what the high standard has been—last year in the pulpit and lecture hours, such men as Drs. Carley, Shelton, and Bishop Candler. This year three bishops are announced to be present. And the years past have been blessed with that quality of men.

Everything stands in danger of a lull—even the ocean grows calm in a sense. So it is possible the Methodists will come to lose interest in the possibilities of the Camp Ground.

These grounds come to the church through a high "worshipful" privilege. We may think we no longer need them, but it may be we need them for that purpose, as much as ever we did. Once this "worshipful" occasion is thrown away or lost, there will be no other return of it. This "coast" is a far greater "arena" than any other section in the South. In the public schools and all, from Biloxi to and including even as far as Gulfport, there must be betwen three or four thousands of young people at school. Even the two young men's schools near Gulfport and the Camp Ground School must have in all over 500 pupils. The Old Soldiers' Home is here also, where there are more than 100 Confederate Veterans; then the United States has a Veterans' Hospital, where the world war invalids are treated. The McGhee School has a magnificent property. The Veterans' Hospital is likewise a magnificent property. The Seashore Camp Ground, by nature, surpasses them all for beauty of situation. No Methodist is wise when he touches to hurt any interest on this place. Some day, if the day is not allowed to be lost, Methodists will see again—and even in a wider vision—what Bishop Keener and the saints at New Orleans saw fifty years ago, in this spot as it then was covered with briers, and pathless. Sometimes people see not, because they do not look to see. The thirty miles involved in this coast country have nothing like it in the South in opportunity for some one in the next fifty years. Will the Methodists see it? An up-to-date church building is needed near the McGhee School—the General and Conference Boards of Church Extension could plant a "school church" there, if they purposed it, and 350 students could be impressed with our Methodist views for their lifetime. Some church will open its eyes to this picture. Will it be ours? Colonel Hardy has perhaps 200 pupils west of Gulfport. Colonels McGhee and Hardy began their work less than ten years ago here on the coast. When they began, about all their temporal assets were a few students that followed them from Columbia Military School, Tennessee. But brains and manhood, push and devotion to a high task, classes them as successful—two great properties and nearly 600 students. You could not even think of the "Old Camp Ground" without having to rise up before you that "great big face"—so "itself"—that anywhere you saw it you would have to look at it—John C. Keener.

If the principle of the modern radio operates to keep all that goes up into the spaces above going and going, then somewhere scores and scores of great sermons preached at the Camp Ground by our wonderful preachers are yet to be heard again. So it is written. "My Word shall not return unto me void," etc. And among those great sermons, many are up there, delivered by Bishop John Christian Keener. He was built to be strong. He was a great Southerner. Once he had views, he was slow to be moved. He never, or if ever, it was late in life—believed that "grape juice" was wine. Once at the Camp Ground, it was decided to use "unfermented wine" at communion; he could not change their plan, so that day he walked into the "woods to worship." He was honest, even to his own hurt. One Sunday, at a crucial stage of the camp meeting, it was put on him to preach. Movements had been discouraging. That hour he selected thirteen hymns—using three or four in the regular services. He took as his theme, "The rich man and Lazarus"—God's call to repentance from hell. He bent his powers of mind, heart, prayer and faith to this stupendous message. Finishing, he had a hymn and call, but no one came. An awful quiet rested on the vast audience. He appealed again and had the second hymn, and on and on until all the hymns except one had gone into use. Then pausing, as he seemed conscious of the tremendous hour, he said: "My friends, I feel this is the last offer some one here will ever have. I pledge you my word as a Christian and gentleman, if any one will come at this call they will be converted and prepared for any exigency. Now, while we sing this last hymn, if you will come, you will be saved—to-day—at this service. Sing! Who will come?" As the vast company sang, and hung on God, thirteen men from various sections of the audience came. And God's people carried their needs to God—and every one went away with "God's peace"—all thirteen! Do any of these live?

EDUCATIONAL NOTES, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

During the months of September, October and November will be a good time to pay up all past due pledges. We also wish to anticipate the third payment, which falls due on November 1, 1923.

Keep up to date with your Christian Education pledge. This is what you intend to do. Why not do it? It will bring joy and peace to your conscience.

Pledges were made in good faith. They are sacred trusts. The collateral put up was the moral worth of the individual. Among Methodists this counts for one hundred per cent.

Centenary College has a new building under construction. This will be quite an addition to the campus. The outlook is that the college will be full to overflowing.

Mansfield College, under the presidency of W. M. Bratton, will continue her good work. A full attendance is expected and a strong effort will be made to increase facilities to take care of more students.

Our Louisiana schools will have the largest attendance in their history. The religious atmosphere has never been better. It is a real joy to see the great forward movement in this most fruitful field of Christian Education.

Money spent in this endeavor is bringing the largest returns in a cultured and trained Christian manhood and womanhood. Every Methodist in the State ought gladly to take part in these great enterprises. Send on your liberal contribution, whether you have pledged or not. No shrinkage, but an increase in our subscriptions is what we need.

ALBERT S. LUTZ,
Conference Sec'y of Education.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Mr. President, I rise in my place to present some thoughts, which, under conditions now existent, I judge most worthy of our consideration. Men are now mightily concerned about the beginning of things. Life and its origin, the conception and virgin birth of the Christ, whence the authority and inspiration of Scripture, in short, the starting points, basis and birth of much now held by the church as a part at least of its doctrinal teachings. I read, reason, compare, much that is written; some I digest, some is indigestible; yet I remain unshaken in the faith, and preach the gospel of free grace and full salvation. But some man will say, What is the faith? Thou foolish one, except you know ere this time I fear I cannot tell you. Read what St. Paul said about "yea and nay" along in the first and second chapters of II Corinthians. If you can catch the positive note of his teachings just here, you will rejoice in spirit. The Corinth—things were things worth while. This is a marvelously busy old world. Men are concerned precious little about the discussions or differences on subjects foreign to their life and thought. The saving grace of our gospel is its great ethical, moral and spiritual values; and the application of these to life and destiny are the things that engage their attention. Polemics is one thing, preaching is another, the one is argumentative, discussive or even dogmatic; the other a message of life, reconciliation, glad tidings to the world-worn spirits of men. After all, people know little indeed concerning the origin of things. It is being more than beginning that is vital and important. I am losing no sleep on the "whence," but am wonderfully interested in the "here" and the "hereafter." These are enough to engage my thought and endeavor without puttering with unknown quantities. There is enough authority and inspiration in the Bible to last one for a lifetime of believing and preaching. Here faith can fold her pinions and rest secure under the shelter of the Rock of Ages.

• • •

And now I emphasize another train of thought, which may be useful and helpful to our commonwealth.

The greater part of all this sensational writing current in the secular press exerts a powerful influence on the minds of designing office-seekers and men who employ these reckless means for exciting people and selling newspapers. I am perfectly willing for my Roman Catholic and Jewish friends, as well as Protestants of evangelical faith, to organize all the societies, orders, lodges or what not, and wear all the regalia, masked or unmasked, they may wish or determine and not interfere the one with another. I am quite sure that the average citizen of this beloved country of ours is not thirsting for the gore or has any desire to hinder or make afraid other citizens because of diverse religious views. Some men should be compelled to make a thorough and exhaustive study of the Federal Constitution—that palladium of American liberty—before being allowed to edit, or even report for, the newspapers. We would then have less news and more sense. For to many people the newspaper is catechism, law, gospel. And when a leading writer arraigns a great State as a vile murderer, because a convicted criminal is executed, it's high time somebody was standing up and taking notice. How are we going to have life worth living without society, and how can you have society without law, and how can law be respected and its penalties carried out without authority, is the problem for these sages to solve. "We the people" means something in America; it means the State, or commonwealth; it means authority to protect society, to maintain and perpetuate our institutions, homes, churches, schools, with no man to hinder or make afraid, to grant other citizens all their privileges, and maintain our own; and so, by the grace of God, we will do this. And all this shouting and ranting to the contrary will fade and die like summer wavelets cast on beach of shell and sand.

If that wherein my hopes delight

TESTIMONIAL TO WHITWORTH COLLEGE FROM HON. D. W. BUFKIN, PROMINENT CITIZEN OF JACKSON, MISS.

Dear Dr. Cooper:

I expect to enter my niece September 12, as a student in Whitworth and therefore request that you reserve a room for her.

I feel sure that it would be impossible for me to place her where the Christian influence as well as the personal supervision would be better than under your care. It was my pleasure to send one of my sisters through Whitworth, and I feel sure that she is a much finer woman for having gone there.

Assuring you of my friendship for you and for those in charge of the College, I am

Yours,
D. W. BUFKIN.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, God, in his infinite wisdom, has taken unto himself our beloved friend and fellow-worker, MRS. MARTHA DAMON; and,

Whereas, she has been a charter member of this church, faithful in all things, abounding in love and good works; a life of service, pervaded by the spirit of Christ; and;

Whereas, she has been a member of this Society, serving in any capacity and at all times, being at one time our loved president; faithful in attendance and in giving and in prayers; a shining light for Jesus; and,

Whereas, as her last years of patient waiting have been a benediction to us all;

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we as a Society, and as individuals, are deeply grateful for this memory and are appreciative of these saintly qualities of hers, and shall cherish her memory as an impetus to go forward, emulating her gentle, beautiful life of usefulness.
2. That we assure the family of our heartfelt sympathy and our prayers.
3. That these resolutions be entered upon the minutes of this Society, a copy sent the bereaved family, and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA SHARES THE GRIEF OF AMERICA.

By Rev. J. L. Neill.

The tragic going of President Harding has shocked all of us. Regardless of our political affiliations or differences of opinion concerning world issues, we must recognize the calamity of such an experience at this time in the history of nations.

Yesterday afternoon (Aug. 7), a memorial service was held in his memory. This was held at 4 o'clock at St. Martin's in the Wall, an old church about which you no doubt have heard much, its history dating back to 1180. Instead of waiting, Mr. Lewis Einstein, American Minister to Czecho-Slovakia, urged that the service be held yesterday because of the difference in time. Unless the memorial had been set for that hour, it would have been impossible to hold an official memorial service here at the same time as the funeral service in America. In other words, it would have been delayed for many days. As arranged, the service was altogether official and held under the authority of the American Legation. The program was as follows:

Hymn No. 460, "Lead, Kindly Light."

Scripture reading (I Corinthians, 15), C. S. Winans, American Consul.

Prayer, J. L. Neill.

Condolence of President Masaryk and the Czech Government, John Masaryk.

Memorial address, Lewis Einstein, United States Minister to Czecho-Slovakia.

Hymn No. 744, "Crossing the Bar."

Benediction, Mr. Ray Legate, Budapest.

The music was furnished by a group of seventeen young American university students, with Mrs. Neill at the organ. These young men are in charge of Mr. Legate, of the European Student Relief, and are here on a tour of inspection and study. The entire service was not more than forty-five minutes in length. It was official in character in that it was announced by Mr. Einstein for the State Department, and the entire diplomatic and consular corps of Prague were present in their official capacity and full dress. It was really impressive. The house was filled to its capacity, even the gallery, and there were many American tourists present.

One of my friends stated some days ago that he was a hundred per cent American when he left home, but that now he was a thousand per cent. I do not think a thousand per cent could express my feeling toward America and her institutions. While we bemoan the going of President Harding, we rejoice that the man who takes his place is a man of simple democracy and thorough American tastes, whose ancestors helped to make the moral fabric of our nation. We feel here in Czecho-Slovakia that the reins of government have been placed in steady hands and have no doubt of the future.

FROM THE BOYCE CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: Just a few words for the Advocate concerning my charge: Last Sunday night we closed a week's meeting at Hemphill. Rev. H. W. Cudd, our pastor at Waterproof, was to have done the preaching; but, owing to sickness in his family, he couldn't come. Therefore, it devolved upon the pastor to do the preaching. The results were not what we desired, but we believe some lasting good was accomplished.

We are to begin a revival meeting here at Boyce next Sunday. Rev. Oscar Sauden, evangelist, is to do the preaching. Rev. C. K. Smith, of Pinville, will be in charge of the music.

Upon the whole, we expect to close out the year's work with a good report.

Yours in His service,
E. L. CARGILL, P. C.

EMBRYOLOGY.

By Rev. H. W. Rickey.

Facts persist; theories perish.

The provokingly unreasonable facts are the slaughter-houses of hypotheses.

The Apists rely on embryology to bolster up their grotesque fable of their descent from booming baboons. These Apists have no pride of ancestors and no hope for their posterity. They possess illogical minds, because they adhere to assumptions, assertions, hallucinations, guesses, as if fictions were science. Few of them know logic so as to teach science in a verified way. Science is not guessing.

It is a fact that man starts out on his checkered career as a fertilized egg, this side of visibility. It is another fact that the embryos of man and fish look alike. The Apist argues or jumps to an abrupt conclusion; therefore, the adult man and matured fish had a common ancestor or origin.

Logic arranges the same facts into an opposite proposition, viz.: the adult man, the full grown fish are enormously unlike; therefore, the embryos are inherently different; and therefore, neither man nor fish had a common forbear.

Their respective embryos are no more duplicates of each other than are the completed adults. The man and the fish are as isolated as the eggs. There is no proof that once they historically diverged from each other by means of a composite ancestor. One would be as great a miracle as the other, because "like begets like."

The Apists assert that the inside natural history of the embryo copies the outside ages-long descent in a serial line from a common progenitor. How do they know what the ancestral series was? What proof do they offer? It must be first demonstrated what the correct and actual transmutations were before there is certitude as to what the epitome is. The gill-arches of fish and man are as unlike, for the same reasons as the fish and man are. Points of resemblance are not proofs of descent. The white man is not a descendant of the negro. They were functional, temporarily, in the Red River of Life, only scaffolding in the architectural plan, later absorbed for other uses, leading up to the noble temple of the human body.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE
Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?
Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

A SCHOOL GIRL'S SUCCESS

Everything Depends upon her Health

Mrs. George E. Whitacre Tells of her Daughter's Breakdown and How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Her a Healthy, Happy, Strong Girl

Every mother possesses information of vital importance to her young daughter, and the responsibility for her future is largely in her hands.

When a school girl's thoughts become sluggish, when she suffers the consequences of wet feet, pain, headaches, fainting spells, loss of sleep and appetite, and is irregular, her mother should have a thought for her physical condition and try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which has proved a reliable aid to nature for just such conditions in so many cases.

This Mother Writes:

Mahoningtown, Pa.—"I would like to say a few words about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. About a year ago I thought it would be necessary for me to take my daughter out of school. She was losing weight, was nervous, and when she would come home from school she would drop into a chair and cry, and say, 'Mamma, I don't believe I can go to school another day!' I gave her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now she is a healthy, happy, hearty, strong girl and weighs 120 pounds. She has no difficulty in doing her 'gym' work, and she works at home every night and morning, too. I am a mother who can certainly praise your medicine, and if it will be of any benefit you may use this letter as a reference."—Mrs. GEORGE E. WHITACRE, 621 W. Madison Avenue, Mahoningtown, Pa.

Every girl ought to be healthy and strong, and every mother wants her daughter to do well in school and to enjoy herself at other times.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine for young women just entering womanhood. Mothers can depend upon it. It is prepared from roots and herbs, contains nothing harmful, and has great power to tone up and strengthen the system, so it will work in a healthy and normal manner.

For nearly fifty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been used by women of all ages, and these women know its great value. Let it help your daughter and yourself.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent you free upon request. Write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Massachusetts.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis Miss.

Write to Lamar & Barton, Nashville, Tenn., for Promotion Day programs, and for Rally Day programs. Get ready to put the summer vacation people to work as soon as possible. Vacation with some people means dissipation.

The Booneville Training School has enrolled more than a hundred. We have eight or ten young men from the circuits taking work. This school affords the most encouraging experience of the year. Fifteen or twenty people have brought about this splendid success. One of the most unorthodox and hurtful acts I know of is to permit our teachers to continue in ignorance of the principles of teaching religion. A full report of this school will be given next week.

We are expecting a visit from Marie Parham, assistant to Miss Kennedy, the last week in September. Any district that would like to have a meeting of teachers who deal with children under twelve years of age may have her services if you want them.

ACTION OF THE GENERAL SUNRAY SCHOOL BOARD AS TO INCREASING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ENROLLMENT.

The Board gave its approval to the following suggestions relating to the building up of an increased enrollment in our Sunday schools:

1. That on Promotion and Training Day special emphasis should be given to the strengthening of the school organization with a view to being ready to receive new members in the succeeding weeks.
2. That Rally Day be devoted especially to the re-enlistment and quickening of the Sunday school membership.
3. That following Rally Day special effort should be made to increase the enrollment of the Sunday schools through carefully directed plans.
4. That in all plans for securing new members high-pressure contests and spasmodic efforts, which merely look toward numbers as an end rather than as a beginning, should be avoided, and that in plans for such ingathering care should be given to the assimilation of new members into vital relations with the class and Sunday school work and also to any needed follow-up work for holding new members.
5. That the following practical helps may very well be included in a constructive membership campaign:

(1) A religious census urged in every community for the purpose of securing definite information.

(2) The distribution of leaflet literature setting forth facts and giving suggestions as to procedure.

(3) The fixing of approximate dates for the special campaign to close, such as January 1.

(4) Connecting the campaign consciously with the evangelistic effort to follow during the early months of 1924.

Multitudes of children and youth are without religious training. Let us seek them out and bring them in and win them for Christ.

"We cannot save the people unless we teach them, and we cannot teach them unless we reach them."

Don't Lose Sight of the Food Value of Your Bakings

Plain flour has a large amount of food value but it must be combined with good baking powder in order to retain this value.

Most self rising flours are not successful because they do not and cannot raise the bakings to the proper lightness. This means a certain loss of nutrition because they are heavy and hard to digest.

Every time you eat food that does not properly digest you do not get the full nutritional value—you are over-taxing your stomach. Nourishing and perfect bakings are what good health demands. The one sure way is—use pure flour and good baking powder.

If you want to find what thousands of housewives have learned—make some biscuits with self-rising flour—then make some with good plain flour and Calumet Baking Powder—notice the great difference. One trial will satisfy you. Your health demands that you make the experiment.

Those who know—millions of housewives, domestic science teachers, big hotels, restaurants, bakeries and railroads will not use anything but Calumet, the Economy Baking Powder.

Play safe—use Calumet and plain flour. It is the most economical and satisfactory, where light, wholesome and pure foods are desired.

FROM TICKFAW MISSION.

Dear Mr. Editor: On Saturday night before the third Sunday in this month, we began our meeting at Pine Ridge church, the writer holding the fort until Sunday, at 11 a.m. We looked, and behold a man appeared at the front door of the church named Cain; after inviting him to the front we found him to be Rev. L. W. Cain, pastor of the Methodist church at Franklinton, La. We asked him to preach; and he did it to the delight of the people, one and all.

We closed the meeting Thursday night, with four accessions to the church. Brother Cain's preaching was the pure gospel. I can recommend him to all who may need a good preacher and safe man in a meeting.

We shall hold our meeting at Pipkins on the third Sunday in September; at Tickfaw on the fifth Sunday; at Tangipahoa, the fourth Sunday in October. Rev. J. T. McVey will assist at Pipkins, Rev. F. N. Sweeney at Tickfaw, and somo one else at Tangipahoa.

CITY MISSION CONFERENCE,

Eastern Division.

The Regional Conference on City Mission Work, composed of representatives from the Department of Woman's Work, from the Woman's Missionary Council, and from the City Mission Boards, with a goodly group of deaconesses and home missionaries, met at Lake Junaluska on July 25th and 26th. Between fifty and sixty accredited delegates were present. The morning devotional services were led by Dr. Paul Kern, from the Theological Department of Southern Methodist University, at which time he gave the Bible lesson, leading the thoughts of the Conference along the lines of the sources of inspiration for Christian service. At the Wednesday night service Dr. W. J. Young, of Emory University, spoke on the Home Mission Task out of the fullness of his own rich experience as student of the times, as a teacher and city pastor.

The program was carried out that was suggested by the Committee on Program apointed at the last session of the Woman's Missionary Council. The discussions were illuminating and entered into with interest and enthusiasm. The specific results, apart from the impartation of sympathetic unity of thought in the achieving of the Great Task, were set forth by the Committee on Findings, whose report with all recommendations presented, was adopted by the body.

One of the recommendations of this Committee resulted in the organization of the City Boards into a permanent Conference to hold annual meetings to promote fellowship among those engaged in a common task, and to develop the educational aspects of city mission work. For the coming year, Mrs. J. N. McEachern, Vice President of the City Mission Board of Atlanta, Ga., was elected President; Mr. H. F. Foster, President of the City Mission Board of New Orleans, La., Secretary.

Western Division.

The Regional Conference of City Mission Boards for the Western Section of our church was held at Mt. Sequoyah, June 12th and 13th. Mrs. Fred Lamb, of Kansas City, was elected chairman of the Conference and presided during the meeting. Although the attendance was not large, the interest and enthusiasm were of the highest order. In addition to the reports given by the several city mission boards' representatives, many vital topics were discussed. The scope of city mission work, the organization of city mission boards, and the outline plans of city mission work which included the day nursery, kindergarten, clubs for boys and girls, mothers' clubs, clinics, etc., were presented with many practical suggestions for the promotion of these activities. The Daily Vacation Bible School, Good Will Industries and other activities were considered, and those who were in attendance were unanimous in their judgment that a permanent organization was most desirable.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

New Orleans District.

This is to say that the New Orleans District hasn't died during the hot weather—no indeed, nothing like it. In fact, from reports from different Societies this has been a real active summer with most of them. Not a single Society (except the Y. P. and Jr.) has taken a recess. Of course, those who are accustomed to meet each week are not meeting so often and the ones who only meet monthly are continuing to do so. Several are holding their meetings in the mornings.

As regards the literature, I have had some complaint about the leaflets for leaders not being received by leaders early enough to be distributed to those in charge of the program. Mary Werlein Mission has asked for literature, saying they had received none. This is probably due to Miss Mary's being out of the city. If you send the literature to Mrs. M. C. Daniel, 1457 Constance St., New Orleans, I will appreciate it.

Am sorry I didn't get you the minutes of our splendid District Meeting, but they were overlooked until too late. Dr. Drake was kind enough to give the women fifteen minutes (they both took twice that time) on each night program and who do you suppose arrived that very night? Well, I will tell you—our dearly beloved Mrs. McCoy, of Nashville, who spoke to the large congregation of men and women. She talked principally about our St. Mark's and our similar institutions. The second night our very own Mrs. Montgomery, who had just returned home from the Mission Board meeting in Nashville, told us about our wonderful new building and as much of that interesting meeting as it was possible for her to crowd in the time allotted her. The women of New Orleans churches were the co-hostesses with our workers at St. Marks and the Woman's Club room was the scene of two of the most delightful gatherings at the lunch and dinner hour. Fully two hundred were served at both meals.

Now about the "Doubling Up" Campaign. We will do our best and do hope each of my presidents will get right on to the job. Wish I had the gift that others have that I might obey orders from our Conference President, to send to you something SNAPPY. But all who know me, know I take mine out in talking.

Lovingly yours,
IOLA K. RUMPH.

"Doubling UP Campaign"

At the last Council meeting which was held in Mobile, it was decided that every Conference should be asked to put on a campaign for the doubling of membership.

When Council reports are read at the NEXT Council meeting, will the Louisiana Conference be at the top or at the bottom of the list?

Of course Louisiana WANTS to lead—

Of course Louisiana CAN lead,
WILL Louisiana lead?

The answering "yes" means work for every member of every auxiliary—

But, wo WANT to do it—
We can do it!
We will do it!

Begin by appointing a special "Doubling Up Campaign" Committee at your September meeting to plan your campaign.

Plan a big October meeting to launch your campaign.

Be sure to have your pastor at your October meeting, ready to tell you the number of women in your church—so you may KNOW your task. Have every old member present. Have every member responsible for at least ONE new member before Jan. 1st.

Are your young people organized?
How about your Juniors?

If you can't double your membership in your own church, how about organizing a NEW auxiliary in a noarby church? Or bringing to life one that is almost dead?

DO SOMETHING.

MRS. C. F. NIEBERGALL,
President.

MAGNETIC CHARM.

All in all, there was a wonderful magnetism in Jesus. Men found in him a certain charming simplicity. He was so free from ostentation and so lacking in imitation. They were not awed by his character so much as drawn by it. But the thing that impressed them through it all was the great cause which was clearly on his heart. Here was a young man who would inaugurate a new day for his people. In it his own share was to be that of a servant. For it he had a measure of devotion that was limited not even by his life. About such leadership there is a deathless quality. One of the astounding facts of history is that to-day the most hopeful single fact of life is the reality and power of this same leadership of Jesus.—Dr. E. A. Leslie.

BLUFF CREEK CAMP MEETING.

The Bluff Creek meeting closed Sunday night, Aug. 26, 1923, this being the thirty-third year since the founding of the Camp Ground. Rev. L. R. Sparks, of Franklin, La., was the leading preacher, and was assisted by Rev. J. W. Lee, the presiding elder, and several other pastors of different charges of the Conference, all of which was of high order. Brother Sparks is a forceful, clear-cut gospel preacher, and did splendid work. Rev. A. J. Martin, of St. Martinville, did double duty, leading the choir and preaching several times, also conducting the boys' meeting in the evening daily.

There was much good done—several conversions, many who promised to lead better lives, and the church in general was greatly revived and strengthened. Glory to His name.

"THE MINISTRY OF SUFFERING."

Dear Advocate: The New Orleans Christian Advocate has come into our parsonage home almost constantly since we came to the Louisiana Conference, in December, 1900. Every copy is good and encouraging—always brings a helpful message.

This week's copy had a message "just for me," entitled "The Ministry of Suffering."

I would not dare question God's goodness and wisdom, but the most severe test to my faith is: Why does the Great Physician permit his children to be in the ceaseless grip of pain which necessarily hinders them in the work they do dearly love—work they would and could do better if they were able?

For more than a quarter of a century my husband has patiently trudged along working in our Master's vineyard, burdened with a load of physical weakness and suffering. With tearful eyes I often cry out, "O God, why, why, why?" We could more nearly attain our cherished ideals if only this "thorn" could be removed. After reading the above mentioned article, I thought if David, Moses, James and Paul understood, why should I question?

Mr. Coburn has been dangerously ill for twenty-one days with an immense carbuncle on the back of his neck. For a few days the doctor gave little hope of recovery. Thank the Lord, the crisis has passed. If no complications set in, he will soon be out again. Our church gave him a vacation of the last two weeks of August. That time will expire and more before he will be able to preach again.

He held a meeting for our son at Fisher, on the Franklinton circuit, in July, with a few accessions; church somewhat revived. He held another at Sunny Hill, on the same circuit, the second week in August, until his illness compelled him to close. The church was greatly revived, and a church will be built at once.

Asking prayers of the Advocate.

Yours faithfully,

MRS. A. J. COBURN.

Kentwood, La.

"WE KNOW NOT WHAT WE SHOULD PRAY FOR AS WE OUGHT"—(Rom. 8:26.)

It was in Arkansas during a great open air meeting. There was great religious fervor. Many people, men, women and children, were repenting of their sins; God seemed graciously and consciously near. Many were almost or quite overcome with a great spiritual joy. Old-time hymns were sung with voices choked with great emotions. Strong men wept freely, and were not ashamed. Many smiled through their tears, with faces of peculiar radiance. It was a time of mingled emotions. Some were weeping, some were laughing, some doing both at once. A Sunday school teacher sat smiling through her falling tears as she exclaimed: "Thank God, the last member of my class has been saved and has given her heart to God!" She was simply wrapped up, almost to suffocation, as her class hung about her neck weeping and rejoicing with her that all the class were saved. The superintendent of the Sunday school and the teacher of the men's Bible class—a stalwart man of middle age and good reputation for devoutness and true piety, a man who could work at high tension and not break down—stood by in great earnestness and much joy as he said: "I believe there is not a member of our Sunday school eight years old that is not converted." The preacher said to him: "Brother, let's give God thanks—you lead us all in prayer." As the vast concourse knelt in prayer, this leader prayed thus: "Lord, we don't know how to pray as we ought, but we are very grateful, and very happy. We have seen our children giving their lives to thee, and thy rich blessings are poured out on our families and our neighbors. This is a good place and a good time. Now we want to give the praise and worship of our hearts to thee. And we want to make new vows and fix higher purposes in our lives, but we don't know what is always best for us. We do not know the rich stores of grace thou hast for us. Our appetites of hunger and thirst for righteousness are not equal to thy rich stores. We are overwhelmed with the small drippings of thy mercies and too easily filled by the crumbs from thy table. May thy Spirit come and enlarge our capacity and continue to pour thy greater blessings into our grateful hearts. Holy Spirit, help our infirmities, build up our enfeebled minds and hearts to greater capacity for these holy and good things which pass our knowledge or our thoughts till God may bless us even according to the fullness of his will. Make us strong in the Lord and in the power of his might."

When he had closed the prayer and arose to his feet, all the teachers of the Sunday school came to him rejoicing; and some proved the need of the things for which he had prayed, for they could neither speak nor stand; no one could sing. Some, like Peter on the Mount of Transfiguration, found their voices, but, like him, "did not know what they were talking about."

I like a meeting like that. Don't you?

FROM CALEDONIA, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley. Will you permit space for a brief account of the Caledonia charge? We have just finished our tri-revival campaign with splendid results. There were forty five additions to the church during the three revivals. The membership was really revived, and, as evidence of this fact, they subscribed the full amount on the Conference claims. The pastor visited each church in its turn and found very little handicap in that method. In this plan there are three chief advantages: first, the revivals can be held at the proper time; second, it saves time for the minister who has several churches, and, third, is the psychological effect of three congregations thinking about the same cause.

Brothers E. S. Lewis, A. S. Raper, and S. H. Caffey assisted in these revivals, and their service is very much appreciated by both pastor and people. These brethren offered their service free, but the people would not permit them to go away unrewarded.

FROM McCOOL, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Carrying out the suggestion of Bishop Ainsworth at the Missionary Conference at Jackson in January, we grouped three of our churches together and built an arbor at a central point and held a meeting, something on the style of the old-time camp meeting, holding three services a day. Brother McIlwain, our presiding elder, was with us for the opening service on the third Sunday, Aug. 19, staying with us till Tuesday afternoon. Brother S. H. Caffey, of Macon, came in for the night service Tuesday, staying with us till the close, Sunday night, Aug. 26, the meeting running through eight days.

We had a great meeting. The preaching throughout the meeting was plain, practical gospel truth—the kind that calls men to think and decide great questions. A number of people reconsecrated themselves to the Lord, and about thirty professed faith in Christ, fourteen joining the church—eleven joining the Methodist church and three going to the Baptist church.

GUY RAY, P. C.

GREAT MEETING AT SHILOH CAMP GROUND.

One of the greatest revivals in the history of the old Shiloh Camp Ground, located seven miles south of Pelahatchie, will come to a close Sunday night. The pastor, Rev. Paul H. Grice, was fortunate to secure the evangelistic team of General Evangelist J. O. Hanes and his co-worker, Mr. W. G. Waltermire, for the camp meeting, and they both proved themselves to be as well adapted there as in the largest churches in our connection.

First of all, and a splendid sign of success, the people were praying for and expecting a great revival; and, second, Evangelist Hanes is one of our preachers who has great faith in God and is one of the most adaptable men in his style of preaching for revival work in the church. He preaches a plain, simple, forceful gospel, denounces sin in all its phases, but so earnestly and tenderly upholds the Christ as the only means of salvation, that his appeals are almost irresistible.

As more than 100 conversions and reclamations have been had up to Friday night, of men, women and young people around the old-time altar, it is evident that the old-time altar is still a very live medium by which people can come before God and pray through to salvation.

Mr. W. G. Waltermire, of Peoria, Ill., who has traveled with Mr. Hanes for more than ten years as soloist, song leader and personal worker, is wonderfully gifted in all these lines. He is most valuable in each line of his work, and is so genuinely consecrated that he wins great favor with every one he comes in contact with. Enough words of commendation cannot be said of this great team of evangelists, but it can be summed up by saying they are God's men, doing the work of God wherever they are needed.

The results of this camp meeting cannot be tabulated, but we are sure records have been made that will last throughout eternity. Our people are saved and happy, and are thanking God that Hanes and Waltermire came our way.

WHAT SHALL THE HARVEST BE?

The Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences in session at Crystal Springs and Water Valley, and later at the notable missionary and evangelistic conference held in Jackson, pledged themselves to a program of real progress. The months that followed have been brsy ones, and many are now asking anxiously about the harvest. Reports that are reaching me from every section indicate rare fidelity on the part of our preachers, and unusual activity on the part of both preachers and people. There is every reason to believe that the Annual Conference record will show a gracious result.

The remaining weeks, however, are crucial in their importance. In this short period a ripe harvest may be lost for lack of careful husbandry, and heroic endeavor may yet turn threatened disaster into a worthy achievement to the honor of God and his church. The time is short and none of it must be lost if we are to give a good account of our stewardship.

1. Let our revival campaigns be followed up with diligent endeavor to lead every person, who has manifested any serious impression, into open allegiance to Christ and his church. Such persons must not be forsaken when the revival campaign is over. Their souls are at stake; their interest, if not deepened, may be dissipated, never to return. Methodists must be faithful to the souls of men. The gleanings after the summer reaping may be as valuable as the original harvest. And nothing can be more important than to nurture and build up all new converts in the faith and enlist them in Christian service.

2. We have pledged our best for level columns of finance on all the regular claims. The result can be achieved, even against great odds, almost anywhere. Reports from every district indicate a purpose to reach the goal. The fall is peculiarly our harvest season, and the claims of the church must be met now or never. The first fruits beleng to God, and the church should not wait for what is left after other obligations have been met. Let the pastor and stewards and godly men and women meet early in every charge and pray through and plan out a successful close of all finances for the honor of God's house.

3. Special emphasis must be laid upon the collection of our Centenary and Christian Education pledges in every church. The fall months have been particularly set apart for bringing up all pledges that have been made to our great Christian Education Movement. We propose to make a clean sweep of everything that is due on these pledges this fall. Woodrow Wilson has lately said that our civilization is in grave jeopardy and that it will be lost unless every effort is put forth to save it spiritually. Essential among the important features of a saving program in our distracted country is the church's program of Christian Education. We must maintain our Christian schools at any sacrifice.

It would be unfair to say that every man who does not meet his financial obligations when they become due is dishonest. Many men who are honest are at times unable to meet their just debts. Such a person must be pitied rather than condemned. All such will meet their obligations at the earliest possible moment. Unfortunately, however, there are those who can meet every obligation, but are slow to do it. To repudiate or delay the payment of an obligation made to God and his church, where payment is possible, touches the deeps of dishonesty. We must all do our best to discharge these obligations without further delay.

Let all God's servants take the alarm they give and gird themselves for the final stretch! And may all who have gone forth bearing the precious seed of the Kingdom come again rejoicing at Gulfport and Greenville, bearing their sheaves with them!

W. N. AINSWORTH.

Macon, Ga.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE DISASTER IN JAPAN.

The daily newspapers have given such full reports of the earthquake that wrought such havoc in Tokio and Yokohama that probably all the readors of the Advocate are well informed concerning that calamity. We wonder if their information has led them to practical efforts to relieve the distress and suffering that are so acute now in Japan. The American Red Cross very promptly put in motion relief agencies, and the Board of Missions of our own church is appealing to our people for contributions to be forwarded to the stricken area. We believe a prompt response to the need of Japan by Christian America, especially by the churches of America, will be as fine demonstration of the meaning of Christianity as could be made to the Japanese. Prompt and generous assistance will, of course, win the gratitude of the Japanese people; let us hope and pray that it will incline them more and more to the gospel of Christ.

WHICH IS WORTH MORE?

There has recently been some discussion over the fact that in some places plasterers' wages are reported to be as much as $101 a week, while teachers and preachers get only about $40 a week. Some preachers and professional men have aroused bitter criticism on the part of their brethren because they became platerers for the sake of the higher pay. To us, the tragedy of the whole situation lies in the fact that any community anywhere should consider plastering walls to be worth more than preaching the gospel. People pay most for what they consider most valuable.

DR. SHACKFORD EXPLAINS.

In answer to the statement issued by Bishop James Cannon, Jr., concerning the lectures delivered by Dr. S. G. Bland at Junaluska Leadership Training School, Dr. John W. Shackford, General Secretary of the Sunday School Board, has issued a statement in which he and Mr. L. F. Sensabaugh, Director of Training Work, state their position in connection with the whole matter. Since we made mention in a recent issue of the Advocate of Bishop Cannon's criticism, quoting somewhat at length from his statement, in fairness to Dr. Shackford and Mr. Sensabaugh we give the salient points of their statement.

The statement begins with the quotation of many of the notes made by Dr. Shackford in preparation of the opening address of the Training School, which are given to indicate the position of the management before the lectures by Dr. Bland aroused criticism. We lack space to give all these notes, but we quote some of them, as follows:

"We are asked, what is the position of the school on the issues of the time? We believe that all religion is life and that our business is to co-operate with God, that there may be an ever enlargement in his people of the life revealed in His Son."

"We believe that the old theology has its service to render and we believe that the new has its service to render and we are not concerned with either as an end in itself."

"We are supremely concerned with this—that the best of the past and of the present shall be given to the new, rising generation."

"We are willing to leave many questions with the scientists and there is no conflict between science and religion. At most, all that scientists can really discover is God's truth and God's way of working. In the main, they have been servants of God, pulling aside the curtain and revealing God's work and nature to us."

"Let us welcome the truth from any quarter. Do not let us be disturbed, God is in His world and He has not given over the helm of His universe."

"The only faith that will stand the test of to-day and the future is: First, a faith that can stand the test of open-mindedness, recognizing all truth

BROTHER LIPSCOMB CONSTITUTES HIMSELF AND THE PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY JUDGES OF METHODIST ORTHODOXY.

By Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

I find in the New Orleans Christian Advocate of Aug. 30 a communication from the Rev. Thomas H. Lipscomb under the interesting title, "An Orthodox Reply to Bishop Mouzon." As some of the readers of the Advocate do not know Brother Lipscomb personally and have not become personally acquainted with me, it is possible that the article referred to may do some harm. Therefore, for the sake of the church which I love better than my life, I take time to set down a few things in this paper.

1. It will be remembered that this is the same Brother Lipscomb who some time ago brought accusations of "heresy" against certain distinguished brethren connected with one of the great institutions of the church. A telegram was read during the session of the General Conference meeting in Hot Springs (and that telegram may be seen printed in the Journal of the General Conference on page 151) declaring that those "charges are unjustifiable and absurd." Let me assure all good people that the present charges of "heresy" laid against me are equally "unjustifiable and absurd." Speaking of heresy reminds me of how, when a student once asked that distinguished exponent of New Testament Theology, Dr. James Denney, what a "heretic" meant in the verse, "A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition reject," that great teacher replied: "An obstinate, self-willed creature, with fads in doctrine or in morals." Dear brethren, believe me, whosoever else may be a "heretic," I am not that sort of creature.

2. Brother Lipscomb quotes at length a doctrinal deliverance issued by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, and then proceeds to ask where I stand on this Presbyterian statement of doctrine. Now I have great respect for the Presbyterians. May their tribe increase! But my dear brethren of the Presbyterian faith are not exactly the judges of Methodist orthodoxy —Brother Lipscomb, to the contrary, notwithstanding. But I will answer Brother Lipscomb plainly: Just in so far as the Presbyterian confession of faith agrees with our Methodist "present existing and established standards of doctrine," I fully agree with all my heart and mind—and no further.

3. Brother Lipscomb states that my recent addresses to the church written "ostensibly in emphasis upon Christian experience," were "obviously in protection of the modernists and in censure of the orthodox." That is to say, Brother Lipscomb deliberately charges me with insincerity and duplicity. If words have any meaning at all, that is what Brother Lipscomb says. It is to be hoped that already Brother Lipscomb is ashamed of himself for writing those words, and that he will hasten to withdraw them and make full and frank apology.

4. Brother Lipscomb garbles an important paragraph in one of my addresses, leaving out such parts of my exhortation as suit his purpose, and exhorts me as follows: "You propose a truce, yet ask one side only to stop fighting. Amazing!" "Amazing," indeed, that Brother Lipscomb could justify himself before his own conscience and the all-seeing eye of God, when he wrote that statement! Here, then, is exactly what I did write: "I express the grave fear that if this present agitation concerning orthodoxy and heresy continues, in which laymen often try to settle theological questions that have puzzled scholars for centuries, and preachers think to silence the scientists while themselves knowing nothing about the matters they discuss, and scientists who know little about the Bible and nothing about theology join in and add confusion to disorder— I say I am greatly afraid that if something is not done to stop this agitation multitudes will be driven into the camp of the 'liberalists' and some may be driven into actual infidelity." The candid reader will judge whether or not I called a "truce" and "then asked only one side to stop fighting." Dear Brother Lipscomb, how could you make such a statement? You should retract it and make ample and frank apology.

5. Brother Lipscomb is greatly distressed because I call attention to the fact that in recent days "a false note has been sounded in Methodism—a note which calls attention to things to be believed rather than a life in Christ to be lived." Let it be noted in passing that I said "a life in Christ." I am challenged—actually "challenged"—to "name a man or quote a line in proof thereof." Well, I could name many men and quote many lines. To begin with I would name the Rev. Thomas H. Lipscomb, and refer the reader to his article printed in the Aug. 30 issue of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. And if I wanted to, I could give the name of a man whom Brother Lipscomb knows quite well who said recently to a friend of mine: "I admit there are certain teachings in the New Testament that we must soft-pedal, the 'brotherhood of man,' for instance. But we must bear down hard on the doctrines." I will not enter again into the discussion of this matter, except to add that no one believes more fully than I that doctrine is directly related to life, and, therefore, if one is living an ungodly and unchristian life, there must be something wrong with his doctrine. The final test of doctrine is the kind of man it produces. Christianity is interested in making good men and good women. Jesus said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven." Something more than professed loyalty is needed; the life must be submitted to Christ in loving obedience.

In sending out my recent addresses to the church I was seeking to fulfill the solemn obligation I took when I promised before God and the church "with all faithful diligence to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's word." "Erroneous and strange doctrines" have crept up into Methodism contrary to the teachings of Wesley and our Methodist fathers, and contrary to God's word. I undertook to show, therefore, what the "fundamentals of Methodism are." These were found to be the following:

1. The Apostles' Creed, the one creed which we require upon the baptism of those who seek to come into our church—a creed which shows that we are true to early apostolic testimony;

2. The Twenty-five Articles of Religion, which show our historic connection with the great Protestant Reformation in England, and in harmony with which all our preachers and teachers must preach and teach;

3. The General Rules, which give us John Wesley's outline of Christian duty and set forth the "terms of membership" in the Methodist Church —terms which for their catholicity and for their emphasis on the ethical and spiritual rather than on the theological are the most distinguishing feature as they are the peculiar glory of Methodism. Concerning these "terms of membership" John Wesley wrote as late as eighteen months before his death: "I met the society, and explained at large the rise and nature of Methodism; and still aver, I have never read or heard of, neither in ancient or modern history, of any church which builds on so broad a foundation as the Methodists do; which requires of its members no conformity either in opinions or modes of worship, but barely this one thing, to fear God, and work righteousness";

4. A Gracious Experience of Personal Salvation. Out of this experience of personal salvation it was seen came the special complement of doctrines which Wesley used to speak of as "our doctrines," namely, (1) the Universality of the Atonement, (2) Salvation through faith in Jesus Christ, (3) the Witness of the Spirit, and (4) the Possibility of Christian Perfection.

These four—(the Apostles' Creed, the Twenty-five Articles, the General Rules, and a Conscious Experience of Religion)—are the "Fundamentals of Methodism." I have written, and I do now write, to call our people away from any false emphasis, and to urge that they study and teach and preach in harmony with the great doctrines and principles which have given Methodism her place of power in the world.

And I had, and do now have, one other object in view—namely, to call attention to the broad Catholic Spirit of Methodism. I remember how, when I was a boy preacher and read Wesley's sermons (standards and authoritative for Methodists) on "A Caution Against Bigotry" and "The Catholic Spirit," I said to my soul: "This is the kind of religion for me"; and in this Methodist presentation of the Christian faith I rejoice; yes, and I will rejoice. It is no time to insist on the non-essentials which divide. The solemn and crucial hour in which we live calls for insistence on the essentials which unite. And I call to my side all right-thinking and loyal Methodists who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and whose hearts bleed over a divided and discordant and sin-cursed world. In the name of the Christ who died of a broken heart and whose heart breaks now every day over the sin and sorrow of men; and for the sake of a world lost and ruined because it has turned away from its one and only hope, "the gospel of Jesus Christ" which is "the power of God unto salvation"—let us cease talking about the things that do not matter, and let us resolve with all the solemnity of an oath that we will exalt the things for which Christ died and for which our Methodist fathers gave their lives in the grand and heroic period of our history as a church.

Here, then, let us take our stand with John Wesley:

"The distinguishing marks of a Methodist are not his opinions of any sort. His assenting to this or that scheme of religion, his embracing any particular set of notions, his espousing the judgment of one man or another, are all quite wide of the point. Whosovere, therefore, imagines that a Methodist is a man of such or such opinion is grossly ignorant of the whole affair; he mistakes the truth totally. We believe, indeed, that 'all Scripture is given by inspiration of God'; and herein we are distinguished from Jews, Turks, and infidels. We believe the written word of God to be the only and sufficient rule both of Christian faith and practice; and herein we are fundamentally distinguished from those of the Romish Church. We believe Christ to be the eternal, supreme God; and herein we are distinguished from the Socinians and Arians. But as to all opinions which do not strike at the root of Christianity, we think and let think. So that, whatsoever they are, whether right or wrong, they are no distinguishing marks of a Methodist." (Wesley's "The Character of a Methodist.")

THE MOUNT OF VISION.

By Dr. A. C. Zumbrunnen, Home Cultivation Secretary.

This was the testimony of a large number of those who attended. There they saw the vision of the whole world's needs; our own church's obligations and opportunities concerning those needs and especially a vision of Him who alone is able to meet the world's needs, as great and numerous as they are even at this hour. Along with vision came consecration and resolution to do to the uttermost all that each one could to help Him speedily bring His social order upon the earth.

The attendance this year was most gratifying, being an increase of more than sixty per cent over that of last year, notwithstanding the school at Mount Sequoyah. Seventeen States and the District of Columbia were represented in the homeland, and nine out of our eleven foreign fields. It was a choice and representative group of mission leaders and workers. All came for study and counsel as to how to serve best and to make Christ real and vital in the affairs of the world to-day.

There were one hundred and twenty-three enrolled in the twelve courses offered in the field of Bible study; Methods, Philosophy, History and Social Aspects of Missions; and the several phases of missionary work and problems. The purpose of these ceurses was two—to give an opportunity for vital study of missionary conditions and problems, and training for missionary leadership in our church. This is one factor in the Home Cultivation Section of the Board of Missions' plan for creating a missionary consciousness on the part of our constituency necessary for our church to do its part in world evangelization and Christianization. A large and well-trained leadership is necessary for such a task. Such a leadership can be only had by pursuing a thorough course of training.

The morning meeting for conference and prayer was a new feature of the school and one of the most valuable ones. Each morning before the class room work began, thirty minutes were given over to conference and prayer regarding the imminent and vital needs of our several mission fields at home and abroad. Fortunately representatives from each field were present and spoke at first-hand regarding the conditions and needs of their respective fields. It gave opportunity for all the missionaries to know the workers in other fields, and to understand their problems. It also gave others in attendance acquaintance with all our fields and their needs. These meetings became spiritually dynamic. The Holy Spirit was evident and gave vision, resolution and courage to the large number who attended these meetings.

Another good feature was the conference with the missionaries themselves conducted by the two Foreign Secretaries, Foreign Work. This conference was not only attended by foreign missionaries, but also by those working in the home field. At this meeting vital matters were discussed. The missionaries were given opportunity to speak, and they did so freely. All sorts of problems were considered relative to the home church and the church in the foreign field. The whole gamut was run. While utmost frankness characterized the discussions, the finest spirit of concord prevailed, and all expressed their appreciation and helpfulness of these conferences. All understood the work of others better. All recognized that missions are one—home field, foreign field, city work, rural work—all are a part of missions, world evangelization and Christianization.

The missionaries added much to the interest of the school. They made a valuable contribution to it as well as being greatly helped by it. A reception was given in their honor at the Mission Building, which was one of the most delightful of all the meetings during the School. It gave the people at the Lake an opportunity to get personally acquainted with and express their interest in their representatives at home and abroad—around the world.

The platform addresses each evening were unusually good. Home and Foreign Secretaries spoke concerning work in their respective mission fields. Dr. John W. Laird, President of Albion College, Michigan, and Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, each delivered a series of inspirational addresses of the highest order. The closing service was the most impressive of all. After the presentation of the certificates of credit, the pageant, "The Striking of America's Hour," was presented. It presented in a striking way the failure of the great nations of history to meet the world's needs for brotherhood, and that it was now America's opportunity. Her hour had struck. She would have to meet the need for brotherhood, which could only be done by having the Christain spirit of brotherhood and giving it to the world. If she failed in this, she would pass as the other nations had. Missionaries and nationals from many of our fields had a prominent part in the pageant. It left a profound impression upon the audience.

The surprising thing about the School and conference was the unanimity of opinion that world evangelization and Christianization rested primarily with America at this time. This was expressed in the meetings for conference and prayer, in the missionary conferences, and in the platform addresses. Moreover, there was the same unanimity of opinion that the most important and first step in world evangelization and Christianization was the evangelization and Christianization of America. The program of the School had not been planned in advance to that end. It seemed to be the result of the Holy Spirit's leadership. Those present accepted it as the revelation of the way out of the present world situation into the one Jesus came to establish. With this profound impression, those who attended the School and conference returned to their respective fields of labor around the world with firm resolution to "prove themselves workmen who need not be ashamed" to labor together with Him to establish His Kingdom.

THE BOARD OF LAY ACTIVITIES AND THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION MOVEMENT.

By G. L. Morelock, General Secretary, Board of Lay Activities.

The success of the Christian Education Movement is not less vital to the interests of our church and the Kingdom of God than that of the Centenary. Both movements were providential and came as an expression of the deep concern of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the preservation of our Christian civilization and the salvation of a lost and ruined world.

The Christian Education Movement relates itself in a definite way to the whole program of the church—Evangelism, Missions, Sunday Schools, Social Service, etc. The great problem of the successful execution of any program is that of capable and efficient leadership. There are other considerations involved in the Christian Education Movement, because this movement relates itself to the whole problem of Religious Education in America, but the heart of the movement is just here—a program of Christian education that will give us the trained leadership necessary to carry on the work of the church. Our ministers, missionaries, and trained lay workers in the local churches in the past have come from our Christian colleges and schools. It is safe to conclude that they will come from this source in the future. The State colleges and universities are not furnishing them, and surely we have too much pride to expect our Baptist or Presbyterian brethren to do this for us. They couldn't if they would, and so we have no alternative. We must equip and endow our own institutions to do this work and render this necessary service. The work of our local church is dependent upon this. The larger program of our great connectionalism must come to a standstill without it. Hence there is nothing, absolutely nothing, before our church to-day more important than the Christian Education Movement.

It would be no exaggeration to say that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, needs to-day one hundred millon dollars for her universities, colleges and schools. The South has great resources and offers the greatest opportunity of any section of the United States at the present moment, and the tide of money and men is set in her direction. We have the purest Anglo-Saxon stock of people and have preserved the best traditions of our race. We have conserved the finest and best of a Christian civilization. It remains to be seen what we can and shall do in this new era of material prosperity into which we are just entering. I believe I voice the consensus of the religious thought of America when I say that we shall need to mobilize all the spiritual resources at our command to meet the new conditions and situations that are inevitable as the South develops in textile and other manufacturing industries. Nothing but a strong, aggressive, militant church can grapple with the situation and solve the problems that are even now pressing in upon us. If we are to meet these new conditions and solve these problems, we must have a trained, aggressive leadership capable of directing all the forces of the church in a program of a positive Christianity which can make the largest possible contributions to the needs of our South, our Nation, and the world of humanity. We must look to our own Christian colleges for this leadership. We cannot expect them from any other source.

Our obligation in the premises is plain and our duty clear. We must pay promptly our Christian Education pledges and seek by every means in our power to create a public sentiment on the question of Christian education that will secure large and small donations from time to time as the needs of our schools and colleges may demand.

The leaders of the Christian Education Movement, in their plans for carrying on, have thought it wise to place large responsibility upon the Board of Lay Activities and the Christian Education Committee of this Board for the collection of the pledges. My hope is that our response shall be in like measure to their judgment and confidence. I trust that every Board of Lay Activities and Christian Education Committee will respond whole-heartedly. I hope that no Board or individual will feel that there is any attempt upon the part of the educational leaders to make "a collection agency" out of the Board of Lay Acitivities, but they are asking us to assist in the completion of a great task which we ourselves as laymen helped to initiate. We have made the pledges to this Movement, and now there is a high obligation upon us to do all in our power to secure every dollar that was pledged. All of this is needed and more.

The Board of Lay Activities of each local church should exercise all possible diligence in organizing the Christian Education Committee and should insist that its major task during August, September, October and November is to assist the pastor and the local collector in their plans for the collection of the Christian Education pledges.

I would make three suggestions that seem to me to be practicable. First, in co-operation with the pastor, let the Christian Education Committee give one or two public programs on the subject of Christian education. The chairman of this committee should write to the Board of Education, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn., for literature and suggestions. The Board will co-operate promptly. Second, the largest possible use of lay speakers on this subject should be made in the local church and in rural charges. Third, the Christian Education Committee should organize teams in the local church that will assist the local collector in presenting the claims of this Movement to every subscriber.

A concerted effort upon the part of the pastor, the collector, the Board of Lay Activities, and the Christian Education Committee will surely secure the needed result. This is not a conjecture; it is a statement of fact taken from the field of actual experience.

May we not earnestly call upon every Conference, District, Associate District, Charge, and Church Lay Leader to do everything in his power to see that the program suggested above is carried out in every local church?

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT NOTES.

Alexandria is planning for a Standard Teacher-Training School to be held through the week of Oct. 1-5.

* * *

Rev. E. L. Cargill, of the Boyce charge, has recently held meetings at two points on his charge. He reports helpful meetings and that the pastor's salary is up to date.

* * *

Bunkie has good congregations and is successfully operating a transfer, bringing in people from the country to Sunday school and church.

* * *

Rev. L. E. Crooks is doing a good work on the Campti charge. Recently the presiding elder assisted him with a meeting at St. Maurice, one of the old country points of the Conference.

* * *

The new church at Coushatta is nearing completion. The congregation expects to be in it by some time during October. It will be a credit to our people there and to their pastor, Rev. Louis Hoffpauir.

* * *

Rev. W. S. Henry, of the Elizabeth circuit, took an automobile trip with his family to his old home in South Carolina this summer. He reports a most agreeable trip. He is doing a good work on this charge.

* * *

Glenmora recommended to the licensing committee for license to preach Brother Clarence White, president of their Epworth League. This young man was licensed by the committee on Sept. 4. His pastor reports that he gives promise of making a good preacher. He expects to complete his schooling and then go into the regular work.

* * *

Brother B. H. Sheppard, of Jena, has completed a nice home for himself in the town of Jena. He is comfortably located there now and says it is all paid for. He has many kind friends on his present charge and at other points where he has preached. This is particularly true of the people of Trout and Long Pine, where he served last year.

The work of the Jena and Jonesville charge is going along well. The people recognize that Brother Sheppard is hindered because of his health condition and are putting forth special efforts to keep the work going.

* * *

Brother F. P. Moss, from the Melder charge, reports good meetings held at two of his points, with many conversions and additions and also two men answering the call to preach. This is a mission charge in an important rural section. Brother Moss is giving full proof of his ministry there. He is a local supply.

* * *

Our work seems to be going along harmoniously at Natchitoches. A new roof has been put on the church this year, thus stopping up leaks that have been there for years and that were damaging the church building very much. A hopeful spirit prevails among the people at Natchitoches. Brother Rickey is abundant in his labors.

* * *

Mr. T. F. Glaze, superintendent of the Sunday school at Pineville, is doing a good work there. He reports activity in the different departments of the Sunday school. Brother C. K. Smith, of the Pineville church, is now giving a part of his time to working among the patients of the Veterans' Hospital near Pineville.

* * *

Trout and Good Pine have had a good meeting, under the leadership of Rev. W. D. Bass, of Mississippi. This meeting resulted in some thirty-odd additions to the church and also in an increased interest in the work of the church. On the night of the first Sunday in September the presiding elder preached to the largest congregation that he has yet seen in the church at Trout. The pastor and people report better congregations there. The third quarterly conference of the Trout and Good Pine charge recommended a candidate for license to preach

W. L. DOSS, JR., P. E.

NOTES FROM GREENVILLE DISTRICT.

Vacations may be of doubtful worth; they are certainly not without effect on the note-producing qualities found in the various charges. We are alive and at work, most of the pastors being actively engaged.

* * *

Dr. C. M. Chapman, Shelby, is back from an interrupted trip oveseas. He was critically ill in France, and his physician insisted on his return home as soon as he was able to travel. Talking with him, you would not suppose that so great a disappointment had overtaken him. "Richard is himself again," and he laughs heartily over the experience, and declares his intention to complete the trip later on .

* * *

A recent fourth quarterly conference at Dubbs, Evansville and Dubbs charge, was noteworthy in that they very nearly reported "everything in full," expressed not the slightest doubt of a full report a little later, have secured the lot and enterprised a four thousand dollar parsonage, and propose to sponsor an arrangement another year that will care for two mission points in adjacent territory. The spirit and enterprise of this people are worthy of all praise. Rev. J. J. Baird is in wonderfully good favor with all this people.

* * *

Tunica continues to grow in financial strength and vision. Rev. C. A. Parks is closing a quadrennium there, and they are ready to receive him with open arms another year. It is always a pleasure to visit this parsonage home and charge. The presiding elder is to be the guest of the Butlers, his last visit to Tunica for the Conference year, and looks forward with pleasure to a few hours in the home of this choice couple.

* * *

Rev. H. D. Suydam has given and continues to give full proof of his ministry. There has been no great increase in the membership of the Boyle circuit, but good meetings have been held, three new preaching places established, Sunday school work enterprised happily, and about the livest country League in the Conference is going good at Shipman's chapel.

* * *

Mrs. W. W. Mitchell, Cleveland, continues to improve. This splendid and justly popular woman has suffered uncomplainingly, waited patiently, even brought good cheer to others despite her own affliction. Her pastor-husband has continued his work despite the handicap, and is expecting to bring a creditable report to Conference. Cleveland Methodism will neither falter nor fail.

* * *

They are worshiping in the new church at Coahoma. It is a monument to the sticking qualities of Rev. Del Longgrear and the grit of a splendid constituency.

* * *

Suitable exercises marked the breaking of ground for the new church at Leland. It will be "the last word" in the matter of utility, and is being built with special reference to an ever-increasing Sunday school.

* * *

Walls, Lake Cormorant charge, will build a much needed church at the earliest possible date. Enterprising women are behind the enterprise, and Rev. J. B. Conner is the pastor. Mr. Frank Wall, Holly Springs, Miss., attended a recent quarterly conference there and donated the lot for the new church. Pews have already been bought and paid for. Think of it! They are being used in the present place of worship.

* * *

Just beginning the fourth round. Judging by reports to date, it will take more than weevils, worms and wet weather to dampen the ardor of this people. Greenville is beginning to think of homes for the approaching Conference. More anon.

JAMES H. FELTS, P. E.

NOTES FROM MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

The college will begin its thirty-second session on Wednesday, Sept. 12. A large attendance is expected, continuing the steady growth of the last few years.

There will be three new members of the faculty. Professor L. W. Summers has been elected to take the place as Associate Professor of Religious Education made vecant by the selection of Professor Ferguson as a secretary of the Sunday School Board. Professor Summers is a graduate of Clemson College and an M.A. graduate of the Candler School of Theology of Emory University. He has had graduate study at the University of Illinois, and has had a wide experience as a teacher, having been a member of the faculties of Auburn, Emory, and Agnes Scott Colleges.

The Chair of Education has been filled by the election of Olin E. McKnight, B.S. of Peabody Teachers' College, and M.A. in Education of Columbia University. Professor McKnight has recently been city superintendent in Delaware, where he was president of the State Teachers' Association. He has been Professor of Education in Birmingham Southern College and is very highly commended by those who know of his work.

Mr. V. B. Hathorn, a graduate of Millsaps in the class of 1915, who has since been in high school and academy work in Mississippi and Missouri with notable success, will be Assistant in English.

BARTAK FINDS THE PEOPLE EAGER FOR THE SCRIPTURES IN CZECHO-SLOVAKIA.

By Rev. J. L. Neill, Superintendent.

Our evangelistic work this summer is succeeding in a most remarkable way. In the beginning, we faced very serious difficulties. I am glad to report, however, that notwithstanding these difficulties, the success has been even better than last summer.

Brother Bartak has been in Jihlava for the past month holding daily services. Jihlava is a city of nearly thirty thousand people just across the boundary from Bohemia in Moravia. The special services will close next Sunday night. He has organized a splendid congregation in this old city. Mrs. Bartak has been with him, and though she stated that she could not play any musical instrument, she has developed into quite a good pianist. How I wish you could have been with us at two of their services! The service begins at seven-thirty. Brother Bartak teaches the people Gospel songs for the first hour. This is something entirely new to them. He then distributes free literature as follows: The General Rules and the Twenty-five Articles; Chapter V of the Methodist Armor, entitled, "Prominent Methodist Doctrines"; our Social Creed; a brief history of Methodism, by Brother Dohes, and several other leaflets of local interest. He then sells other books, among them our hymn book, the Methodist Armor and Testaments and Bibles. He is as good as an auctioneer when it comes to selling books. One night I saw him sell more than a hundred New Testaments in, it seems to me, less time than it takes me to write about it. After this performance, in which he gets the people into a good humor, if there are in the congregation any who have not been in this condition throughout the service, he speaks to the people on some great gospel theme. His addresses are usually about forty-five minutes long. After that, he exhorts some ten or fifteen minutes and also gives an opportunity for a definite decision for Christ. The congregation is then dismissed. Those who desire can stay and ask him questions, and those who wish to apply for membership in our church take this opportunity to fill out the necessary Government blanks. There is quite a bit of red tape connected with joining and unjoining the church. It is usually twelve o'clock before Brother Bartak goes to his room. The same things happen at practically every service with all of our men. I realize, however, the inadequacy of any description I can give. It must be seen to be appreciated.

Our Biblical Seminary will reopen about the first of October, and it will be necessary to do double the work this next session that we did during the last session. To date, I have employed only one additional faculty member, the Rev. Jindrich Schiller, pastor of the Moravian Church in Prague, and said to be one of the best scholars in the city. We are very fortunate in securing a man of Brother Schiller's training and experience to assist us during the coming year. He will give courses on Christian Doctrines, using our own textbooks required by the bishops in our Course of Study. Of course, his work has to be done in Czech, so you see the large task which lies before him.

We laid the corner-stone for our first church building two weeks ago. It was a wonderful service. We have a beautiful corner lot, and the streets around our building were jammed with an eager throng who never saw anything like this before. It was my hope to have four buildings completed this summer. It looks now as if we will not be able to complete any one of them, and that probably one will not be started, all due to red tape and slow movements and other things.

RUSTON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Because the conference planned to get out its minutes as a special paper and send it out generously, the report of the Ruston District Conference, held in Haynesville the first week in May, was never sent in to the Advocate. The plan failed and certain news items should appear.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: M. Brown, Homer; E. M. Decker, Farmerville; F. A. Hinton, Elmore; Mrs. J. F. Giles, Spring Hill; D. E. Baucum, Haynesville; J. F. Dring, L. P., Sibley; Judge J. E. Reynolds, Arcadia; and L. H. Green, Dubach. Grady Dawson, A. P. Railey, Mrs. C. H. Davidson, of Dubach, and J. A. Lowe, of Haynesville, were elected alternates.

Rev. J. F. Dring was recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial. Dubach was selected as the place of the next district conference.

A. J. GEARHEARD, Secretary.

HYPOCRITES.

By Rev. Edmund Thickstun, Author of "Adventures in Evangelism."

"Well, Mr. Green, I believe that you must at least admit that I am not a hypocrite."

"What makes you think that you are not a hypocrite?"

"In the first place, I don't belong to the church."

"Ah! Is it necessary, then, to join the church to be a hypocrite?"

"O, no, not exactly that. What I mean is, that by the very fact of church membership, one makes a great profession. Then a deviation from that profession is hypocrisy."

"Later on, I shall try to answer that argument. Now, what other reason have you for believing that you are not a hypocrite?"

"The way you speak, you seem to assume that I am one."

"And suppose that I should prove the assumption?"

"It would be a pretty hard strain on our friendship, but worse things have not broken it."

The Rev. Elijah Green and his friend, Dugald McKaye, a man about town, were in one of their numerous conversations about Dugald's life. Green had the trait of keeping a friend while he was telling him plain things about himself. He replied to the worldling's last remark:

"I have noted, Mr. McKaye, that you take the gaff like a game sport. I want you to summon all of your sportsmanlike qualities, for you will need them before we are through. Now give another reason for saying that you are not a hypocrite."

"Well, I'm just what I am; a good citizen."

"You are? Let me see; a good citizen will obey the laws, eh?"

"Most certainly."

"Now Dugald, at the risk of making you angry, I am going to talk to you like a Dutch uncle. You have deliberately broken the constitutional and statute law of your country and your State within the last hour." An angry flush mounted to McKaye's brow, but the minister hurriedly added: "I believed that you would get angry; but you must consider that you brought the accusation of hypocrisy against the church, of whose good fame I am jealous, and that you try to assert that you are no hypocrite, when I know that you are one. Come now, swallow your wrath, and listen calmly to me while I prove that you are a hypocrite."

"All right, Parson, go on and prove your charge."

"Very well; I am sure, by the smell of your breath that you have been drinking some sort of alcoholic liquor lately."

"Does my breath smell like liquor? Ha! ha! The joke's on me, Parson. I supposed that I had taken enough of a deodorizer to disguise the smell."

'You are an extremely good citizen! You break the Eighteenth Amendment and all of the prohibitory laws, and then you try to disguise the traces of your lawlessness by the use of a drug."

"That's pretty hard on me, Parson, but I guess it is true."

"Of course, it is true; and being true, it necessarily follows that you are a hypocrite. You say that you are a good citizen, but the evidence is right here on your person that you are a hypocrite. If, instead of illegally trafficking in liquor, you had broken into a house, and had the loot upon your person, and I had heard you say that you are a good citizen, and had then exposed the implements and spoils of your burglary, you would be only a hypocrite burglar, instead of a hypocrite whiskey drinker." The other man's face and neck were in a flame of blushes. He weakly replied:

"I consider the cases very different. Many of the most respectable people in town are drinking. The unprincipled fellows who sell us the stuff are pretty mean hypocrites, but I don't feel so awful mean."

"You say you are respectable, but you deal with unprincipled scoundrels to get liquor. And it goes without saying that these dealings are clandestine. You walk the streets with your head up, call yourself respectable, but have secret meetings with unprincipled scoundrels for the purpose of breaking the laws. They and you, together, break the laws. Say, old man, what do you suppose these fellows who furnish you the liquor would halt at, for money?"

"O, so far as that's concerned, most of them have been up for some crime."

"Is that so? Possibly they follow bootlegging because it seems an easier way of making money by breaking the laws, eh?"

"That's about the way of it."

"And you, a respectable man and a good citizen, help them to break the laws! You throw every impediment in the way of the officers of the law who may be trying to stop this lawlessness. More than that, by your lawlessness, of which they are fully cognizant, their lawlessness is increased. One of these bootleggers may well be excused for saying, 'Now, there's Dugald McKaye, a regular swell, buying my wet goods right along, and helping me to conceal my crimes. It's not so very bad to crack a crib or stick up a swell guy in a dark part of the street.' Could you blame one of them for saying a thing like that?"

"I won't assume that one of them would say such a thing."

"But could you blame him for saying it?"

"No, I couldn't blame him."

"The fact is, my friend, that you are encouraging all kinds of lawlessness by your hypocrisy. Every time that a law is successfully broken, it gives encouragement to the forces of evil." McKaye stood silent, in deep thought. The minister continued: "Now, Dugald, we have made you out a pretty hypocrite; do you know of a church member who is a worse hypocrite than you are?"

"We have wandered some distance from the hypocrites that belong to the church. No, Parson, I can't say that I know of a hypocrite in the church worse than thousands of the hypocrites out of the church. I shall never again say a word about hypocrites."

They had been waiting near the village post office for the mail to open, and just then it was announced that the distribution of the mail was completed. The minister earnestly urged:

"Come into the church, Mac, and show the hypocrites in there how to live."

"I'll study on it." Both men went to their boxes in the lobby, and got their mail. As they were leaving the post office, McKaye said:

"Here is an invitation to a charity ball. Before we had our talk, I would have gone, saying to myself that it would be for sweet charity's sake, when it would really be for the purpose of hugging some of my neighbors' wives, while I would be dancing with them."

"Good for you, Mac—you are learning fast."

"A man must be an idiot who wouldn't learn after the lesson you've given me to-day."

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Mississippi Conferences.

The terrible calamity which befell Japan a week ago is one of the greatest disasters in all history. It seems that several hundred thousand people have lost their lives, and property to the amount of hundreds of millions of dollars has been swept away. The people are in great distress and their condition ought to make the deepest appeal to the charity of the world. I hope every pastor in all of our Conferences will present this need to his congregation at once, and remit whatever offering the people make to our Board of Missions in Nashville without delay.

W. N. AINSWORTH.

TO NORTH MISSISSIPPI METHODISTS.

We are nearing the end of the third year of the Christian Education Movement. We have fought against many difficulties. We are now in the period that will mark success or failure of the financial feature of the movement. Many subscibers are delinquent on the first two payments, and the third is at hand. Shall we meet these sacred obligations, or will the church default in this most sacred pladge? This question staggers, will the church default in its sacred pledge?

The General Conference Committee on Correlation has given an open field for the collection of the pledges. In the North Mississippi Conference the second week in October has been decided upon as the time when every effort shall be made by the entire church to get in past due pledges. Every subscriber will receive by that date a statement of his pledge, the amount paid, and the amount due. May we not count on every Methodist to meet his payments at this time?

This obligation is as secrad as any that can be made. At the church altar we vowed to be true to God and the church. God and the church are depending on you. We pray you shall not disappoint us.

Secretary-Treasurer, Educational Movement,

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE CHURCH CONCERNING A VITAL MATTER.

Dear Brethren: When the contents of this letter come to your attention, the Annual Conferences will have begun their meetings for the fall of 1923. The General Conference provided that the cause of superannuate endowment should have the right of way for presentation at these meetings. The Directing Committee of the Special Effort for Superannuate Endowment has arranged a schedule for the presentation of the plan of the movement at every Annual Conference. I expect personally to visit twenty-six of the thirty-eight Annual Conferences to be held in the homeland, and at the other twelve I shall have strong representatives to take care of our work. In order that our plan may be properly presented, this open letter is given to the Church, calling attention to some things that are of supreme importance in connection with our presentation of the plan, as follows:

An Appeal to the Bishops.

It is commonly known among us that the bishop of an Annual Conference is in position to do effective service in behalf of any subject presented under his presidency for the consideration of the body. All of our bishops, as far as I have been able to observe, try to give due consideration to the presentation of any matter having a place in the crowded program of the Annual Conference. Therefore it can be expected that every bishop will be thoughtful and considerate of the superannuate cause when its representatives appear. However, in the light of the fact that the plan of the special effort for the worn-out preachers is one that rests its hopes of success entirely with the Church's regular organized forces without any supplementary organization whatever, am I presuming too much when I request our bishops to give, through their presidency of the Annual Conference, unusual attention and direction to the superannuate program? Since this special effort comes after the Church has been strongly in the grip of two other great financial movements, wherein the first and choice strength of all of us was wholly consecrated for the success of those movements, I believe that our bishops will find a hearty response in the hearts of all of our people if they will give special attention to a forceful presentation of the plan looking to provide an old-age comfort for the worn-out servants of the Church.

An Appeal to the Presiding Elders.

The Church has approximately three hundred presiding elders. They are always busy, but at the meeting of the Annual Conference they work under a strain from start to finish. The temptation of a presiding elder to leave the Conference room to get a drink of water when some connectional cause is about to be presented is one that is difficult to resist. How do I know? Well, you see, I have been a presiding elder. Now, my dear brothers, may I urge you to get that drink of water this year before you come to Conference? When the Secretary of the Board of Finance or any of his representatives stand before the Annual Conference this fall to plead the cause of superannuate endowment, it is desired that every man who has been a presiding elder for the Conference year 1922-23 and every man who might be a presiding elder for the Conference year 1923-4 will take his place on the front pew (or all the pews) and listen intently to every word spoken on the subject. We are depending on these three hundred leaders of the districts of the whole Church to accept much of the responsibility for the success of the special effort for superannuate endowment in their respective districts. No man can successfully guide a movement unless he knows the plan of it in detail. The only chance that the presiding elder will have to come into a thorough knowledge of the special effort plan as explained by those who know it will be at the Annual Conferences this fall. I am not pleading for myself but for the old-age comfort of my preacher brothers. By the way, let me remind you that superannuation often comes to those who have been presiding elders. Remember, brothers mine, to be on the front seat bright and happy-faced, interested, expectant, and eager to go—not needing a drink of water.

An Appeal to the Pastors.

Now I am getting into my own class, for I have done everything, everywhere, any time that any of you pastors have done. My first appointment as a supply pastor was to a hole in the ground. It had been an underground ice house, and it was donated (as a joke) for a church lot. Bishop W. F. McMurry, then presiding elder, appointed me as a supply pastor to nothing but this hole in the ground and the infidel. I have ridden the hard circuit and caught malarial fever; have served the half station, the small station, and other stations. No pastor has had a burden that I have not felt, a disappointment that has not stung me, or been poorer than I in this world's goods. Boys, I am one of you. I know your habits, too, especially at Annual Conference time. It is so much easier to stand under the big shade trees on the lawn talking in groups than it is to swelter inside the church listening to long speeches that are sometimes dull. But hear me. I am going to your Annual Conference this fall, or some one else whom I shall send, to talk to you about the time when you will go up to Annual Conference for an appointment and get the superannuated relation instead. I want to present to you a plan that will make provision for your comfortable living after that dreadful day. If you stand on the lawn under the shade trees, lay out on me while I am trying to get something started for the benefit of yourself, wife, and maybe an invalid son or daughter, you are a different sort of man than I have taken you to be. Come along to Annual Conference, every one of you, and come with the determination to get everything that is said concerning the plan for adequate superannuate endowment. Then go away from Conference with the avowed purpose to carry through so far as you are concerned. There are about sixty-five hundred pastors in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and all of you are marking time for the day of superannuation, not knowing just when it will come. Some of you will enter the list this fall, and some will barely squeeze by. Come on to Conference, men, and let us put our heads and shoulders together for a supreme effort in behalf of the most sacred cause that was ever brought to the attention of Southern Methodism.

An Appeal to the Lay Members.

I have been a layman, too. I was reared on the farm, plowed corn and shocked it, sowed wheat and reaped and threshed it, worked in the oat fields and hay fields, set out tobacco on the hillsides and later cured it in the barns, worked with cattle, hogs, sheep, etc., and know how a farmer feels when his interest is due on the mortgage and three months to go before the crop can be sold. My brothers and sisters, they have been telling me that you are ready to make proper provision for the superannuates when the Church gives you the chance. Thank the good Lord, the Church has voted you the chance! At the Annual Conference held this fall there will be present representatives of the Board of Finance to tell you all about the plan. I do hope that many of you will attend Conference so that you may hear all about it and that, having heard, you will go back to your homes and get behind the movement with the same determination that you handle your personal business affairs. There is a class of worn-out people in our Church that we call by the name of the "forgotten man." I do not like the name and am anxious to change it. To make the change will cost the Church ten million dollars, to be used as superannuate endowment. But the reproach upon us for forgetting our worn-out preachers and widows of preachers is so great that we can well afford the ten million dollars to get rid of the ugly name. I want to see the lay members at the Annual Conference this fall, and I trust they will receive the plan of the special effort for superannuate endowment with great enthusiasm. For more than twenty years the Church has been promising to do something extraordinary for her superannuates, but nothing much has been done. Now we have come to a time when the Church authorities give liberty to proceed with a real program. What a shameful disgrace it will be if we fail to use this chance to the best advantage! Therefore, I appeal to the lay members of the Annual Conferences to attend the meetings of these bodies this fall and come with the avowed purpose to give the representatives of the "forgotten man" rapt attention.

Faithfully yours,

LUTHER E. TODD, Secretary.

WAVELETS.

A little girl with eyes as blue
  As any eyes could be,
And hair as bright as summer sun
  Went wading in the sea.

She laughed a silvery little laugh
  To see the small waves play,
To watch them run and tag her feet,
  Then quickly run away.

One overturned her new tin pail
  And tried its best to tell
That it was sorry for the trick
  By bringing back a shell!

MARGARET'S REPENTANCE.

By Willie C. Page.

Margaret Grayson was thirteen and very pretty. She stood before the mirror brushing her soft, bronze hair with smooth, even strokes, and smiled at the fair image reflected there.

She put on a fresh white linen dress that her mother had stayed up late the night before to launder. She carefully arranged her tie in a careless knot, took her books from the table, and entered the room where her mother was busily sewing. Mrs. Grayson made and embroidered fine dresses for an exclusive shop in the city.

"Hurry, Margaret, you must not be late for school," said her mother, kindly.

"I can't help it if I am late," replied the girl impatiently.

"Mother, I must have some money, five dollars at least. The girls of the Mozart Club are planning to go to the city next week, to hear a famous singer. Of course, I want to go."

"Margaret, I don't see how I can manage to let you have any more money this month. The rent, coal, and grocery bills are due on the first. The tuition for your music lessons is due to-day. Besides, I promised to pay Dr. West a small amount each month for attending your father in his last illness," sighed Mrs. Grayson.

"But mother, I want the money," exclaimed Margaret, her face flushed with annoyance.

"I am overtaxing my strength every day, striving to make money to meet all my obligations and to make life easy and pleasant for you," replied her mother.

"Oh, just let the bills go for once, for I must have the money for this trip. All the girls of the class are going. If you would only pay me what you owe me, I would not have to ask for money," said Margaret in a petulant tone of voice.

"What I owe you? Please tell me what you mean," asked the astonished mother.

"This is what I mean," said the girl as she took a sheaf of papers from a book and threw them on the sewing-machine. "Lena Brown's mother pays her for everything she does about the house," then she went out and slammed the door.

Dazed and bewildered, Mrs. Grayson read a few items that filled the sheets of paper. "What Mother Owes Margaret: Going errand to town, fifty cents; sweeping and dusting the living-room for one week, one dollar; answering the telephone, fifty cents; ripping hem of skirt, twenty-five cents; threading embroidery needles, ten cents," and so on and on.

"Have I ruined the life of my only child by over-indulgence?" mused the saddened mother with an aching heart. "To children a mother's love is taken for granted, something to which they have a right without obligation."

With a heavy heart Mrs. Grayson worked steadily—she stopped only a few moments to eat a cold lunch. After school was dismissed she heard Margaret, accompanied by a crowd of girl friends, come in the living-room, where they chatted gayly and played games.

"She doesn't care for me," said mother aloud. She finished the dresses, carried them to the shop and received pay. Then she hastened home and made out a list as follows: "What Margaret Owes Mother: Nursing Margaret through a long sie[illegible] of typhoid fever—nothing; board, lodging and clothing for thirteen years—nothing; sewing and laundry so that Margaret could always be nicely and daintily clad—nothing; sewing all night to make dress for concert—nothing; making candy and entertaining Margaret's friends and the Hi Y girls—nothing."

This list, with a new ten-dollar bill, she put in an envelope and stuck it in the side of the mirror of Margaret's dressing table.

Margaret had been practicing her music lesson, then her mother heard her close the piano and go to her room.

The first thing she espied on entering the room was the letter. This she quickly opened and gave a cry of joy when she saw the bill.

"I knew mother could get the money for me if she only tried," she said aloud, transferred the money to her own purse, and sat down to read what her mother had written.

It was almost twilight when Margaret, with tears in her eyes, ran to her mother and exclaimed: "O, mother, take back this money, I do not want it, I have been so selfish and ungrateful. I did not think, but took everything you did for me as a matter of course; I have not appreciated you, or what you did for me. I am so sorry."

"Dry your tears, Margaret, for mother understands," said Mrs. Grayson.

"If you will forgive me, I will be your helper after this and share every burden with you. I will never act so selfish again," said the girl contritely.

"Remember, my child, that the corner-stone of life is builded on unselfish love and service for others. That life depends on what dwells in the heart. See this thread of gold running through this embroidery? It is just the right touch to set it off. One could not imagine this bit of gold would make such a difference in the pattern.

"So it is with life; if the golden thread of love and service is woven in the web of our daily lives, the thread may be tangled and broken by our mistakes and failures, but if we put all that we have and are in the hands of the Great Weaver of life, He will fashion a fabric that will somewhere serve a noble purpose.

"Margaret, I have waited long for this hour when you would awaken to the fact that we cannot live for self alone," said her mother softly.

PORTABLE WIRELESS AIDS ARCTIC SURVEYORS.

Slowly but surely the Canadian Government surveyors are accomplishing the mapping of the vast sub-arctic regions in the northern parts of the Dominion. Every year several parties penetrate farther the blank spaces at the top of the map. Until last summer these men were cut off from all communication with the outside world, their only information being occasional vague rumors passed on by trappers and Indians. Now, through the use of wireless, all is changed. Though a thousand miles from the nearest city, each engineering party daily receives complete news.

To the engineers, after so many years of working isolated, this wonderful contact was like unreality at first, a feeling which can only be fully comprehended by those who have lived a month's journey distant from civilization. Equipped with portable wireless, the government surveyors are able daily to give news of the outside world, much to the astonishment of the natives, who are, however, fast becoming blase.—The Baptist Young People.

PUP.

In the early morning light,
  'Fore my daddy's up,
I hear some one at the door
  And I know it's Pup.

Jumping in my overalls
  I run out to play.
Pup and I have so much fun
  Romping all the day.

When the night time comes again
  And our playin's o'er,
Pup lies down upon the mat
  Close besire my door.

DR. SHACKFORD EXPLAINS.

as leading to God. Second, the faith that believes that God is equal to all the demands of the world upon Him."

After the citation of these notes as giving the attitude of the school from the beginning, the statement goes on to say, in part:

"In harmony with the viewpoint expressed above, it has been the custom of the Leadership Training School, from the beginning, to secure the maturest and most competent Christian students of the Bible, and of the problems of religious education, which the management has been able to discover. Care has been given to select men of ripe Christian experience.

"In the selection of Dr. S. G. Bland, the choice was made with the same general intention as that which has governed us in the selection of other speakers in the past. He came to our General Conference, an honored representative from a sister Methodism, and is now pastor of a great Methodist church—Broadway Tabernacle, Toronto. It was not, however, until we heard his great sermon on the pre-eminence and headship of Jesus Christ over all, delivered during our General Conference, and afterwards published in the Methodist Review, that it occurred to us to invite him to Junaluska, and an informal invitation was made to him that very evening. Never have we heard a preacher who more highly exalted Jesus Christ and who revealed a profounder faith in His power to redeem humanity. * * *

"When we select speakers in the manner indicated, we have not felt that it was necessary either to control them or to endorse them at every point. Whether or not it was wise for Dr. Bland to give very frankly what is found in Hasting's Bible Dictionary, generally recognized as the foremost Bible dictionary in our language, and in more recent Bible dictionaries and commentaries—and Dr. Bland states that he was following these closely—is a question which the management of the school did not and has not felt called upon to answer. This, however, was Dr. Bland's approach. * * *

"In all fairness to him (Dr. Bland), it should be borne in mind that a very small proportion of his lectures was given to stating the problems. In fact, as he himself has pointed out, practically all the points which have been printed and objected to in the press were set forth in one lecture, yet he delivered a series of eighteen lectures. * * * It is difficult to understand how any fair-minded person who considers Dr. Bland's work, taken as a whole, would say other than that it was constructive and reassuring, and that his spirit was sympathetic and thoroughly Christlike. * * * In reply to a question, Dr. Bland said, 'If there is anything that I believe above everything else in the world, it is the divinity of Jesus Christ.' * * *

"The position of the management of the school was to take no position for or against the accuracy of the conclusions of scholarship as stated by Dr. Bland. But in harmony with the spirit of the quotations given in the first part of this paper, it was said that in the face of the fact that there is a substantial agreement on a number of matters among large numbers of Bible scholars—such, for instance, as the contributors to Hasting's Bible Dictionary—we do not strengthen the faith of thoughtful, inquiring people who already know something of the existence of the views of these scholars, when we adopt the method of ridicule or denunciation of the scholars; and that it is not the Christian spirit to denounce as untrue and insincere Christian men who do accept the viewpoint of such Bible scholars, since many of the real Christian leaders of to-day, as a matter of fact, hold a view in harmony with the position taken by these scholars, and yet are unquestionably loyal to Jesus Christ and to the Bible. We said that our position must be so to help the teachers of to-day to understand the Bible that their faith shall not depend upon their being kept in ignorance of these views in question, since this is obviously no longer possible.

"That there easily may be differences of opinion as to the wisdom of Dr. Bland's frank presentation of some things, especially those presented in the one lecture referred to, we readily grant, but any suggestion that the management of the school planned that he should say these particular things, or knew that he would say them, or any suggestion that the management of the school has set itself for a defense of the views of scholarship as presented by Dr. Bland, or anybody else, is not justified by the facts. The questions of scholarship we leave with the scholars."

It appears to us that the explanation of Dr. Shackford clears the situation as regards the responsibility of the management of the school for those views advanced by Dr. Bland that have attracted so much attention, and the explanation should quiet controversy and allay bitterness. We continue to be strongly of the opinion that the discussion of the questions of technical Biblical scholarship is out of place in such a gathering as was held at Lake Junaluska.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. A. J. Gearheard writes from Haynesville, La., that the work prospers and that all departments of the church are active.

We rejoice to learn that Rev. H. W. Bowman, our pastor at Lecompte, La., is steadily improving in health, and that this has been a good year with him.

Rev. A. Brulet, our pastor at Gonzales, La., paid the Advocate an appreciated call one day last week. His health has not been good recently, and he was in the city for medical advice.

Professor George Lott Harrell, professor of astronomy at Millsaps College, went to San Diego, Calif., to observe the eclipse of the sun last Monday. We are sure he saw interesting things.

Rev. J. M. Smith, Mississippi Conference evangelist, assisted by Mr. Paul I. Templeton, evangelistic singer, has just closed a good meeting at Mount Olive, Miss. There were ten additions to the membership of the church.

Mr. Paul I. Templeton, evangelistic singer, requests us to say that, owing to the postponement of a meeting, he has some open time for this month; also, that he has some open time in October. His address is 2206 Thirteenth Street, Meridian, Miss.

Mr. Clarence M. Dannelly, of Montgomery, Ala., Conference Sunday School Superintendent of the Alabama Conference, honored the Advocate office with a call on Tuesday of this week. Mr. Dannelly is one of the most efficient Sunday school workers in the church.

Mr. Clement Weston, of Logtown, Miss., and Miss Maia Morgan, of Okolona, Miss., were married in the Methodist church at Okolona on Thursday evening, Sept. 6, Rev. E. H. Cunningham officiating. The Advocate extends hearty good wishes to the happy couple.

A great meeting is in progress at Okolona, Miss., Rev. E. H. Cunningham, pastor, conducted by Rev. Dan Kelly, Mississippi Conference evangelist. All denominations are co-operating in the meeting, large congregations are attending the services, and indivations point to a great revival.

The plans of Rev. Walt Holcomb, one of our general evangelists, with reference to an evangelistic campaign in Japan, at the invitation of Bishop H. A. Boaz, have, of course, been changed by the earthquake disaster. Brother Holcomb is now holding a meeting at Wesley Memorial, Atlanta.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation from Mr. and Mrs. William Moncure Mantiply, of Bunkie, La., to attend the marriage of their daughter, Leila Eliazbeth, to Mr. Carl Clifford Swett, on Monday, Sept. 17, at 8 o'clock p.m., at the Methodist church. We extend all good wishes in advance of the happy event.

We learn with sorrow of the death of Mrs. Ollie Hoyt a few days ago. She was buried at James Chapel, Dr. W. Winans Drake conducting the service. Dr. Drake was the first to preach in this church some thirty years ago. Mrs. Hoyt is survived by three sisters and many friends, to whom the Advocate extends sympathy.

Rev. Ellis Smith, pastor of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, this city, and Mrs. May Louise West were married last Monday evening, Sept. 10, at the parsonage of the Felicity Methodist Church, Dr. W. Winans Drake, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, and the editor of the Advocate officiating.

Rev. Julian S. Duncan, our pastor at Pickens, Miss., spent the month of August in Emory University, finishing his residence work for the Bachelor of Divinity degree. The degree will be conferred at the Christmas Convocation. Brother Duncan is one of the best equipped and most promising of our younger preachers.

The opening of the new Methodist church at Homer, La., on Sunday, Sept. 2, was a very happy occasion. The building and furnishings cost about $77,000. The pastor, Rev. R. W. Tucker, and his people are rejoicing in the fruits of their labors. They have it in mind to invite the 1924 session of the Louisiana Annual Conference to meet in Homer.

At a meeting of the ad interim licensing committee of the Ruston District, held at Homer, La., on Sept. 4, David F. Tarver, of Bernice, was licensed to preach, and Rev. E. J. Buck, of Castor, was recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial. Brother Tarver will attend Centenary College. The committee consists of the presiding elder, Rev. K. W. Dodson, Rev. R. W. Tucker, Rev. H. W. Ledbetter, Rev. A. J. Gearheard, and Rev. C. F. Sheppard.

The union meeting at Woodville, Miss., in which the Presbyterians, the Methodists, the Christians, the Baptists, and the Episcopalians were joined, came to a close on Thursday, Sept. 6. The preaching was done by Rev. J. O. Hanes, of Birmingham, Ala., and the singing was in charge of Mr. W. G. Waltermire, of Peoria, Ill. The Woodville Republican of Sept. 8 gives an interesting account of the meeting, commenting especially upon the beautiful spirit of harmony that prevailed throughout. All the participating churches received additions to their membership, the Methodists receiving fourteen by vows and six by certificate, with the probability of others later.

Mr. Henry H. Ahrens, who has held a responsible position with the Publishing House at Nashville during the past year, will return to New Orleans Oct. 1 as Religious News Editor of the Times-Picayune. Mr. Ahrens is one of the few men of our acquaintance who know how to handle religious news for the secular press. He is an experienced newspaper man, a hard worker, enthusiastic in what he undertakes, and uniformly successful in the responsible positions he has occupied. We congratulate the Times-Picayune upon the addition to its editorial staff of this able writer and courteous gentleman. Mr. Ahrens has many friends in Louisiana and Mississippi, who will be delighted to learn that he is "coming back home."

A LITHUANIAN RABBI'S VIEW OF THE SITUATION.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

Rabbi Aaron Lipman, a distinguished leader of Judaism in Lithuania, is visiting the United States, and in a recent interview he points out conditions prevalent in his own country and in other European lands which threaten the foundations of society.

He says that the greatest problem confronting the newly organized nations of Europe is the lack of moral and religious control over the younger generation, and that the ever-widening rift between children in their teens and their parents is the chief obstacle in the way of successful government in his own and other lands.

Rabbi Lipman deprecated particularly the decline of parental restraint in the small countries bordering around Austria, Germany, and Russia, and expressed regret that he found in our country the same thing.

In the interview which he gave to a representative of one of the leading newspapers of Chicago he is reported to have spoken as follows:

> "I noticed the dress of girls here, the apparent freedom the young ones enjoy from the rules of their fathers and mothers. I was a bit surprised, for in Lithuania and in Central Europe we look up to America as the leader in all things.
>
> "But the independence of your boys and girls here just reminded me of the condition I left in my own country. It is the same there—and perhaps the world over. The parents do not get to be real friends of their children. The girls dress up and try to attract the boys; they think more of pleasure than anything else. Yes, even in the remote corners of the Lithuanian mountains.
>
> "What is the underlying cause? I cannot ascribe it to anything other than a declining interest in religion and moral standards. I notice it every day. When the children lose interest in their parents, they fail to keep up with their religious thought. They become loose, unrestrained. And the result—I hate to think of it.
>
> "The parents alone are responsible, the world over. It is they alone who can return religion and right thinking to their proper places. Before the war religion was revered; but the war brought sad changes!"

Perhaps some will be ready to say that Rabbi Lipman is depressed by present conditions of a material nature in his own country, and that, therefore, he takes a too gloomy view of conditions as they exist in our country and throughout the world. But after all just allowance for his utterances are made on this account, there remains too much in what he says which undeniable facts justify; and it would be more profitable for us to consider whether we may not be in danger of ignoring the facts and taking a too rosy view of prevailing conditions. There is such a thing as a blinding optimism as well as a deluding pessimism, and of the two the former is far more pernicious and perilous than the latter.

There is in our own country, and throughout the world, an alarming decline in parental government and a corresponding decay in family religion. In the United States there is an increasing number of prayerless, lawless, and godless homes, and out of them issue daily all manner of social disorders and political dangers.

The world war, as Rabbi Lipman suggests, may have brought on to a degree this state of things; for war always demoralizes, and this war affected all mankind as no war known to history ever did before.

Some modern inventions also have contributed no little to bring to pass these sad results.

The enormous business of "the movies," with their demoralizing exhibitions, has done much towards the demoralization of the children and youth of our country, and many of their parents also. They have taught lessons of vice and lawlessness which have enfeebled respect for all forms of authority, including the authority of the home, and the church, and the State. They have thrown over mere pleasure a delusive glory of self-indulgence, while upon the more serious matters of life they have cast depreciation and derision.

Night rides in automobiles have brought seductive temptations to unwholesome familiarity between boys and girls as well as to many older persons.

By these things, and others that might be mentioned, moral principles have been relaxed and social standards have been lowered. Both old and young have thereby suffered serious deterioration of character.

And while all these hurtful things have been operating to produce evil results, some good institutions have been perverted to bad ends. Multiplied thousands of parents have abdicated parental authority, and relieved themselves of all sense of responsibility for the well-being of their offspring by turning over the education of their children to the common schools of the State and the Sunday schools of the churches. In the homes in which such parents dwell all Christian nurture has withered and perished. In them little instruction is imparted and no discipline is exercised.

Indeed, a pernicious sentimentality concerning self-government by children and youth has pervaded both homes and schools, according to which children must be exempted from all control by parents and teachers that they may learn self-control—which means that they may do as they please. According to this mushy nonsense, pain, or the loss of pleasure, upon the part of a child is far worse than self-indulgence and sin.

Thus the home, which is the unit of civilization and the main support of organized government, has been impaired.

God has established and ordained three great institutions for the welfare of mankind, namely, the Home, the Church, and the State. In point of time the home antedated both the church and the State, and in patriarchal times it embodied in itself both church and State. The father of the family was then both the priest and the king of his household. But in the present age the priesthood and governmental authority of parenthood have perished to the damage of both religion and civil order. A theory of spurious liberty in the home, the church, and the State has impaired respect for all authority and engendered fearful states of lawlessness. There is something more than a touch of anarchy everywhere, and it has proceeded largely from the decay of moral life in the home.

We hear much of "the reconstruction of the world," and truly the world needs something to cleanse it of its lawless restlessness and its vast disorder. But the only reconstruction that can avail anything for good is the regeneration of its inhabitants. There is nothing wrong with the world itself. All the trouble in it springs from the hearts of the people who occupy it. Its distress and misery arise from their sinfulness, and that foul source of its sorrow and suffering must first be cleansed before peace and prosperity can be restored to it. And the cleansing process must begin with the restoration of religion in the home. If godless parents continue to give birth to children, who grow up in godlessness and self-indulgence, the huge stock of evil already in the earth will increase rapidly to the overwhelming of human society beneath its enormous bulk.

Rabbi Lipman has spoken the truth in a plain and fearless manner. What he has said is most timely, and the American people will do well to lay to heart the matter of which he speakes. They need not question the facts presented. They are too conspicuous to be questioned, and too serious to be ignored.

But in proportion as people are beset with moral perils their appreciation of their dangers is diminished. Sin has a blinding power, and, hence, sinners in the midst of the most perilous conditions often cry "Peace! Peace! when there is no peace." The greatest disasters which have befallen evildoers in the past have invariably surprised, as well as overwhelmed them. And in times of disorder and degeneration false prophets always appear "prophesying smooth things," and, thereby, deepening the darkness around them.

Such as these will condemn all such utterances as that of Rabbi Lipman, and will cry out, "It is all unjustifiable pessimism." But the moral progress of mankind has never been promoted by blind apostles of blinding optimism. Evil is overcome by men who face it and fight it; never by those who shut their eyes to it, refuse to acknowledge its existence, and decline to combat it.

THE BEAUTIES OF LOUISIANA.

By Arthur Madison Shaw.

Nature wears her wildest mood
In Louisiana;
Sun-kiss'd hill and tangled wood,
In Louisiana:
Bending skies of deepest blue,
Landscapes tinged with every hue,
Eden's glories live anew—
In Louisiana.

All the land is wreath'd in smiles
In Louisiana;
Forests stretching miles on miles,
In Louisiana:
Fragrant wild magnolias grow,
Purling rivers softly flow,
And festoon'd moss hangs low—
In Louisiana.

Stand beneath the live-oaks green
In Louisiana;
Let your soul drink in the scene,
In Louisiana:
Laughing brook and flow'r-clad hill,
Dreamy lake and dancing rill,
Gladden'd by the song-bird's trill—
In Louisiana.

Come with me at harvest time,
In Louisiana;
See the wealth of soil and clime,
In Louisiana:
Waving fields of sugar cane,
Rice-lands hid by ripened grain;
Cotton, like a snow-white plain—
In Louisiana.

City, town, and countryside,
In Louisiana,
Woo the stranger to abide
In Louisiana:
Fairest land and brightest sky,
Charm the soul and feast the eye:
Here I'll live, and here I'll die—
In Louisiana.

On Aug. 18, 1923, our Heavenly Father saw fit to take from me my beloved wife, LILLIE MAY BAKER, who has walked by my side for twenty years. She was a faithful and loving wife to me and a devoted mother to our children, six of whom, two girls and four boys, are left to comfort me in my sorrow, and the little son, William Howard, who went before, seven years ago, to await her in the home beyond. She was born in Center Point, La., Aug. 18, 1885, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Baker. Reared in a Christian home, she gave her heart to God and became a member of Oak Grove Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the early age of sixteen years, from which time she led a beautiful Christian life; doing faithful service in home and community, always loving and self-sacrificing. We laid her to rest in the Methodist cemetery in Pineville, La., on the beautiful Sabbath morning, Aug. 19, 1923.

"I believe I'll meet my loved ones
On that far-off, mystic shore,
And I know that I shall know them
Where sorrow dwells no more."

Her husband,
J. H. CANNON.

PATIENCE.

Tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope. Rom. 5:3, 4.

"Be patient, oh, be patient; go and watch the wheat ears grow
So imperceptibly that ye can mark nor change nor throe,
Day after day, day after day, till the ear is full grown,
And then again, day after day, till the ripened field is brown."

By patience man becomes more excellent,
Fairer than gold, clear as the firmament,
More pure from each vile element,
In every grace more eminent.

To Jesus more acceptable,
More like to saints unblamable,
To enemies more terrible,
And to his friends more lovable.
—Thomas a Kempis.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The New Orleans City Union truly celebrated Labor Day at Mandeville, La., when the Mandeville League entertained them with a picnic at Jackson Park.

There were Leaguers from New Orleans, Slidell, and Bogalusa, and old Mandeville never saw a jollier crowd. The trip on the Susquehanna was one of the features of the outing. The boat fairly rocked with League songs and happy shouts of Leaguers out for a day of real sport. With the representatives from the out-of-town Leagues to join the fun, we "leaguerly" started it. There was, of course, a ball game; the chief feature, however, was the lemon-squeezing and lemonade making contests, with Edgar Cayard winner in the two events. Swimming was enjoyed by most of the crowd, and there was a spread that would have suited any Methodist crowd.

We are all wishing for a return of Labor Day again, and plan to make our next trip a ringer for the Louisiana Epworth Leagues.

DEAN NOLLNER APPRECIATED AT MT. SEQUOYAH.

The following resolution was unanimously passed on Aug. 25 by the delegates at the first Western Epworth League Assembly held at Mount Sequoyah, Aug. 16-26, 1923, and a copy was ordered sent to each of the Advocates in the Conferences served by this Assembly:

"We, the members of the Western Epworth League Assembly, heartily commend the work of the Rev. Ralph E. Nollner, as Dean of this our first Assembly on Mount Sequoyah.

"He has shown himself not only efficient in planning and carrying out our first program, but in it all he has manifested a spirit of brotherliness that has endeared him to the heart of all.

"We further request that he be assigned to this Assembly in 1924."

Signed by Committee: E. B. Hawk, C. M. Reeves, H. U. Campbell.

RELIGION AND PROGRESS.

A nation's intellectual progress has always followed—not preceded—some moral impulse. The history of the fine arts shows that some form of religion gave them the earliest impulse. There has never been a great genius but has been inspired in some sense by religion. The thoughts of the intellect are lofty in proportion as the sentiments of the heart are profound. If we begin the attempt to improve men with the intellect, we end where we began. Education will not remove corruption. It may guide vice as in ancient Rome or Athens, but will not uproot it. A godless education has no power to purify. Instruction in morality has also failed to regenrate. No man does his duty simply because he knows it unless he loves it; nor are political and social changes effective. Social evil has its roots in the individual heart and cannot be removed except by influences operating within it. This fountain of man's corruption must be purified to correct social vice.—Professor Seelye.

FROM THE FRENCH FIELD.

Dear Brother Carley: I have been helping Rev. C. J. Thibodeaux in his charge. I helped him in two meetings. We held one at Week's Island, the success was very good, even though we had a little difficulty with a denomination. We try to co-operate in serving the Lord, but we had to separate from each other because we could not have the peace to preach the Gospel of our Lord. But thank God, he opened another place for us to preach—he always provides for his Gospel to be preached in peace. And we did some good work among them for our Lord. They used to have a Sunday school there, but somehow it was disorganized; but they all promised to organize again. I want all your co-operation in prayers for that place. The last night of the meeting we had over a hundred persons present. Seven of that denomination came forward the last night of the meeting, promising to give their heart to Jesus. Rev. C. J. Thibodeaux is a very efficient Christian, and also an ideal pastor, especially in personal evangelistic work. This is his first year in the ministry, and he is going just fine. Even the Roman Catholics are willing to help him. His influence among them is great.

At Lydia we held the other revival, and the church was full all the time. Several Roman Catholics were very interested in the meeting, and they are very satisfied with Brother Thibodeaux in the midst of their community. Brother Thibodeaux has the place in very good shape except the parsonage, which is not in a very good condition. It needs to be re-roofed. Hope it will be done in the near future.

We did some evangelistic work while we were together, Thibodeaux and I, and it's worth telling. We went to Franklin, and about a mile from the Methodist church we visited some people who didn't know a thing in the world about Protestantism. I began to tell them about my experience, and they were so surprised they asked me all sorts of questions about coming to our church. They are Creole folks; they asked me if they were allowed to go to our church.

Brother Thibodeaux went to visit some of his old friends whom he had known in his past life. They were so surprised to see such a wonderful change in his life, and they asked him for God's sake to go with his Bible to preach to them. He promised to do it. My friends, it takes evangelistic work to bring this old world to Christ. It might take quite a while, but let us pray for some more evangelistic workers.

Fraternally yours,
REV. G. A. LAGRANGE
Bayou Blue Circuit.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

Three Sunday schools have been launched this month: Tabernacle, on the Gallman charge, with Mrs. F. D. Stuart in charge; Zieglerville, on the Benton charge, with Dr. Smith in charge; on the Utica circuit, as announced at Cayuga, but I did not learn the superintendent's name. This is good work.

Please take notice of the Children's Week and apply for literature. Much can be done by the real observance of this week. All material can be gotten through this office. Several are making plans now. A large observance of the week will mean much for the ongoing of the work.

The Vicksburg Training School was a distinct success. Of course, the week of the election was a mighty bad time to hold it, but we had a good attendance and about 70% got credits: This was a large percentage. One received office credit and two will take the regular examinations. This will help the percentage. Brothers Cottrell and Selby were careful to look after the wants and comforts of those in the school, and everything moved on time without a hitch.

They voted to continue the work of the school in private classes or by a union class of the two schools, and desired a school next year.

God is blessing the work. Pray for success. Pray for the workers.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Have you sent to Rev. J. E. Stephens, Grenada, Miss., the offering made by your Sunday school on Sunday School Day? To my certain knowledge the money is needed.

Two special days are near at hand—Rally Day, the time we call our forces together for the work to be done during the winter, and Promotion Day, the last of September. This is the day when we are expected to take a step forward. The non-promotion-day school moves in a circle.

Miss Marie Parham, assistant to Miss Minnie E. Kennedy, General Elementary Superintendent, has agreed to spend from the 22d to the 27th in our Conference in order that she may meet with all the teachers who deal with children under 13 years of age. Our present plan is to hold a meeting for the teachers of the Sardis District at Sardis, the afternoon of Saturday, the 22d. Then a meeting with all the District Elementary Superintendents, six in number (Aberdeen District has no one in charge of this work), at Grenada, Monday, the 24th. Any and all workers of the Grenada District are invited to attend the meeting at Grenada. The other dates will be published in the Commercial Appeal.

Our first non-standard, three-teacher school is in session at Sunflower this week. We have an attendance of 32. One of the most interested students is a Jewess, who teaches about 15 children of this faith each Sabbath in this town. All honor to this sensible woman who is eager to get the best help that comes her way.

The Booneville Standard School, which closed Sept. 1, enrolled 99, issued 67 credits, and had 13 schools represented. Eight young men, two of them superintendents, took work. This is the first school to have so many young men to attend. Three preachers received credits. The large attendance was due to the untiring work of Rev. E. G. Mohler, Rev. J. B. Randolph, Rev. W. M. McIntosh, Rev. J. A. George (the two latter held revival meetings near Booneville), and the abounding hospitality of a few of the members of the church at Booneville. The Evangelistic Committee of this church, backed by the liberality of Mr. J. B. Reynolds, paid all the expenses of this school. Mrs. J. B. Randolph gave her services to the school at New Albany and to this one also. No school held this year has been more satisfactory and more encouraging. A few such men like the ones mentioned above, will help to bring in the kingdom of heaven more speedily in the North Mississippi Conference. The school requested that another session be held next year.

FROM NOXAPATER, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: I think I have a report from the Noxapater charge that will be of interest to you and all the people who love our Lord. God has specially blessed our efforts here this year. It was our ambition to have a revival in each church, and we have had it.

Brother W. A. Wilson assisted me greatly at Noxapater church. His messages were strong and spiritual. He attacks sin from every angle. As a result of this meeting, the whole town was mightily stirred. Three prayer meetings have been held running weekly since, and eleven members were added to the church.

At Camp Ground church I had no help. The congregation is small and the political picnics took some of the peoplo away, but, notwithstanding hindrances, we had a good revival, and received four into the church on profession of faith.

At Stallo, another small place, Brother C. T. Cooper assisted. We had a good revival in the church and received seven into the church.

Then we moved our place of action to Pisgah. Brother J. W. Dorman, than whom there is no lovelier spirit among us, assisted, with marked ability. We had seven accessions as a result of this meeting.

Next we went to Rocky Hill, that time-honored congregation, and Brother Holder, our Conference Secretary of Education, assisted. Brother Holder is almost in a class to himself when it comes to preaching. He is as good as the best of us. We had a great feast of good things, and again we had seven accessions.

And last we went to Flower Ridge, for an eight-day meeting. When it comes to trying to describe this meeting my vocabulary fails me. Brother G. A. Baker helped here; and to say that Baker is a man of power is putting it mildly. God manifested his power from the first service. About the middle of the week we had a Pentecost. Men and women 40 and 50

Wanted! Ambitious Men and Women

We are receiving calls daily for men and women of character, ambition and business training, men and women who can accept and efficiently fill responsible positions, positions that give every opportunity for advancement; positions of high salaries, positions in banks, law offices, insurance, real estate, brokers' offices; positions with manufacturers, jobbers, retailers, in every imaginable type of business in the South.

Many of them we capably fill, others are yet vacant. The men and women who fill them need not be wealthy, nor even moderately well-to-do. They need not be young, nor need they be college or even high school graduates. All that is necessary is that they possess character, ambition and a business training.

The character and ambition they must possess; the business training we will furnish under the direction of the South's most efficient training corps and in one of the South's most efficient and best equipped business colleges. A training with unique courses in bookkeeping, stenography, typewriting, accounting, banking, business administration or our secretarial course. Such a training we will furnish in a few months' time at little cost to you, and at terms to meet your own financial condition.

Thousands of Southern men and women have taken advantage of the opportunity and trained themselves for a higher calling, a better salary and a greater opportunity for advancement. Many who have accepted the positions we offer have risen to the top of the ladder, and are numbered among America's foremost and wealthiest business and professional men and women.

An institution with such standing and reputation as the Georgia-Alabama Business College does more to advance the business interests of its graduates than can be done by any amount of family or personal influence.

Consider your present status—would you not like to improve your station in life, increase your income, attain financial independence and success? An opportunity awaits you, for positions are being constantly offered us that must be filled.

Write for our inspiring book, "Your Future—What Does it Hold in Store?" It is sent free on request, explains our offer in detail and points the way to a brighter future.

FROM DENHAM SPRINGS, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: Will you permit space for a brief account of the Denham Springs charge?

We have just finished our six revival meetings, with eighty-eight additions to the church—seventy-five by profession of faith, thirteen by letter.

The membership was spiritually revived. There were about thirty that pledged themselves to establish the family altar; there were fifty that pledged to tithe.

My heart is full of love to the dear brethren that labored with me so faithfully in these meetings.

Brother J. E. Selfe assisted me at Denham Springs; Brother J. W. Booth, at Palmetto; Brother D. L. Griffin, at Live Oak, Friendship, and Alford Chapel; Brother J. C. Ellis, at Mangum Chapel. Their services are very much appreciated by both pastor and people. They labored in the Spirit, and with zeal in the Master's cause.

May their reward be the benediction of the Captain of their salvation, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

We hope to round out a good year on the Denham Springs charge.

WOMAN'S PAINS LIKE TORTURE

KENTUCKY LADY, IN A DANGEROUS CONDITION AFTER A SIEGE OF INFLUENZA, FOUND CARDUI VERY HELPFUL.

Louisville, Ky. Influenza left Mrs. Volney A. Mandy, of 127 North Sixteenth Street, this city, in a dangerous condition. "I suffered tortures with my sides," she says, "and across my back. It seemed the pain would start at the back of my neck and down in my back and sides—a pain that felt like I was pulling in two. I couldn't stand on my feet. My limbs just gave way...

"I had taken Cardui as a tonic. I knew it was good. I told my husband I would try it again. I had used other things without relief. . . After one-half bottle of Cardui, the pain got less hard, and I seemed to relax. I could straighten up. After one and a half bottles, I was able to walk around and do my work. My back was stronger and the bearing-down pains left. I took altogether three bottles, and it strengthened me.

"Why, before I took Cardui, I was so nervous and in such a fix I couldn't eat or sleep. Afterwards my nerves were better. I gained my strength. I began to eat and sleep and was like another person."

Womanly pains cause great suffering, and a medicine that will relieve them is indeed worth knowing about. Thousands of women have written to tell that Cardui helped them, relieving such symptoms as those described above. If you suffer in this way—

IN THE BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE.

July 20 marks the first anniversary of the going Home of our incomparable leader, Miss Belle H. Bennett. To those who knew her intimately, the days have indeed been lonely. How we have missed her gracious, consecrated personality, her wise leadership, her sympathy and tender love in times of personal need! We have missed the wonderful companionship of such a Spirit-filled friend. Yet we remember how she spent herself freely for the work of the Lord for more than thirty-five years, and shall we grieve because she has entered now into the joy of the Lord whom she served so faithfully and so well? Let us consecrate ourselves anew to the unfinished task which she was compelled to lay down and show our love for the Master and our appreciation of her noble, Christ-like life by "carrying on."

In the memorial fund now being raised to be used in the enlargement of Scarritt, the women of Southern Methodism are seeking to express their love for such a friend and leader through the love gifts they are sending in.

As a permanent remembrance, the Memorial Campaign Committee is preparing a beautiful but simple Book of Remembrance which shall have a place in the library of the Greater Scarritt. In it are to be inscribed the names of those Auxiliaries whose love gifts shall average five dollars per member; that is, the total amount given by such Auxiliary which shall equal five dollars per capita. This is a wonderful thought of the committee. One recalls how Jehovah spoke to Malachi regarding the Israelites: "Then they that feared the Lord spoke often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels." This should be an incentive to our women to have their Auxiliaries' names in the beautiful Book of Remembrance in Scarritt. Let not one of our Conferences fail to have their names inscribed in this book.

Then, too, in the Bennett Section of the Greater Scarritt there will be a memorial tablet on which shall be inscribed the names of all Conference societies whose gifts shall equal five dollars or more per capita to the memorial fund. These names will appear on the memorial tablet in the order of the size of the per capita gift, the Conference giving the largest sum per member being at the top. If each Conference puts her best energies into this, she can easily attain this goal.

LOUISIANA NEWS SENDS S. O. S.

The great ship, "Training for Christian Service," upon which our own young worker, Miss Ora Hooper, has been so successfully sailing, is stranded in midseas and cannot make the rest of the voyage until some one sends $300 to bring her to the Port of Scarritt.

A wireless has just come to us from Kansas City, Mo.: "I am delighted to know that Louisiana Conference is expecting to raise a scholarship for a girl at Scarritt this year. I doubt not you will be successful in such a worthy effort. You will see from the Year Book that the amount for the scholarship is $300. Praying you may be successful in this great work, I am, yours sincerely, J. L. Cuninggim, President."

We have said we are sending out an S. O. S. call—and oh, may that Auxiliary member, who can, "listen in" and send relief! Jesus has answered every S. O. S. call you have ever sent him, and it cannot be that he shall signal you in vain.

What wonderful rescue work you can do for $300! How many lives you may lift from the sea of despair, how many shipwrecked souls you can bring to the Safe Harbor! What an opportunity to bring another laborer into his harvest who once sadly said, "The laborers are few." We do not know who you are—you who can anwer this call—but Jesus knows, and you must not fail him!

A MISSIONARY STORY AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

A missionary story told to eager and open-hearted children may have results far beyond our fondest hopes. It is a power for good not sufficiently appreciated and employed. Not long since I was associated in a Sunday school institute with one of our great missionaries from China. I said to him, "Will you not tell these teachers your estimate of the value of missionary instruction to children in Sunday school?"

His reply was something like this: "When I was just a small boy the circuit rider came to our church, and as was his custom on missionary Sunday, he told a brief story about the need of workers in China. I was deeply moved by the story and after the morning service went to my room in the back of the store where I was engaged as clerk for my brother. There I knelt and prayed, asking God to accept me and use me as a missionary. This was my first impulse and expression of desire to be a missionary."

The missionary referred to is none other than our own beloved Dr. W. B. Nance, who is giving his life as a teacher in Soochow University.

Let us not despise the day of small things. How simple is a little child! How commonplace is a two-minute story! And yet, measured by its influence, it may perhaps bring forth a greater harvest than a sermon of an hour's length.

Books and periodicals are crammed full of missionary stories. There are thousands of hungry minds eager to hear about Livingstone, Carey, Lambuth and others.

"Lovest thou me? Feed my lambs." So spake our Lord to Peter by the seaside. Dost thou not hear him say the same to-day to thee?—Missionary Voice.

INFLUENCE OF WOMEN.

If men hold the political power of society, women have mainly in their hands the more important moral power. There cannot be a moral community where they are licentious; there cannot be a refined society where they are neglected and ignorant. Upon them depend the earliest education and first impressions of their children. They regulate or materially influence the principles, opinions, and manners of their husbands and their sons. Thus the sound and healthful state of society depends on them. It is a remarkable historic fact that the wife of Oliver Cromwell endeavored to recall the exiled king; and all his children, save one, were loyal. We must believe they derived their feelings from their mother. Alfred, one of the most extraordinary men of his age, who rescued his country from her enemies by his courage, and by his wisdom and energy raised her from extreme barbarism to a high degree of civilization, in his youth was given to idleness and dissipation. His mother roused in him the ambition and virtue that made him the admiration of the world for a thousand years. Napoleon said that to the manner in which his mother formed him at an early age he principally owed his subsequent elevation. It was his opinion that the future good or bad conduct of a child depends upon the mother.

Mothers, while you are proud of this distinction, remember the responsibility it imposes on you. Be worthy of it.—Judge Hopkinson.

Dear Friends:
I want to tell you, as well as thank you, for what your preparation has done for my baby. He was a little, cross, crying baby, awfully constipated all the time, when I started to give it to him. But now he is a big, fat baby, and I cannot speak too highly of your preparation.
I know there is nothing that can come up to Mrs. Winslow's Syrup for a baby and I feel that it was a God-sent blessing to me. I will tell any mother what it has done for my baby.
With all good wishes to you and your preparation,

WANTS TO HELP OTHER WOMEN

Grateful for Health Restored by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Chicago, Ill.—"I am willing to write to any girl or woman who is suffering from the troubles I had before I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My back always ached, so I could not go about my housework, and I had other troubles from weakness. I was this way for years, then my sister-in-law took the Vegetable Compound and recommended it to me. In the time I have been taking it and it has done wonders for me. I keep house and am able to do lots of work besides."—Mrs. HELEN SEVCIK, 2711 Thomas St., Chicago, Ill.

Women suffering from female troubles causing backache, irregularities, pains, bearing-down feelings and weakness should take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Not only is the worth of this splendid medicine shown by such cases as this, but for nearly fifty years this same sort of experience has been reported by thousands of women.

Mrs. Sevcik is willing to write to any girl or woman suffering from such troubles, and answer any questions they may like to ask.

PROTRACTED MEETING AT BIG CREEK, MISS.

To the command, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth"; to claim the promise, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you," men, women, and children gathered together morning and evening, for several days, beginning Aug. 19, at the Big Creek church, Mississippi, to listen to the expositions of the Scriptures by their pastor, Brother Frank Bullard, and to work and pray for the salvation of souls.

The congregations assembled were divided into three divisions for the purpose of reading the Bible, praying for lost souls, and praising God in song.

A very profitable and interesting feature was the Bible reading contest. Each night a report was given, telling how many chapters were read by different individuals during the day, "And a little child shall lead them" literally came true, for the Sunbeam Band received the banner twice. It was interesting to see groups of boys and girls, as well as young people, with their Bibles under their arms, seeking shady places under the trees, where they could read their chapters.

The young people also took a lively interest in this contest. For when the question was asked, "How many have read over ten chapters?" it was refreshing to hear them answer (especially in this day of "flappers," dancers, card-players and so on) fifteen, twenty, twenty-five and some as high as fifty and sixty.

The ultimate result was that in five days, five thousand three hundred and sixty-six chapters were read. The average audience was between two and three hundred each day.

Believing that "the earnest, fervent prayer of the righteous availeth much," praying bands were formed among the parents, young people, and Sunbeams. Each morning at 9 o'clock each member would pray for the salvation of souls, the sick and afflicted, and wanderers away from the fold of Christ.

Another interesting feature of the meeting was the songs of praise rendered by individuals and the three choruses, Sunbeams, Young People's choir, and Adults' choir, under the direction of Mrs. Anna Ellis Dexter, of Grenada College, Grenada Miss.

The result was that God was pleased to bless Brother Bullard in his efforts to preach the gospel, which he did so effectively. He accepted the praise in song, and answered the earnest petitions of those who were praying by saving fourteen souls for the kingdom. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name."

years came to the altar, wept and prayed their way to God. As a result of this meeting we had ninety conversions and reclamations; six volunteered for life service; three bright boys heard and surrendered to a call to preach. and three fine girls offered themselves for missionary work. ## THE CLOSING CONFERENCE YEAR.

As we approach the close of the Conference year, it is natural that we should look back over the pages of church history so recently written and try to see in their right relations the facts of the record as they appear at this time. The best preparation for future progress is a knowledge of past achievements and an understanding of the present situation.

We shall miss our guess badly if the Conference year just drawing to a close does not prove to have been one of the most fruitful in all our history in the addition of members to the church. Reports of successful revival meetings have come, not only from all parts of the territory served by the Advocate, but also from all sections of the church at large. Preachers and people everywhere seem to have felt a divine compulsion to present the gospel of grace urgently and insistently to the unsaved; and that presentation has brought about a spiritual awakening that has led many thousands of people to dedicate their lives to God through membership in the church. Methodism has not lost its evangelistic fervor or its spiritual power.

The organized activities of the church have functioned efficiently and successfully. The Woman's Missionary Society has maintained, so far as we are able to learn, its magnificent record of steady progress; the Sunday schools have added to their equipment, increased the number of their trained workers, enlarged their fields of work, and added materially to their enrollment; the Epworth Leagues seem almost to have entered upon a new era of development, if we may judge by the interest shown in the formation of new chapters and by the attendance upon the various League Assemblies; the laymen have responded heartily to the leadership of the new General Board of Lay Activities, and encouraging progress has been made in organizing them throughout the church for more effective service. Other activities seem to have been correspondingly successful.

The figures are not yet available concerning the year's work of the Missionary Centenary and of the Christian Education Movement, but we have reason to believe that these great interests are still upon the hearts of the people. Business conditions have not been altogether favorable to the collection of large amounts of money, and this fact has necessarily affected the payment of pledges to these vital causes; but, all things taken into consideration, we believe the year has been a good one.

The special effort in behalf of our superannuated preachers has been kept steadily before the church, and Dr. Luther E. Todd, the General Secretary of the Board of Finance, reports a growing interest in this most appealing cause. With the active launching of the plans for the campaign at the approaching round of Annual Conferences there is every reason to believe that this special effort will be carried forward to a successful conclusion.

All our educational institutions are looking forward to satisfactory enrollments and unusually successful sessions. These institutions located within our own territory are well equipped to render the finest kind of service in the work they propose to do, and they are entitled to and deserve the loyal support of all our people. Grenada College, Millsaps College, and Whitworth College in Mississippi, and Centenary College and Mansfield College in Louisiana are equal to the best to be found anywhere in the church in their ability to take proper care of the students committed to their care. Their presidents, their faculties, and their courses of study are such as to command the respect and confidence of the entire church.

As we glance at what seems to be the situation at this writing, we feel that there is every reason to be devoutly thankful for what has been accomplished this year. The blessings of God have manifestly rested upon the labors of his servants, and we should rejoice in these marks of his favor.

THE LESSONS OF THE REFORMATION.

It is one of the tragedies of progress that lessons learned in great conflicts are soon forgot and have to be learned over. This sad tragedy is due, perhaps, to the fact that ideas tend to become static and institutions conventionalized in their forms of expression. What ought to be, and normally is, the most virile and dynamic thing in the world, personal Christian experience, can become so crystallized that variations come to be looked upon as departures from the faith, and conformity comes to be regarded as the mark of a pure conscience.

The Reformation is one of the historic revulsions against an order of things that had practically subjugated the individual to the domination of an established ecclesiastical authority. Divine grace was mediated only through official channels, and the interpretation of the Bible was fixed by ex cathedra utterances. The individual, as such, was completely submerged and the organization was wholly supreme.

Luther, one of those brave, vigorous spirits who stand out as providential leaders in a time of crisis, would not—could not—accept a formulary as the ultimate expression of faith, and he set himself to bring men again to a knowledge of the truth as it had been revealed in the Word of God and in the experience of the apostolic church. In doing so he planted himself unreservedly and unequivocally upon two fundamental propositions—the right of the individual of immediate access to God, and the right of the individual to interpret the Bible for himself. These propositions were, of course, in direct opposition to the established views that access to God could be had only through priestly mediation and that the interpretation of the Scriptures was committed solely to the church as the only custodian of the means of grace upon the earth. If we [illegible] the significance of the Reformation as an epochal movement in the history of [illegible], these were the basal truths upon which Luther took his stand, and it was in the establishment and maintenance of these that he accomplished his monumental work.

In confirmation of this view, we cite two apparently unrelated but vital facts, one in church history and the other in Christian experience. The first is the organization and development of the various Protestant denominations growing out of the Reformation, and the second is the present emphasis particularly by Methodism upon the doctrine of the witness of the Spirit. The first fact—the organization and development of the various Protestant denominations—could not have come to be but for the rejection of the sacerdotal idea of the ministry and the consciousness of the Divine approval as these denominations, though differing fundamentally in their interpretations of the Scriptures, engaged in the work of promoting the interests of the Kingdom of God upon earth; and the second fact—the witness of the Spirit—could not have become an established doctrine of the greatest body of Protestant Christians in the world if the validity of a personal religious experience were conditioned upon exact uniformity in the interpretation of the Word of God. In other words, if exact agreement in interpretation and exact similarity in Christian experience be the conditions of acceptance with God, then there can be only one denomination divinely approved, and only one type of experience that can receive the witness of the Spirit. The impossibility of maintaining such position is too patent to need argument.

History has been recorded to small purpose if we forget or ignore the lessons it has taught and if we reject the truths it has established through toil and stress.

CONFIDENCE IN THE CHURCH.

It is a sad thing that occasion should ever arise for a reassurance to the membership of the church concerning the purity of its doctrines, the soundness of its institutions, or the integrity of its leadership. In view, however, of the widespread dissemination of certain views and opinions that might cause a feeling of distrust to arise among some, we affirm our own belief that the church is true to its historical doctrinal standards, that its institutions are sound in the faith and worthy of all confidence, and that its officially chosen leaders are pure in motive, upright in conduct, well qualified for the positions they hold, and entitled to confidence, respect and honor. If there be any who are prepared to maintain the contrary, let them proceed as the Discipline directs and as the law of the church provides, else let hurtful agitation and controversy cease. There is too much evil in the world to be overcome for the forces of righteousness to dissipate their strength by internal dissensions.

WHAT ABOUT EVOLUTION?

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

What is the truth about the theory of evolution? The answer to this question depends upon what is meant by "the theory of evolution."

There are almost as may theories of evolution as there are men who consider the subject.

As evolutionary theories are related to the matter of existence and character of God, they may be classified as atheistic, agnostic, and theistic, and under each of these classes there are a number of sub-varieties which reflect every shade of opinion. When, therefore, it is said that a man is an evolutionist, nothing definite is affirmed about him. He may be an atheistic evolutionist like Haeckel, or an agnostic evolutionist like Darwin, or he may be an evolutionist who believes in nothing more than one who believes that creation proceeded on lines of orderly gradations from the lowest types of inanimate matter to the highest forms of animal. There is no saying what he believes until he defines for himself his position, and even then it is not possible in every instance to determine his belief very clearly. The minds of "theistic evolutionists," for example, are generally quite misty and their theory very indefinite, not to say incomprehensible.

The popular understanding of what is meant by evolution is the theory of Charles Darwin's "Descent of Man," resting on his dogmas of the "Origin of Species," "Natural Selection," and "The Survival of the Fittest." From the first, that theory was rejected by many of the most eminent scientists, and now a still larger number refuse to accept it. However, many continue to hold what is left of it after it has been qualified by numerous and material modifications.

No Christian man should be criticized adversely for refusing to believe it. To say the least of it, the facts of nature seem to be against it and common sense inclines one to reject it.

Moreover, as has been said, very many of the most eminent scientists repudiate it as utterly unscientific.

Here is what some of the scientists say about it:

Fleischman, who at one time inclined to accept it, says: "The Darwin theory of the descent of man has not a single fact to confirm it in the realm of nature. It is not the result of scientific research, but purely the product of the imagination."

Virchow says: "It's all nonsense. It cannot be proven by science that man descended from the ape or from any other animal. Since the announcement of the theory, all real scientific knowledge has proceeded in the opposite direction. The attempt to find the transition from animal to man has ended in total failure."

He considered that the teaching of it was dangerous to the State, and that it, therefore, should not be taught in the schools.

The eminent zoologists, Dewar and Finn, in their notable book, "The Making of Species," reject Darwin's theory of the "Origin of the Species."

Without making tedious quotations, it is enough to say that Sir William Dawson, Eimer, Gustav Wolf, De Vries, Reinicke, and many other present-day scientists are uncompromising opponents to Darwinism.

George Paulin, of Scotland, has published recently a very effective refutation of Darwin's theory in his work entiled, "No Struggle for Existence; no Natural Selection."

Another eminent Scotch physician, Dr. W. Hall Calvert, has published a book called "The Further Evolution of Man," in which he inflicts mortal wounds on Darwinism.

Now, why should a preacher of the gospel be denounced as narrow because he disagrees with Darwin and agrees with a far greater number of scientists? Is it not possible that his critics have been too swift to accept Darwin's unproved and unprovable doctrine of the Descent of Man? Are they too agreeable by half? Without knowing it some of them have taken positions which Darwin never held. Some preachers even have out-Darwined Darwin.

Now, in the gospel of Luke there is a genealogical chain which has at one end these words: "And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age, being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph, which was the son of Heli," etc.; and at the other end this verse, "Which was the son of Enos, which was the son of Seth, which was the son of Adam, which was the son of God."

Is it quite consistent to reduce to a myth Adam at one end of this chain and retain Jesus as a real historic person at the other?

How does this genealogy recorded by Luke, the beloved physician, compare with the following chain wrought out by Haeckel, the rank and atheistic follower of Darwin: "Monera begat Amoeba, Amoeba begat Syn-amoeba, Syn-amoeba begat Ciliated Larva, Ciliated Larva begat Primeval Stomach Animals, Primeval Stomach Animals begat Gliding Worms, Gliding Worms begat Soft Worms, Soft Worms begat Sack Worms, Sack Worms begat Skull-less Animals, Skull-less Animals begat Single-nostriled Animals, Single-nostriled Animals begat Primeval Fish, Primeval Fish begat Mud Fish, Mud Fish begat Gilled Amphibians, Gilled Amphibians begat Tailed Amphibians, Tailed Amphibians begat Primeval Amnicta, Primeval Amnicta begat Primary Mammals, Primary Mammals begat Pouched Animals, Pouched Animals begat Semi-Apes, Semi-Apes begat Tailed Apes, Tailed Apes begat Man-like Apes, Man-like Apes begat Ape-like Men, and Ape-like Men begat Men."

What a descent was there, my countrymen! Then I and you fell down and all of us fell down when bloody tails of ape-like ancestors flourished over us. Poor Adam! He never lived to tell of that day.

Well, for my part, I like Luke's chain better than Ernest Haeckel's chain. But every man to his own notion, if he can stand it.

Would it not be well for us preachers to give most of our time to preaching "Jesus Christ and him crucified," rather than too swiftly accepting a spurious theory and raving over it?

Darwinism or Anti-Darwinism profiteth little. What our times need is multitudes of human beings born again into the likeness and image of Christ.

What is within us and before us is of more importance than what is behind us, whether we have sprung from Adam or Apes. We should be more concerned for our duty and our destiny than for uncertain speculations about our origin. One thing is certain: We are here. Where will we be when we are no longer here?

Another thing is quite certain, and needs renewed proclamation: We are free agents, and determine our future by the manner in which we exercise this glorious, awful power of freedom.

Modern materialism grafted on Darwinism, if not developed from it, by such writers as Mr. Herbert Spencer, has infected our times with fatalism. Dr. Henry Van Dyke has said most truly: "No one who has looked steadily upon the face of modern life as it is reflected in popular literature can doubt that it is 'sicklied o'er' with the dark shadow of fatalism. It is evident in the writings of the learned and in the scribblings of the ignorant. Everywhere there is a tendency to explain the whole life of man as the product of heredity and environment."

All this materialism, super-charged with fatalism, has blunted the sense of moral responsibility in thousands, and reduced penitence for sin to a paralyzing sentiment of self-pity. Why should a man be responsible, or penitent, for his acts if he and his deeds are the inevitable results of an evolutionary process stretching back over incalculable ages along a line of an infinite regression of causes set in motion by some inconceivable force?

This fatalism generates in the minds of a certain caste a despairing pessimism, while at the same time it inspires in others a blind, easy-going optimism. If materialism be accepted, the pessimist has the advantage of the optimist logically.

To this point Dr. Van Dyke speaks most pointedly when he says: "Pessimism exudes from fatalism like sepia from the cuttle-fish. What could be more dispiriting than to doubt the reality of all effort, to deny the possibility of self-conquest and triumph over circumstances, to find heroism an illusion and virtue a dream? What could break the spring of life more completely than to feel that our feet are tangled in a net whose meshes were woven by our ancestors, and for them by tail-less apes, and for them by gilded amphibians, and for them by gliding worms, and for them by ciliated larvae, and for them by amoebae, and for them by God knows not what."

Against this benumbing fatalism, which Carlyle called the "gospel of dirt," the Christian ministry should sound loud and clear the glad, liberating redemption that the Christ has wrought for a sin-enslaved race, and who has said to all men: "If the Son, therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

TRAINING SCHOOL CREDITS, THE PRESIDING ELDERSHIP—AND ELSE.

My Dear Doctor Carley: Honest-to-goodness, cross my heart, I was finishing my work in the last session of the Training School at Junaluska before I heard that some of the bishops had passed the word along that any preacher too old to take credit at these Training Schools is too old to have charge of a district. I don't want the idea to get abroad that I am a candidate for the eldership simply because I have taken eight credits this summer. Of course, if, because of my eminent fitness for the office, the bishop should think it wise for me to undertake the management of a district, that would be another thing. But I am not a candidate—that is, not an avowed candidate.

Putting all jokes aside, I had the time of my young life this summer. Returning to the pastorate after twenty-four years in the army chaplaincy, I found that wonderful changes had taken place in the thought and in the practice of our ministry. It occurred to me that my best way to get in touch with current thought and method would be to take work in these Leadership Training Schools. My experience has justified my conclusion.

Junaluska is a great place to go. In addition to the unsurpassed scenery and climate, there is such an atmosphere of study, service and worship there during the season that one feels like a sort of "slacker" if he, too, is not doing something of the kind. Think of 396 persons taking 684 credits during the six weeks of the Leadership Training School—175 in the School of Missions, and 200 in Epworth League classes!

There is something of a thrill to a man who is the rise of twenty-seven, when he can get into classes with younger people, many of whom are fresh from college, and under regular college and university professors, and find that he can still do the work. My chief regret is that we did not have these glorious privileges thirty years ago. How it is that our younger preachers let these opportunities slip, I am unable to understand. I would stop a plow or sell a cow, anything, to make it possible to attend these schools.

But they have heretics! Sure. Any man who does not agree with me is a heretic. But I am not going to shut myself off from hearing men simply because they see things in a different way. Were I to do that, I should never hear another Baptist or a Presbyterian. I could be the rankest of Modernists as easy as I could be a Calvinist, or believe that immersion is the only mode of baptism, or "once in grace always in grace." I am none of these things, but I know people who are just as sincere as I am, and just as religious, and study their Bibles as much, and are just as much entitled to their beliefs as I am, who do believe these things.

The "Angel of the Church at Sardis" is back on the job with his good eye set on Nov. 7, and a consciousness in his heart that he is far short of the goal which he set for himself when he came here last November. He may have to fall back on the refuge of the lazy: "We are not responsible for results. Results are with God." My observation has been that God does his part when we do ours. If we are not able to show the results at Greenville, I shall always have a feeling that it was my failure and not God's.

We start a protracted meeting this week. Brother J. Tillery Lewis, our "beloved," will assist. He is a very busy man, but when one wants to accomplish something it is always wise to get a busy man on the job. He will get it done while a man who is not busy is getting started. It takes a lot of force to overcome the inertia of a man who is doing nothing.

Well, I have written you quite a document. When the itch for writing gets in the blood, it is hard to keep still. You have not had much from us this year, but you can never know the struggle that it has cost us to spare you. Standing as you do between the writers and your readers, you must feel like a kind of shock absorber.

With best wishes, I am,

Cordially and fraternally,

JOHN A. RANDOLPH.

THE GROUND OF UNITY.

By Rev. J. E. Godbey, D.D.

Religion is one. Its essential elements of faith and conduct are the same in all religious systems. The elements of faith are God, his will, sin, the conditions of pardon and deliverance from sin, right moral relations to God, with the correlated doctrines of a future life in happiness because of loyalty to God, or in misery because of rebellion against him.

The study of religion is directly psychological, not traditional or historical. The history of religion and its traditional expression only exhibit the unfolding of man's spiritual nature which moves pari passu with the enlargement of man's sphere of knowledge. As man's knowledge is increased, his vision is cleared, extends farther, and brings into view a large store of thoughts, accurately defined. With such increase of light the spiritual nature gains larger development, and finds a better vehicle for correct expression. But progress in spiritual development can no more reach a finality than can our concepts and statements respecting material things. Quotations of ancient authorities and creeds cannot be used to set an ultimatum before the soul which aspires to know God more perfectly. Concepts of religious truth are always plastic to the Teacher who guides into all truth.

God's law of spiritual life is one; and its better comprehension and observance lead to a larger life. Human nature is ever one. The conditions of its higher development remain. Ethics is not arbitrary or conventional. There is neither variableness nor shadow of turning in the way that leads to the highest good.

Because of these things there are essentials for the highest and best. The question, "What is that great good for the sons of men, which they should do under heaven all the days of their life?" persists. It is not idle or vain. We must seek the highest good. We must ever make progress toward it; and yet the most inspiring thought is that the human soul is on an immortal career and stops at no goal, but when one ascent is gained sees another more glorious, increasing aspiration to leave the things which are behind and reach forth to the things which are before.

But truth is the way to the conscious inheritance of good and union with God. How much knowledge is essential to spiritual life, we dare not say. Desire to know the truth is the only condition of matriculation in the school of truth. The door should surely be open to every one who desires to enter the Master's school for instruction. Truth is what we all seek that we may "have life and have it more abundantly"; and, in proportion as we grasp things essential and cast aside things not essential, we shall draw together them who "hunger and thirst after righteousness," and present to the world the body of Christ, possessing his mind and spirit.

When creed stands for essential truth, it is a thing to contend for. But when parties of opposing creeds, equally prove their desire for truth, and equally exhibit the fruit which proves them branches of the true vine, it is a very patent proposition that they are Christians by virtue of their agreements and not by virtue of their differences. To cast away their disputes is to be united on essentials. Essentials are not in speculations, but in the motives which make character.

Creed is fundamental; but what creed? No theory is fundamental. Theory is only an effort to explain a recognized truth. We live by proper adjustment to the light and heat of the sun; here we deal with facts. There are theories about light and heat, but we get along as well without the theories.

There is a theory about breathing, about digestion and the circulation of the blood; but even beasts adjust themselves to the facts. The desire to understand the methods and processes of life, physical or spiritual, and the orderly on-going of nature is commendable, for thus we advance into the open vision of God. But we do not begin life with theories; and it certainly requires but the least thought to see that when we come to things essential to life we shall find all theories eliminated, and that, in essentials, we stand on facts which a wayfaring man, though a fool, can read. To stand on these facts, allowing to men freedom in searching out their explanations, is the way indicated, if we hope ever to come in the unity of the faith to the stature of a perfect man.

It ought to be plain that nothing is fundamental in religion that brings to us no moral motive. This test would eliminate a good many articles from the creeds. If we could draw the line here, accepting as essential in faith only that which is essential to right moral conduct, and so relegate our reasoned conclusions and speculations to the realm of science and philosophy, where they belong, we would banish much of the confusion which arises from confounding religion with theology. An unlettered, ignorant man may be religious; he cannot be a theologian. A philosopher may be a theologian and not religious.

Creed is essential. The Bible states an essential and universal creed in these words: "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." But if we add to our creed theories about which people who are as wise and as good as ourselves differ, and hold it a test of sincerity and integrity to hold our creed against the world, what can we have but a church divided into battle camps, each sect claiming a divine commission to prove the other wrong? To hold that our differences involve things essential, is to present Christianity before the world in a hopeless attitude. To rally in opposition along the lines of creed, yet agreeing that those whom we oppose are Christians is to stultify ourselves. Mr. Wesley, who desired to have a league offensive and defensive with all Christian men, pointed the way to such a league on the part of all Christians of all denominations, in his motto, "In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things, charity." The Gospel which charges us "in lowliness of mind, let each esteem others better than himself," hardly justifies the swashbuckler who stands forth declaring himself confident that his denomination is the best in the world. The boast of denominational loyalty is very cheap. The devout seeker after truth is never a swaggering braggart.

But we all need to be at work, all the time at work. And the church member who cultivates his alloted field with all diligence is the servant who is ever ready for the Master's coming. Let him pray the while that after he has done what he can, other fields may yield a large harvest than his own denomination. Such an one is an Israelite in whom is no guile. Such an one is in agreement with all good men.

BISHOP AINSWORTH URGES PAYMENT OF PLEDGES.

My Dear Christian Friend: Sunday, Oct. 14, has been set apart as a Conference-wide day for the payment of all pledges that have been made to our great Christian Education Movement. We propose to make a clean sweep of everything that is due on these pledges at that time. I am therefore writing you this personal and urgent letter because of the deep feeling that I have about the importance of this day. Woodrow Wilson has lately said that our civilization is in grave jeopardy and that it will be lost unless every effort is put forth to save it spiritually. Essential among the important features of a saving program in our distracted country is the church's program of Christian education. We must maintain our Christian schools at any sacrifice. I am appealing to you, therefore, to do your best to see that your own pledge and that of every other person in your church is met on this appointed day. We want to make Sunday, Oct. 14, a red-letter day in the history of Mississippi Methodism.

With best wishes for you always, I am,

Sincerely your brother,

W. N. AINSWORTH.

THE MOTORMAN SPEAKS.

By Henry E. Hazard

There has always been a group of people accustomed to think of the laboring man as an extremely bellicose person, seeking every opportunity to launch selfish attacks upon the structure of society. They have assumed that the worker and the Sermon on the Mount were strangers to each other, even though Jesus of Nazareth was a mechanic.

Every once in a while, however, an incident of everyday life strikingly reveals the true situation. At the front end of a street car there was displayed the usual warning: "Safety First! The motorman's duties require his full attention. He is not allowed to talk to you while the car is in motion." Being a conscientious and dutiful employee, with a steady hand on controller and brake lever, he silently paid strict attention to piloting safely his human freight. But as one stood in the front vestibule of the car preparatory to getting off, he saw tilted in a prominent position on the window sill a small, neatly pen-printed card with the living message:

"'The Word of the Lord endureth forever.' (1 Peter 1:25.)

"'Ye must be born of water and of the Spirit.' so it says. (See John 3:5.)"

In his quiet, humble way, this evangelist of God gave expression in his simple sermon to the real voice of dignified labor, and who can estimate its influence upon the hundreds of passengers in all walks of life who were confronted with it?

"So shall my Word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."—Exchange.

CORINTH DISTRICT LEADS.

Since last November, or, rather, beginning with November and closing with August, the several districts in North Mississippi Conference have paid on the Centenary pledges more than fifty thousand dollars. Dr. Randolph is so timid I am sure he will blush when I record the fact that Corinth District leads them all with $11,640.96. But Elder Tucker comes smiling up, saying for Grenada District that the difference is small, for his folks have raised $10,279.17. So there they go, neck and neck; and if it were not for such live churches as New Albany, the figures might be changed. If Grenada, Oxford, Durant, and Winona get lively, they will put their district ahead. I dare any of the Corinth folks to dare the Grenada folks.

But just look! Yonder comes Tom Dorsey, looking very complacent as he shows the Aberdeen District figures, which say $9,177.18, which is fine. He could dare any district, and Aberdeen, Amory, and Tupelo would see him through. I surely would like to see these three elders in a Centenary race from now until Conference.

Dr. Pope boasts his banner and displays for Greenwood District $4,850.24, and Elder Felts, for the Greenville District, is by his side announcing $1,400. These fellows look wise and confident. They seem to be saying that they have two towns each, Greenwood and Drew, Cleveland and Shelby, which could put us in the lead. Then several more to add their contributions, which would make the delta lead by far when Bishop Ainsworth calls for reports at Greenville. These two elders may surprise the whole Conference. But they will have to do some very hard work to lead Mellwain, who shows the Columbus District right square in the middle with $6,950.10. Three ahead and three behind him. If his three largest towns catch his working spirit, they will show somebody something. And if Yeates and Turner undertake to beat Reeves, we will see some activity. I dare them to do it.

Our youngest elder, Brother Lewis, represents Sardis District with the figures $2,678.60. We have used the names of the elders in this pleasant manner of presenting the condition of this great Centenary cause, but each pastor does his work and bears his part of the responbility; as do the local treasurers. So, now let us get busy for one, two or three days, one of these weeks in October and see every person who owes on his pledge and secure what he is able to pay. Do not draw out the effort, but condense your work into a short, lively, careful canvass.

BEN P. JACO, Secretary.

A NEW BUILDING—MISSISSIPPI METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

Dear Brother Carley: I am sure you will be glad, and so will the friends of our Orphanage throughout the State of Mississippi be glad, to know that though we have not begun soliciting funds for our new building planned by our Board of Directors at our last meeting, several friends throughout the State have volunteered subscriptions, and several others have made cash contributions to our new enterprise wholly without solicitation from myself or anyone. To-day I am in receipt of a letter from a friend of many years' standing and a very great friend of this Orphanage, who subscribes $2,300 to the enterprise, and states that the money has already been placed in the bank for us when we are ready to begin building. Some of our pastors have already guaranteed that their churches will raise specific funds for our work, and have stated the methods they expect to pursue in securing money for this enterprise. I am sure you and our friends will be glad to know of this great practical interest in this movement.

Sincerely yours,

B. F. LEWIS, Superintendent.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Little Brother was writing an essay on "Lightning." An electric bolt from a surcharged cloud had recently wrought havoc on the premises. L. B. began by saying, "Lightning is very dangerous in a thunderstorm."

So we may say, the sun is very hot in summer time. Now, I am quite sure there has been no radical change in the seasons—the heat of summer and the cold of winter—in the last half century. There has been, and no doubt there will continue to be, "hot spells" and "cold spells" in the recurrent seasons. "What has been, will be," says the sage of Ecclesiastes, and there isn't a bit of use fretting about it. God is sending us winter's cold, infusing new life and vigor, checking too luxuriant vegetation, destroying insects, germs which are harmful to man, loosening the soil, breaking rocks and clods, and at times flinging a mantle of crystal snow over the bared bosom of mother earth, fair and pure as a sleeping child's vision of fairyland. Like as the pardoning grace of God covers the iniquity of man, so covers the snow the face of the earth. Yes, the winter has its lessons. Home, fireside, shelter, raiment of fur and wool have an added value and worth, when the north wind howls and the busy Frost King hangs icicles for decoration. Just thank God for such weather that brings such lessons of beauty and such reasons for gratitude, and be happy. Now don't get foolish and wear fur during summer, for this style is not wise, healthy or beautiful.

Now the vertical rays of the sun beam upon us. Officially we reported 103 degrees Fahrenheit yesterday. One lady who officially cooks for the household by virtue of being wife and mother, reported 112 degrees in her domain. Fine weather for the cotton planters. The boll weevil collapsed, fainted, and fell in the hot dust to die. He is having a hard time this year. The late spring discouraged him and the hot summer is killing him and his progeny.

Yet the street gangs, contractors, carpenters, brick masons, as well as the bill collectors, are still busy, and the good women are keeping the telephones ringing whenever the bell gets a chance between conversations. All the "lines are busy," commercially, religiously, industrially, and some more. In fact, the South does as much, if not more, work in summer than in winter. No use complaining about it, it is here to stay and always was and ever shall be to the end. Uncle Ben says, "the philosophy of the situation is the satisfaction of the output," and I believe him.

* * *

Bishop Candler asks, what is the matter with education? Possibly the viewpoint of one who has spent some years in the school room may help somewhat. Several factors which, to my mind, make for real education, are lacking or altogether absent from present-day methods.

The emphasis is placed on wrong things. "Sound mind in sound body," is a wise adage, coming to us from the best experience of the past. I would not be so unwise as to inveigh against plenty of good, wholesome play in our institutions of learning; but when students use our college leagues and clubs for the purpose of becoming star players in professional leagues, and make this their life calling, it is poor business. The gladiator in the red sands of the Roman amphitheatre belonged to a civilization now passed away. The emphasis was misplaced. Wise old Paul meant more than we sometimes understand when he said, "bodily exercise profiteth little." He wanted men to be intellectual and spiritual. He liked those Grecian games and used them in his masterful illustrations, but would hardly have deemed their exercise essential to the higher life. So with athlethics—their value is relative only to the development of real education; yet the trend is to make them an end, not a means. This is an abuse and not a proper use of their value.

Again, a false idea of culture—using the term in its better sense has caused a dislocation a misplacement of the great purpose of education. Education means vastly more than training for material things alone. It means knowledge, culture, taste, ability to understand and enjoy the products of master minds in the broad field of letters; to read and write one's mother tongue correctly and to know when this is done in accord with the best standards. An educated man never will drink of the Pierian spring and make a wry face, for to him the waters are sweet. Moreover, he will not desire to pollute its waters—he is convinced that there are some permanent standards in literature. In the great republic of letters, as in divine revelation, there are "things which cannot be shaken."

Furthermore, the standards of the leaders in educational movements often are false or vitiated. There is little or no appeal to the higher and nobler things of life. The motive not infrequently is largely necessary, to get, to have and hold for mere ownership or selfish purposes. Service and sacrifice for others are ignored or counted archaic. Real interest is manifested only in the growing of potatoes or breeding of pigs. The whole thing is projected on too low a plane. To have great men, large men, men of sterling purpose and action, there must be vision, a lofty ideal that begets enthusiasm and challenges the ignoble things to meet and defeat them. This idealism, often derided as impracticable, was the moving factor—the mightly impulse—that saved civilization in the recent war. Its cultivation is needed by the youth of our country to-day, and the leaders in education are recreant to a sacred trust if they fail in its development.

CHILDREN'S WEEK.

By Miss Juanita Roy, Assistant Elementary Superintendent.

The official date for the observance of Children's Week has been set for the month of October, preferably the third week, Oct. 14-21.

That this week may mean the most to each church, careful planning will be necessary. It is urged that the pastor and Sunday school superintendent assume the responsibility of appointing the committees suggested in the leaflets that have been sent them.

A committee on arrangements should direct all activities, and should be composed of the pastor, Sunday school superintendent, the heads of the elementary departments or the teachers of that age groups, and some interested and qualified parents. Four sub-committees of this group are recommended, viz.: on program, publicity, visitation, and forward step.

The program committee's chief concern will be in the careful selection of speakers for the parents' meeting, and in seeing that these speakers understand the entire plan and program. It will be their duty to place the leaflets on the designated subjects in the hands of the speakers they have chosen.

The visitation committee should consist of every elementary teacher in the Sunday school. They should visit every home represented in their classes, inviting the parents to the meeting and studying the home conditions of their pupils. If done in the right spirit, this visiting will be only the beginning of a better understanding and a closer co-operation between the home and the school.

The publicity committee should look after announcements, newspaper notices, posters and all other ways of getting the Children's Week idea before the people.

The forward step committee is to study the needs of child life in its particular church and be able to present to the parents' meeting some suggestive plans of action, to recommend some desirable forward steps that may be considered by the assembled group. When these plans have been suggested and the group has voted to adopt one as its particular project, the forward step committee is further charged with the responsibility of seeing that this plan is carried to completion.

This brief outline of the work to be accomplished shows the necessity for immediate action in the appointment of committees and the planning of the work.

Leaflets giving full details of this work for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, may be secured by writing to Conference Sunday school headquarters or to the Elementary Department, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

A NEW AND GLAD DAY FOR JUIZ DE FORA.

B. W. H. Moore.

Yesterday Bishop Dobhs was with us. He came with a committee of the Board of Education of Granbery to decide definitely about the location of the new Bible School dormitory. The site was selected for this building and ground will be broken on Aug. 2. This day marked also the laying of the corner stone of our new church here in Juiz de Fora. This will be a great day for Methodism here, the hopes of many years being realized in these two buildings.

Our new building is coming along nicely. Mr. Clay, the engineer, was here also yesterday, and was very much pleased with the progress. Bishop Dobbs seems greatly delighted with the progress. The building will be ready for opening in February, the beginning of the next school year. It will give us so many things that we need that we can hardly wait for it to be ready.

Our enrollment continues to grow, though I do not see how we can take more now. We have reached 340, with three more places promised. Only to-day a man came and asked if I could arrange for five more, all brothers. I do not yet see how it can be done, yet I greatly regret to turn them away. Next year we shall have many more places, though from the outlook now we shall not be able to receive all who will wish to come.

Every worshiper of Christ must in his measure make disciples and proclaim the undying commands and truths of Christ; and then with him, too, there shall tarry the presence of the Most Holy, as the sanction and warrant of his work—Liddon.

NOTICE.

Brethren of the Mississippi Conference, Preachers and Laymen: Your subscription made at Jackson, Miss., during the great Home Missions and Evangelistic Conference, conducted by Bishop Ainsworth, Jan. 16 and 17, is due. Your Board of Missions is needing money. Our [illegible] missionaries and Conference missionary [illegible] need money. This is rather a hard time of the year. If you can pay these subscriptions in full, do so; if not in full, pay part, and it will help to stem the tide. Let the elders and pastors call attention to this matter.

Remit to A. M. Broadfoot, Treasurer, Brookhaven, Miss.

Fraternally.

C. C. EVANS, President.

TO THE FRIENDS OF CENTENARY COLLEGE.

On Centenary College campus we are now erecting a new brick building to be used for classrooms, offices, and the library. The library is now being rearranged and will soon be removed to its new home.

We want to make the library commensurate with the new building, and the growing demands of the college.

Our friends can help us greatly in this matter if every pastor would go through his library and send us the books he does not need he would help Centenary and lighten his own freight too. Ask yourself the question: "How often do I look inside those works of fiction here on my shelves?" Now, we need just such books here at Centenary. Brother Pastor, will you not send me a list of the books you can spare and let me see if we don't need just those books? Especially do we want books recently published. Let me know what you have.

R. E. SMITH, Dean.

THE QUILL-DRIVER'S FATE.

By Arthur Mallison Shaw

A saint once came to Peter's gate
And meekly paused to learn his fate,
Wond'ring if in that happy place
His soul would be accorded space!

The dust of earth was on him still,
And in his hand, a writer's quill—
Typewriter corns on finger tips,
Ink-stains on robe and hair and lips.

Saint Peter came with stately tread,
And looked him o'er; then [illegible].
"How is't thou wear'st an author's frown,
Yet hast not won a martyr's crown?"

The saint replied, "I did my best—
The editors must tell the rest:
I'd have a crown I couldn't tote,
If they had publish'd all I wrote!"

Christianity is a religion which expects you to do things.—Japanese saying.

"THE LABORER IS WORTHY OF HIS HIRE."

(Editorial from the Literary Digest.)

In every crisis of national life the clergymen of America have stood in the forefront of patriotic endeavor; in every human crisis they have brought support and guidance and comfort to souls in desperate need. Now it is time to measure the work and the needs of the preachers, as men in other departments of work to-day are being measured, that their value may be rightly appraised and their needs fairly met.

The Preachers Deserve Better Pay.

The cost of living has greatly increased. Clothing, food, fuel, and all the daily incidentals that go to make up American life have gone up from thirty to a hundred per cent. And the loans and taxes for freedom's war are ever making deeper drives into the purse. Wage earners in every department of the nation's work have been demanding more income, and their demands have been recognized as just and necessary. Railroad men and miners, lumberjacks and shipbuilders, telegraph operators, automobile makers, and all the multitudes of skilled and unskilled laborers have been counted "worthy of their hire" and of higher hire. The United States government raised the wages of two million railroad workers alone, giving the poorest paid men an increase of forty-three per cent. Corporations and individual employers without number throughout the United States have taken similar action. Trade unions are standing back of their men and using pressure when necessary to gain for them the means to live their lives and do their work as Americans should.

Who stands back of the clergymen of America in these days of pressure? What great organization or compelling authority, what generous heart or spirit of fair play is winning for your minister or pastor or priest or rabbi the salary increase that will give him strength, courage, efficiency, and success in his vital and exalted work for the welfare of the nation and the kingdom of God?

Your pastor is not a cheap man nor an unskilled laborer. He has brought long, careful training to his task. He was chosen with scrutinizing care as to his qualifications, and he is being measured to-day by high and exacting requirements in the performance of his work. Carry that measurement to its just conclusion. What salary would you expect to pay to the trained man in business of whom such important work and expert ability were required? Set down on paper some of the qualities and duties you demand of your pastor and then judge their value.

The Preacher's Task Is Most Difficult.

He must be a man among men, a man of force, tact, and agreeable personality, a good mixer, a man of knowledge, wisdom, and authority, whose presence commands respect and whose word carries conviction. He must be able to influence men and women, win their confidence, kindle their enthusiasm, direct their energies, and organize their working powers. He must be full of sympathy, ready for consolation, a strength in weakness, a bright light in times of darkness, and a never-failing source of inspiration to the soul of his people. You expect all this of him.

Your pastor also must be the successful head and center of your organized church activities business, social, and spiritual. On occasion or as a regular part of his work he must be an expert money raiser. You engage him as your chief and leader, the general manager of your church, if not its actual creator or savior from its difficulties. You put upon him a burden and a responsibility you would never dream of intrusting to any cheap man in business.

Nor are those his greatest tasks. He must read and study and meditate and commune with the Infinite. He must understand men and know their work, their trials, their problems, their temptations, their deep inner feelings and aspirations, and the avenues of helpful approach to their sympathies and convictions. He must know something of history, science, and literature. He must be familiar with all social needs and institutions and methods. He must be able to interpret the Word of God with true spiritual insight and practical human application. He must stand before you in the pulpit on the Sabbath and deliver messages that search the soul, feed the mind, bring courage to the heart, make plain the path of daily life, and lift you nearer to heaven or bring heaven nearer to earth.

In these days also your preacher must proclaim the ideals and principles of America. He must stir the patriotism of his young men and send them with strong hearts and noble vision into the service of their country. He must pastor them in the camps and follow them with his letters and prayers as they go to fight. The government values him so highly that it has called thousands of American clergymen into active service to shepherd the fighting men and help them win wars. At home the government calls him to be its mouthpiece in its appeals to its citizens for every form of patriotic service or economy prescribed as needful for victory. You expect your pastor to be equal to such demands and to do your church credit when called upon for public addresses or community action.

Face the Facts and Be Square.—When you have listed all the qualities and services you ask of your pastor, make out the bill for the amount your church ought to pay for such a man and then move things to see that the church pays that bill. Never mind what has been done in the past nor what long habit has accustomed the church to believe can be done. The standing record of clergymen's salaries throughout this great rich nation is a pitiful shame and belies the real heart and fairness of the American people. The average salary of clergymen in ten of the largest denominations is only $793 a year. What trade or business would tolerate such conditions?

The minister of your church is a human being like the rest of us, and he is feeling the pressure of increased cost of living just as we do. But no government decree has raised his salary. No corporation or trade union stands back of him. He does not go on strike. He simply trusts his people and works faithfully for them seven days a week and many nights and struggles to look respectable and pay his bills and perform the miracles expected of him often for less than the salary of the young girl stenographer who teaches a class in his Sunday school or the wages of the man who lays the sidewalk in front of his church.

Among the more than two million readers of the Literary Digest are active and substantial members of thousands of churches throughout the United States. To them this frank appeal is made in keeping with the urgent needs of the day and the American spirit of justice and generosity. Give your minister a life. Take the initiative now and have his salary increased to an amount which will come nearer to the real value of his services and enable him to meet the increased cost of living. He is not demanding it, but he needs it none the less, and your own sense of right demands it for him. If his salary is $800, it ought to be made at once $1,200. If it is $1,000, it ought to be raised to $1,500. There is scarcely a church, large or small, anywhere in America that cannot increase its pastor's salary at least fifty per cent. Money never was so plentiful. More actual cash—gold, silver, and paper currency—is in circulation to-day than at any time in the nation's history, and there is a bigger share for every man, woman, and child. See that your pastor gets his fair share of your profits and those of every member in your church.

Back up the soldiers of America who follow the flag of France! Billions for them! Nothing is too much nor too good for our soldiers of liberty. But now remember that your minister is one of the bravest, worthiest soldiers of all. He is fighting for America, for the righteousness that "exalteth a nation." He is fighting for America as he puts his clean, valiant, patriotic spirit into the youth and into the men and women of his community and sends them out into the tasks of the week better fitted for America's call. He is fighting for the kingdom of heaven on earth to help win its victories over the archenemy of the human race, the destroyer of bodies and souls. He is the soldier of mercy to those in distress, the ever-ready soldier of service to those who need help. Back him up with whole-hearted support and a quick, generous increase in salary.

We have taken this page to speak for the clergymen of America in this supreme crisis of the nation's readjustment, because we know that they are the one great, devoted, indispensable body of faithful workers who have no spokesman. Only in this way has it seemed possible to reach the individual consciences and hearts of millions of men and women who in all our experience have never failed to respond to any just call.

SOUTHERN METHODISTS, GIVE ATTENTION!

The editorial quoted in the foregoing is the gospel of ministerial support. Whoever wrote it was truly inspired. It deals with a matter that is absolutely vital to the peace and prosperity of the nation. I am giving it place on this page in the hope that thousands of charges throughout our connection will increase the salaries of their pastors for the ensuing Conference year.

Also the ringing words of this editorial have a very definite appeal to the church to support the special effort for superannuate endowment. Not only should the preachers be paid adequate salaries while they are active in the service, but also provision should be made for their comfortable support when they are old and no longer able to serve in the active relation. The soul of Southern Methodism cannot be unspotted as long as she permits her worn-out preachers to exist almost as wastrels begging bread.

MEMORIES SWEET.

By Rev. N. S. Brackney.

As ships in sailing o'er the ocean meet,
And each with friendly voice the others greet,
Then pass from sight upon the rolling wave,
With memories sweet that each the other gave;
So we who meet on life's boundless sea
True Brother-Man, each unto each may be;
And though we drift ten thousand leagues apart,
Hold blessed memories that cheer the heart.

THE ELEPHANT'S KEEPER.

"Now is it time for the train?" demanded Paul. It was the tenth time that he had asked the question.

"In a few minutes now," answered his mother.

"Then I can go," Paul shouted.

"Now you may go," agreed his mother. "Don't get in daddy's way or in the animals' way either, will you?"

"I'll try not to," Paul promised. "But you can't tell when it's animals. I love animals. When I'm as big as daddy I'm going to be an elephant trainer just like him. I guess I could most manage an elephant now."

His mother laughed and kissed him. "Better leave it to daddy yet awhile. But I hope that you will grow into as brave and good a man as daddy."

"How can I learn to do that?" Paul asked.

"By being a brave, good boy. There's the whistle. Run!"

Without waiting for his hat, Paul dashed out of the house and down the street to the station to meet the train that was bringing the circus animals back to Bridgeport to their winter home. It was always to Paul the most exciting day of the year, not only because of the bears, and camels and elephants, but because it brought his father back to him.

The train came in and the animal cars were shunted down the track into the circus yard. No one was allowed in the yard except those that had the care of the animals, but every one knew Paul and he skipped in without any trouble.

"Where's my daddy?" he asked of the first man he met. It happened to be old Mike, who loved to tease.

"Sure, your daddy decided not to come back," he said.

"Isn't he ever coming back?" Paul asked.

"You ask him the next time you see him," Mike laughed. He was only teasing, for Paul's father had come on the train and was busy now with an elephant that needed his attention.

Mike went his way and Paul loitered through the yard. If his father had not come, there wasn't much fun in the animals.

One after another the beasts found their places in their homes, but there was no father for Paul. He had a queer, disappointed feeling in his throat as he turned to go home. He wanted very much to cry, but he remembered what his mother had said. If he wanted to be a brave man he must be a brave boy, and brave boys never cried. He tried to whistle but did not get on very well, and then as he turned a corner he stopped.

There, close to a flat car, all alone, lay Japhet, the biggest elephant, the one his father had most trouble with. Japhet looked as if he could make trouble now, for his trunk was moving in a cross sort of a way.

Paul ran back and called, but no one came. Every one was in another part of the yard.

Back to Japhet came Paul, his heart beating fast. Japhet was moving now, he was going to get up, and once on his feet without any one to control him, he would go on the rampage. He might hurt somebody.

"O daddy, daddy! where are you?" cried Paul. "It's your elephant. They'll blame you if he hurts any one. Lie down, Japhet!"

Japhet recognized Paul, for he had often seen him before, but he wasn't going to lie down for a word from a boy. If any one wanted him to lie down, let him give the proper signal by tapping his right ear. He made another move to get up.

Paul knew the signal for lying down, but Japhet's big ear was far out of his reach. There was no long stick about that would reach so far; only a tiny twig that Paul picked up.

"What can I do?" he cried. "It's daddy's elephant and daddy isn't here, so I've got to keep Japhet from going on the rampage."

Then as Paul saw how close Japhet lay to the flat car he had a sudden thought. Still holding his twig, he scrambled up on the car and with a running jump landed on the big elephant's back. Japhet paused in astonishment at this unexpected visitor, and Paul ran up the broad back as if it were a hill and came down flat astride the elephant's neck.

Then Japhet began to rise and Paul thought that he was going to have a horseback ride on a rampaging elephant. He looked out anxiously for help, but no one was near. Paul leaned forward and with his switch gently tapped the old elephant's right ear.

Old Japhet stood stockstill a moment on his knees, and then obeying the order that he knew from his master's son, he sank slowly down again. He was not going to rampage this time.

Paul sat on his high perch until some one came running. It was his father, who had just found out that no one had looked after Japhet, and who came expecting to find the old elephant doing his worst. When he saw Japhet lying like a meek lamb with Paul on his back he gave a shout of joy and held out his arms to his son. Paul gladly slid down into them.

"How did you get up there?" he asked Paul.

"From the car," Paul said. "He was going to rampage and you weren't here, and I had to reach his ear. He minded me, didn't he? But I'm glad you came, daddy, for he's awful high up."

His father held him very close. "You're your father's son," he said. "It's the pluckiest thing I ever heard of a kid doing."

Japhet was put in his own safe place then, and Paul and his father raced home to his mother.

"Here's the new elephant keeper," his father told her, "and I tell you what, he's the bravest man in the whole bunch of us."—By Helen Ward Banks, in the China Christian Advocate.

"TIME OUT."

Knew Their Places.

A judge once said to a grand jury: "Gentlemen, you will please take your accustomed place in the court." Ten of them crowded into the dock.—Exchange.

The Embarrassment of Ignorance.

"How kind of you," said the girl, "to bring me these lovely flowers. They are so beautiful and fresh. I think there is some dew on them yet."

"Yes," replied the young man in great embarrassment, "there is, but I'm going to pay it off to-morrow."—Staley's Journal.

A Cautious Reply.

In New York a man unmistakably of country origin was knocked down in the street by an automobile. A crowd instantly surrounded him.

"Are you hurt, my friend?" asked a kindly man who assisted the stranger to arise.

"Well," came the cautious reply, "it ain't done me no good."—Exchange.

Expensive Cream.

"Mother, is daddy rich?" the little girl asked.

"Yes, very rich, Mary. He is worth two millions and a half."

"What in, mother?"

"Oh, he values you at one million, me at one million, and baby at half a million."

Mary thought a minute, then said, "Mother, I wish he'd sell the baby and buy us some ice cream."—Exchange.

A BIG RISK.

The youth seated himself in the dentist's chair. He wore a wonderful striped silk shirt and an even more wonderful checked suit. He had the vacant stare that often goes with both.

"I'm afraid to give him gas," the dentist said to his assistant.

"Why?"

"Well," replied the dentist, "how will I know when he is unconscious?"—Baptist Boys and Girls.

THE GREATER CENTENARY COLLEGE.

A visit to Shreveport, La., last week gave us an opportunity to see what has already been accomplished at Centenary College and to see, also, what is going on in the way of improvements. What we saw is expressed in the caption of this article —"The Greater Centenary College."

The first thing that attracted our attention as we approached the campus was a new brick building in process of erection—the Fine Arts Building. This building is the first of a series of three ultimately to be erected, all joined by colonnades, which will embody all the best features of modern college architecture and at the same time present a most imposing appearance. The new building will be used at present for offices, class-rooms, and the library.

There was noticeable all over the campus an air of activity; and the hum of industry could be heard from every direction. The officers of the college—president, secretary, bursar, dean, with their assistants—were all busy with preparations for what will undoubtedly be the greatest opening Centenary has ever had, on September 25. The authorities would not make definite prediction as to the enrollment at the opening, but, from what we saw and heard, we shall not be surprised to hear that the number was not far from four hundred—possibly more than that.

We had the privilege of meeting some of the members of the faculty who have already arrived, and of learning something of the records of others who are yet to come. Basing our opinion upon what we saw and learned, we do not hesitate to say that the Centenary faculty is the equal of any that can be found in any Southern college. The teaching force will consist of more than twenty people—professors and assistants.

Extensive grading work is being done on a part of the campus that will ultimately be used for the athletic field. The present athletic field could hardly be improved upon, but its site will be needed for buildings in the future. It may be a surprise to others, as it was to us, to learn that the seating capacity of the grandstand at present is approximately 10,000—and if the attendance at the games last year is any indication, every seat will be needed this year. The peerless "Bo" McMillin has proved to be as great a football coach as he was a player.

Shreveport counts Centenary College as one of its greatest assets, and it is loyal in its support, both with money and patronage. In fact, it is due largely to the interest and liberal contributions of a group of local citizens that the college is now upon a financial basis that makes it one of the best-endowed colleges of the church, only one or two others having a larger productive endowment. President George S. Sexton, who is literally investing his life in the institution, is looking forward to still greater resources to enable the school to do still greater work.

The Methodists of Louisiana have it within their power to make Centenary an institution that will rank with the best in the nation. What they need to do—what they must do if they would realize this wonderful possibility—is to supply additional funds for endowment and equipment. Shreveport has done magnificently, and it will do more; but Centenary belongs to the Methodists of the whole State, and they owe it to themselves, to Shreveport, and to the college to show that they are vitally interested in the welfare of their own. We believe they will do this very thing.

A NEW BUILDING FOR THE MISSISSIPPI METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

The Board of Directors of the Mississippi Methodist Orphanage, at a recent meeting, unanimously authorized the tearing down of the present main building and the erection of a new one to take its place.

This decision was based upon the fact that the present building has deteriorated to such an extent that it has become actually unsafe for occupancy, and to repair it would cost so much as to make the erection of a new building a matter of real economy.

The new building will be a modern, substantial, fireproof brick structure, thoroughly adequate to the needs of the institution. The general plans have been accepted, and as quickly as possible the work of building will begin. The approximate cost of the new building will be $150,000.

In providing funds for the new building, the Board of Directors will not put on a "drive," but will depend upon generous offerings on Work Day, Thanksgiving Day, and Christmas, with personal contributions from friends throughout the State. We have not the slightest doubt that this method will be successful, substantial response already having been made, as will be seen from a communication in another column from Rev. B. F. Lewis, the Superintendent.

We heartily commend this forward move on the part of the Board of Directors of the Orphanage. We feel sure their confidence in the responsiveness of Mississippi Methodism to the appeal they are making in behalf of the orphans will be abundantly justified.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. W. W. Perry writes from Rochelle, La., that all goes well with him and that he will be able to report a good year at Conference.

Press dispatches indicate that all our church schools that have had their openings have begun the new session under unusually happy auspices.

Mr. Hardy Sims Williams, son of Rev. John L. Williams, has been appointed assistant in pharmacy, Tulane University, this city.

The men's midweek union prayer meeting at Greenville, Miss., seems to have taken on new life. Hon. Percy Bell is active in the work of this weekly service.

Rev. W. M. McIntosh, general evangelist, will begin a tent meeting at Franklinton, La., next Sunday. Great preparations have been made for the meeting by the pastor, Rev. L. W. Cain.

Thirteen young people are attending college from the bounds of the Madison charge, Mississippi Conference, Rev. Percy Vaughn, pastor. Seven of them are attending our church schools.

The work at Bolton, Miss., prospers under the leadership of Rev. H. M. Johnson. Indications now are that all columns will be reported "level" at Conference.

Sister T. S. Randle requests us to say to her Louisiana friends that her address is now Yoakum, Tex., care the Fire Department. She is in feeble health, but strong in faith.

A correspondent from Porterville, Miss., speaks very kindly of Rev. H. J. Oakley, our pastor there, and of the fine revivals that have been held on the charge.

We regret to learn that the health of Mrs. S. A. Steel, wife of the "Knight of the Pelican Pines," requires a change of climate and that she and Dr. Steel will make their home at Brownwood, Tex., for awhile.

Rev. R. V. Fulton, of the Louisiana Conference, and Mrs. Pauline Gilliland were married at the home of the bride, on Sept. 2, Rev. J. Lambuth Evans officiating. The Advocate extends all good wishes.

The Macmillan Company announces a new edition of Fairbairn's "The Philosophy of the Christian Religion," to be sold at $2, and a new edition of Cadman's "The Ambassadors of God," to be sold for $1.50. Both of these are great books.

According to press dispatches, the Board of Missions, at its recent meeting to consider the matter, selected Nashville, Tenn., as the place for the relocation of Scarritt Bible and Training School.

Any community desiring to secure an experienced Methodist physician, who has served six or more years in the army, may write the Advocate for the name of one who is seeking a desirable location.

Dr. Marvin T. Haw, presiding elder of the St. Louis District, St. Louis Conference, was transferred to the Missouri Conference at its recent session and appointed pastor of the Broadway Methodist Church, Columbia, Mo.

Miss Pauline Wynn, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. R. H. Wynn, of Shreveport, La., left last week for Boston University, where she will enter upon a two-year course of graduate work in Religious Education.

Mr. Angler B. Duke, who was drowned on Labor Day at Greenwich, Conn., left a bequest of $250,000 to Trinity College, Durham, N. C. He also left bequests amounting to $60,000 to other Methodist institutions in North Carolina.

Rev. J. Lambuth Evans, the pastor, reports that the meeting being conducted by Rev. George Tucker at West Monroe, La., has assumed large proportions. Large congregations are attending the services morning and night, and every indication points to a gracious revival.

Miss Hester Williams, daughter of Rev. John L. Williams, and Executive Secretary of the Louisiana Child Finding and Home Society, Inc., has been granted a year's leave of absence for further preparation in social and medical welfare work.

Dr. Bradford Knapp, dean of the College of Agriculture at Fayette, Ark., has accepted the presidency of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Oklahoma. Dr. Knapp is one of the great leaders in agricultural education in the United States.

We learn from the St. Louis Christian Advocate that Mrs. Elizabeth Bulla, mother of Dr. C. D. Bulla, presiding elder of the San Francisco (Calif.) District, died at her home in Albany, Mo., on Sept. 4. She had lived 101 years, 5 months, and 12 days. She had been a member of the Methodist Church more than eighty years.

Rev. and Mrs. Gayle C. Beanland sailed from New York on Sept. 15 for France, where they will remain for six weeks studying the French language before returning to their missionary post in Africa. Mrs. Beanland is the daughter of Rev. W. M. Williams, our pastor at Purvis, Miss.

Rev. W. M. Young writes from Batesville, Miss.: "Bishop W. N. Ainsworth will dedicate the church at Batesville on Sept. 30. Our church here is a credit to this people, built under the administration of Rev. J. T. Lockhart. This year we have built one of the most splendid parsonages this pastor has lived in." Congratulations!

Rev. W. R. Lott, our pastor at Holly Springs, Miss., assisted Rev. W. W. Bruner and Rev. W. R. Liming in a community tent meeting in August at Marianna, Miss. There were nineteen additions to the membership of the church on profession of faith.

Rev. W. E. Thomas, formerly of the Louisiana Conference, but now Conference evangelist of the Louisville Conference, is engaged in a meeting with Rev. William Schuhle, at Morgan City, La. Large congregations are attending the services and much interest is being shown in the meeting.

In the appointments at the recent session of the Kentucky Conference, we notice the following that will be of interest to some of our readers: Rev. Roy H. Kleiser, to Park Church, Lexington; Rev. U. G. Foote, to First Church, Winchester; Rev. W. O. Sadler, transferred to the Louisville Conference.

The officers and teachers of the Sunday school at Holly Springs, Miss., have in hand blue prints of a proposed Sunday school annex to the church. The church at Holly Springs is determined to provide adequate facilities for the growing school. When the building is erected, the entire church can accommodate a school of 600, graded in every department.

Rev. and Mrs. J. G. Galloway, of Bay St. Louis, Miss., spent last week visiting relatives and friends in Jackson, Canton, and Woodville. Brother Galloway preached to our congregation at Woodville last Sunday. We have it on good authority that he never preaches without giving the people something worth while to think about.

The Cleveland (Miss.) Holiness Camp Meeting closed on Aug. 15, after being conducted the usual ten days. The preaching was done by Rev. C. M. Crossley, of Hattiesburg, Miss., and Rev. O. C. Seevers, of Kentucky. The visible results were not as great as expected, but the meeting was a profitable one. Brother M. J. Beevers, secretary, furnishes us with this information.

Mr. Emile Mayer, of Mayersville, Miss., the Jewish proprietor of the meat market at that place, has supplied the Methodist preachers with meat for the past forty years without charge. In the aggregate, this generous kindness on his part represents a considerable amount of money. Mr. Mayer is advanced in years now. He is not a rich man in this world's goods, but he enjoyes the affectionate esteem of those of whose welfare he has been so considerate.

From the Richmond Christian Advocate: "Dr. F. N. Parker, of Emory University, who supplied the pulpit of Epworth Church, Norfolk, while Dr. Moore, the pastor, was away on his vacation, has returned to his home in Atlanta. Dr. Parker greatly delighted the Norfolk Methodists with his preaching. He is one of our leading preachers, is the son of a bishop, and was himself elected bishop in 1918, but declined the office."

Rev. A. E. Barrett writes from Peason, La., that he was recently assisted in a fine meeting at that place by Rev. Leon I. McCain, of Lafayette, La. There was a fine spirit of cooperation among the various denominations of the town. More than twenty members were added to the Methodist Church, and several to the Baptist Church. Brother Barrett will be assisted in another meeting soon by Rev. W. E. Thomas.

Rev. L. L. Roberts writes: "I am writing a line that the friends of Rev. W. W. Simmons, a superannuate member of the Mississippi Conference, may know that he is sick in the hospital here at Columbia, Miss., and that he asks that they remember him at a throne of grace. He is getting along very nicely, and hopes to be able to return to his home in Gloster, Miss., before long." We are sure his brethren will remember Brother Simmons tenderly in their prayers.

From the Columbus District Bulletin: "First Church, Columbus, has just completed the work of painting and decorating the interior of the main auditorium. They have re-plastered, painted, put in a new lighting system, and put high grade linoleum on the floor. The reopening of the auditorium will take place Sunday, Sept. 16, at which time Dr. W. L. Duren, of New Orleans, a former pastor and presiding elder, will preach morning and night. This work will cost between six and seven thousand dollars. There will be no more attractive auditorium in our Conference when finished."

A note from Rev. W. M. Williams, our pastor at Purvis, Miss., bring the sad news of the critical illness of his mother, Mrs. F. M. Williams, widow of the late Rev. F. M. Williams, of the Mississippi Conference. Sister Williams is past ninety-two years of age, and a recent fall in which she fractured her hip makes it almost impossible to hope for her recovery. She is at the home of her daughter in Waynesboro, Miss., where she is tenderly ministered to by her family and friends. She is ripe in her Christian experience and is ready for her eternal home. Our deepest sympathy goes out to her family in this time of anxiety.

We learn with deep sorrow of the death, at her home in Pocahontas, Miss., of Mrs. Myra A. Baker, wife of Brother W. J. Baker, on Thursday, Sept. 13. The funeral services were held at the Methodist church in Pocahontas, conducted by her pastor, Rev. Percy Vaughn, assisted by Rev. J. A. Applewhite, of Jackson. Mrs. Baker had reached the ripe age of seventy-five years. She had been a member of the Methodist Church for more than forty years. Her home was a model of Christian hospitality, and she and her family delighted especially in the entertainment of Methodist preachers. The editor of the Advocate has happy recollections of visits there and of many kindnesses received at her hands. She is survived by her husband and several children, to whom we extend sincere sympathy in the hour of their great sorrow.

BREAD UPON THE WATERS.

By Bishop Charles Edward Locke.

Some years ago in the thrifty town of Penaranda, Philippine Islands, in the fertile province of Nueva Ecija was an arrogant Roman priest who determined to destroy all the Holy Bibles and persecute all persons whom he found in possession of the sacred Book. With mediaeval fury he carried on a reign of intimidation and terror. With bitter imprecations he denounced the Book and vindictively pursued his relentless inquisition.

A devoted old man who possessed a Bible, and who had drawn daily comfort and consolation in his old age from its holy pages, wrapped his dear treasure in a red cloth and hid it in a cavity under the edge of the river bank, intending to leave it in this place of safety until the storm of persecution had subsided.

But a heavy rain came and the river overflowed its banks, and in its swollen tide it carried away the red cloth and its precious contents.

The old man's heart was broken, but oh! it was bread cast upon the waters. Twelve miles down the stream a frivolous comedian who spent his life in debasing habits and his excellent talents in poisoning the character of others, saw the red cloth and rescued it from the swift current to find to his great surprise that it contained the Holy Book which was being maligned by its angry enemies.

He began to read the wonderful Book which seemed to him to come from heaven. He pondered over its marvelous truths and became acquainted with its gracious Christ, until, at length, he found in Jesus Christ his personal Redeemer and Friend; and his whole character was transformed.

The entire course of his life was changed. He gave up the stage for the pulpit; he dedicated his fine talents to the service of Christ, and for ten years he has been an eloquent herald of the Good Tidings of salvation from sin and faith in Jesus as the world's Saviour. He is now an ordained preacher of the gospel and a successful minister in the church of Christ.

Was it not, indeed, bread cast upon the waters, which was found after many days?—New York Christian Advocate.

THE LITTLE THING.

A strong worker was sawing wood, when suddenly his saw collapsed. The wooden frame fell to the ground in three pieces, together with the steel crosspiece and the saw blade. The sawyer wasted no time, but began peering about on the ground amid the sawdust. His search was at last rewarded by finding a steel pin about an inch long. This, when passed through holes in the saw blade and the wooden frame, held the whole together, and the work proceeded briskly. The saw and the sawyer depended for efficiency upon that inch of metal. Indeed, efficiency in any task is likely to depend upon some little, unnoticed factor, like politeness or promptness or neatness or health.—Selected.

It is the thought of God's greatness that, strangely enough, often shakes our faith in his goodness, his care for us personally. We think of his power and his glory and cry with the Psalmist: "What is man, that thou art mindful of him?"—Selected.

EDWARD EVERETT GRAVES was born in Jefferson County, Miss., April 6, 1854, and passed from earth to his eternal reward Aug. 9, 1923. He leaves a wife, Mrs. Ida Mattingly Graves, and five children, Robert S. Graves, of Winnsboro, La.; Mrs. Helen G. Latiolais and Mrs. Jennie G. Slocumb, of Shelby, Miss.; Adrian W. Graves, of Lynchburg, Va., and Mrs. Margaret G. Connor, of Baton Rouge, La. The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. R. F. Harrell, of Tallulah. Interment was in the Natchez cemetery, Aug. 10, the Masonic Order officiating.

Brother Graves was a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Masonic fraternity, and a long-time member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Waterproof, and a member of the official board.

E. E. Graves was confined to his room for three years, and to his bed most of the time. He bore his affliction and long illness without a murmur and, as he approached the end of his earthly life, requested not to pray for him to get well, but to depart at the Father's will.

I have never seen a more devoted companion than Sister Graves, who stayed by his bedside both day and night through all of his long illness.

Brother Graves will long be missed in this community and in the church life of Waterproof. May the Lord's blessings be upon the sorrowing loved ones.

His pastor,
H. W. CUDD.

MRS. TENNIE HUDSON HARRELL was born May 10, 1852, at Morton, Miss., and died at Shreveport, La., Aug. 27, 1923. She was married to T. J. Harrell, Sept. 1, 1900, and in 1916 her husband passed to his reward. Sister Harrell united with the Methodist Church in her childhood days, and continued her membership with the church to the end of her pilgrimage. She was a great lover of the Word of God, which she read daily and fed upon it as food to her soul. She was a subscriber to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for years, and read it regularly with the intensest interest. She loved the church and, though unable to attend during her last years, she kept up with its movements and progress. Toward the end of her life, she often had visions of her future home, and repeatedly expressed a longing to be there with her loved ones. Her funeral services were held at the home of her niece, about five miles from Shreveport, and her remains were laid away in the Jewella Cemetery.

Thy glorious warfare's past;
The battle's fought, the race is won,
And thou art crowned at last."

BISHOP CANNON'S PROTEST.

All honor to Bishop Cannon for his very timely and courageous protest against Dr. Shackford's action and the radical teachings concerning the Bible at Junaluska, and thanks to you, Mr. Editor, for the prominence given it in the columns of the Advocate! How long is the church going to stand by and watch the General Sunday School Board go on in such high-handed way; advancing all sorts of destructive criticisms of the Old Book, both in the Sunday school, literature and from the platform, without making a serious complaint? I got my church here at Winona to raise money and send one of our fine young ladies up to Junaluska this summer to take the Sunday school training course. Along with the other class-room work, she, with the others, was required to take Dr. Bland's lectures in the auditorium and take notes thereon. Now, get this: almost the first question she asked me after she returned home and was reporting her trip, etc., was if I believed the Bible as a whole! Well, it shocked me, for I readily guessed what had happened. She went on to tell me that they didn't believe it except in part at Junaluska, and that not only had Dr. Bland said very radical things about it from the platform, but that Dr. Shackford and the rest seemed to hold the same views. I happen to know that this young lady never questioned the integrity of the Scriptures when she went up there; it was to her a sacred and trustworthy book, and she never heard any one question it or teach any radical views concerning it until she went there to Junaluska. She came back full of enthusiasm over the beauty of Lake Junaluska and surroundings and the fine fellowship she had with the other young people, but she failed to enthuse over the course of study and lectures she had heard—and I know she took the course conscientiously, for she was given credit for her work. I fear now that we have done that young lady more harm than good by sending her where she has had her mind poisoned by adverse criticisms of the Bible, which she had held so dear; and that, too, in a place owned and—supposedly—controlled by the Methodist Church! And this thing is happening every summer to scores of our young people who are going there to take courses for better Christian service. One trembles as he looks into the future and speculates as to the outcome of all this. Rationalism could hardly find a much better method for its widespread and speedy dissemination over the church than this one.

Now that Bishop Cannon has gone out on the field in person and opened the fight, the thousands of Southern Methodists who are heartily in sympathy with his views ought to raise their voices and stand solidly behind him. It will be too late after awhile if we continue to take the tolerant attitude that we have in the past.

If you haven't done so already, be sure to read the Bishop's courageous and unanswerable protest in the Aug. 23 issue of this paper!

The Vicksburg District Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society will be held at Rolling Fork, Miss., Sept. 28 and 29. The program will embrace the afternoon and evening of the 28th, and morning and afternoon of the 29th.

We are urging that every Auxiliary in the District be represented, and that we be much in prayer for a spiritual blessing. The different Auxiliaries will please send names of their delegates to Mrs. Earle Perry, Rolling Fork, Miss., and also to me at 2140 Washington Street, Vicksburg, Miss.

REPORT OF REV. CHARLES ASSAF FOR THE MONTH OF AUGUST.

I have visited this month Silver Creek, Magnolia, Rankin Street, Galilee (located at Thomasville, Miss.), Gibson Memorial, and Port Gibson, in the Mississippi Conference. I also visited Williamsville and Kosciusko, in the North Mississippi Conference.

We had good services at each place. Many of the folks who were members of the church consecrated themselves to the services of God. Sixteen joined the church as a result of the services held, and eleven children were baptized. A committee was appointed to build a church at Williamsville.

All the people have been kind and received me well, for which I thank the Lord. Brethren, pray for me. Many people are in need of the Gospel. The Lord makes me happy and uses me for his glory.

Yours in the work,
CHARLES ASSAF.

FROM TEXAS AVENUE, SHREVEPORT, LA.

Dear Dr. Carley: We have just closed our revival meeting that was conducted by Rev. George Tucker.

This meeting was under the management of the Texas Avenue Methodist Church and the Mangum Memorial Church, but all the other Methodist churches called in their Sunday night and mid-week services.

The meeting was held under a tent 100x130 feet. The congregations ranged from 800 to 3,000. The meeting began on Aug. 12 and closed on Sept. 2. As a result, some 250 people professed conversion or reclamation. We are not yet able to report as to church members, but all of our churches will receive new members.

Brother Tucker begins a meeting on Sept. 9 with Brother J. L. Evans at West Monroe.

Fraternally,
R. S. WALTON.

THE TROUBLE WITH THE TITHE.

Granite rock is an enduring foundation for temples and for palaces, but it makes an indifferent grindstone. When the tithe is pressed into a financial campaign, in order to turn money into depleted church treasuries, or provide for a missionary budget, it is an act of violence against the whole structure of Christian doctrine. This primal law of acknowledgment, whose purpose it is to denote the divine sovereignty, has been lugged into finance committees as "the tithing plan, and its comparative merits discussed with "the subscription plan," and "the apportionment plan," and "the pew-renting plan." It is the history of every fundamental doctrine that its friends have been its enemies. That the tithe still abides and increases in strength, in spite of petty notions concerning it, is proof of its inherent vitality. When a minister preaches the tithe for the sake of the budget he has unwittingly cheapened a great message, which therefore may be defeated by its own irreverence. It is for this reason that many high-minded though undiscerning ministers will not preach the tithe at all, and many high-minded laymen will not accept it when they hear it preached. High truth, for revenue, awakens suspicion.—Religious Telescope.

Rest is not quitting the busy career;
Rest is the fitting of self to one's sphere;
'Tis loving and serving the highest and best;
'Tis onward unswerving and this is true rest.

SUFFERED MANY YEARS WITH FEMALE TROUBLE

PE-RU-NA

LIKE A GIFT FROM HEAVEN

Mrs. Katie Scheffel,
R. F. D. No. 5. Lowell, Ohio

"I have been suffering for years with female trouble. Was operated on five years ago. It relieved me some but I did not regain my strength. Two years later was taken sick and bedfast several months. I treated a long while without much relief. I was discouraged, my mind affected, so nervous I could neither eat or sleep and unable to do anything.

We tried several doctors but one after another gave up my case as hopeless. Finally a good friend advised me to try Pe-ru-na. I did. It relieved me almost immediately. Your medical department said I was suffering from chronic catarrh of the system. I began taking your medicine in March, 1914, and continued until August. I took ten bottles of Pe-ru-na and three bottles of Man-a-lin and felt like a new person. Your medicine seemed like a gift from Heaven. It was like coming from darkness into light.

We have used your medicine since for coughs, colds and grip with good results. We will always keep it on hand. I weigh twenty-five pounds more than I ever did, eat and sleep well and can do a good day's work. Everybody says I look fine. Even the doctors are surprised. I cannot thank you enough and will always recommend Pe-ru--na to sufferers from catarrh."

MRS. KATIE SCHEFFEL.
R. F. D. No. 5, Lowell, O.

Mrs. Scheffel is only one of many thousand women in the world, who owe their present health to Pe-ru-na. The record of this medicine is a proud one as Pe-ru-na has held the confidence of both sexes for fifty years or more.

If your trouble is due to a catarrhal inflammation in any organ or part of the body, do like Mrs. Scheffel. Try Pe-ru-na. Insist upon having the original and reliable remedy for catarrhal conditions. You won't be sorry.

Health is Wealth

Health is one of the greatest things your family can possess. It brings happiness and success. But health must be safe-guarded by good wholesome foods that are prepared from the purest ingredients. This is especially true of bakings. If they are not properly raised, we all know that they are not easily digested. Many times when self-rising flour is used in place of good plain flour and dependable baking powder—the results are flat, soggy and heavy foods.

Don't take chances! Use a reliable brand of baking powder and plain flour. Then you will be sure of healthful bakings that are easily digested.

Remember, science has never found anything to take the place of the tried and tested method of using plain flour and good baking powder in preparing bakings. Millions of housewives now know by actual experience that many preparations that are claimed to take their place are worthless and dangerous to health. There is no comparison.

Calumet, the Economy Baking Powder, is known to be one sure and positive aid to successful bakings that are always pure, sweet and wholesome.

That's the reason its sales are 2½ times as much as any other brand.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Mrs. V. R. McDonald, who has been associated with me in Sunday school work for the past few months, has gone to Northwestern University to take a course in religious education that she may be fully equipped for this, the great work of the church. Miss Virginia Thomas, of Tupelo, a recent graduate of Grenada College, has gone to the same university to fit herself for work in our Conference during the next two years.

One of our bishops, in holding the session of an Annual Conference last year, quietly made the remark that if a man is too old to take one of the courses in Leadership Training offered by the General Sunday School Board, he is too old to be made presiding elder of a district. It is needless to say that every one of them found time to take one or more courses. That study is already bringing notable results in that Conference.

There are two methods of checking rationalism, modernism, and all isms from making inroads upon the church. One way is to turn the light upon these false teachers through the public press. Another way is to teach the great unchanging truths of the Bible in the home and in the Sunday school to the rising generation. This teaching must be done in a much more thorough way than it has been done in the past. Not only more effective teaching is essential, but we must reach all our people instead of the few we are now reaching. Public criticism of false teachers has its place; but constructive teaching of the children is our true safeguard.

If we ever do become serious about giving all the people a touch of religious education, we shall be forced to double the capacity of our buildings in the towns and quadruple the capacity in the country. In our present condition we have not sufficient room in any of our church buildings to care for those we have already reached.

Any man in possession of more than one idea must realize that we must teach a larger number of our neglected people at home or else we cannot hope to extend the kingdom of God in the more needy parts of the world. If the masses of our people had been taught the principles that govern the kingdom, we would not be lagging so far behind in our payments on the Centenary and Educational pledges. "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," and all the peoples of the earth are languishing because they know not God. God will surely reject us and forget our children if we fail him in this dark hour of the world's history. The coming of the kingdom halts abroad because it is not prayerfully and intelligently supported in the waste places of our homeland.

Epworth League.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Greenwood District League Institute.

On Sept. 6 the Greenwood District of the North Mississippi Conference held a League Institute at Greenwood.

A good many towns in the district were represented. Eighty delegates were registered and much interest was manifested by all.

We were very fortunate in having with us Rev. J. S. Duncan, of Pickens, Miss., and Rev. R. P. Neblett, of Durant, both giving very interesting and beneficial talks.

The meeting was a wonderful success, and we all want to have better Leagues and more Leagues in our district.

Sincerely,
ANNIE STEPHENS.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

State Cabinet Meeting.

The State Epworth League Cabinet held its annual meeting at Alexandria on Sept. 7 and 8. A very splendid meeting was held and a great many plans were made. The matters of importance that were taken up were: African Special, Loyalty Legion, Anniversary Day, and the Annual Assembly.

It was decided to ask the Bureau of Specials in Nashville for a "Special" of $1,500 so that our African Special money would go to a direct place, instead of in the general Missionary Fund for Africa. Miss Porter advised she could give us the educational department in the Belgian Congo, which consists of the maintenance of the boys' school, new building, supplies, repairs and equipment. In addition to the $1,500, we still have our pledge of $500 for the church at Houma and $125 for Vashti. With these definite obligations, the Cabinet feels that the Leaguers will have a greater desire to meet all of them; so let's get behind our African Special pledges and pay them up.

Below are the Leagues who have made a remittance to Miss Cook, State Treasurer, on their pledge:

Alexandria District—Alexandria, $3.

New Orleans District—Carrollton Avenue, $50; Epworth, $3.50; First Church, $50 (last year's pledge).

Shreveport District—Stonewall, Junior, $3.

There will be an honor roll published in this column of all the Leagues who have paid one-half of their pledge by the 23d of October. Will your League be among the others? Then on Jan. 20 those having three-fourths of their pledge paid will appear on another honor roll, and the final honor roll will be published after May 5, when the final payment should be in Miss Cook's hands. There will also be an honor roll of Special Mention for the first ten Leagues in the State who pay their pledge in full. Who will they be?

The dates, Sept. 23 to Oct. 14, were set aside for the Loyalty Legion drive. To be 100% on Loyalty Legion this year you will have to raise the amount assessed you by the State Cabinet, but you will note that your assessment this year is much less than it was last year, and consequently we hope there will be more 100% Chapters. A banner, similar to the one last year, will be awarded to the 100% Chapters. If you were 100% last year, or more, surely you will want another banner, and if your quota is raised during the above mentioned dates you will receive one.

The most important feature was the Assembly discussion, but a complete report of it will appear in next week's issue.

New Orleans City Union.

With the first fall meeting of the City Union, the Leaguers just rallied splendidly and crowded the auditorium of Second Church, where it was held. The spirit of our Union League meetings is splendid and it will do anyone good just to be present at one and listen to the various matters of business that the Leaguers are engaged in.

A very splendid musical program was furnished by the members of the New Orleans City Union Glee Club, which was enjoyed by all.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

On Sept. 8, "Benjamin Franklin Hattiesburg Harrell," of the Hattiesburg District, and a team of workers, composed of Misses Louise and Matalea Davis and Truman Lewis, of the Broad St. Chapter, Hattiesburg, visited the League at Leaksville. They report a very successful meeting. The Leaguers there seemed enthusiastic and hard at work, determined to make their Chapter stand high in League circles. Although there are only a few of them, they are doing good work; and while it was a long, hard drive for Mr. Harrell and his workers, and they reached home only in the wee hours of the morning, they were delighted with the results of their trip.

* * *

Brother E. A. King, in a letter to Mr. Hawkins, has the following to say about the Assembly:

"During my stay of four days at the Epworth League Asssembly in Brookhaven, three things inspired me: 1. The spiritual character of the Assembly; 2. The educational value of it; 3. The recreational and social value.

"I felt and do now feel amply repaid for time and money spent, and for the Assembly my prayers shall ascend, that it may continue its constructive work so nobly begun."

And look at this one, will you! Say, doesn't it make you feel like "Struttin' out stuff."

"Milton, Ore., Sept. 1, 1923.

"Mr. W. D. Hawkins: I greatly enjoyed my visit to the Assembly at Brookhaven, and can say without the least absence of candor that it was the most completely arranged and ideally executed program I have ever seen yet put on at an Epworth League meeting. I was particularly impressed with the large spiritual results as seen, for instance, in the consecration and committal meetings on Sunday night. The whole week of exercises gave me joy and spiritual uplift.

"Very faithfully,

"H. M. DuBOSE."

Sure, that is our Bishop! Now really aren't you sorry you didn't go? And those who were there, My! but aren't we glad! Mr. Hawkins said he was afraid this might give us the "big-head." But not if we remember that prayers had gone up for many months from every Chapter in our Conference for the success of our Assembly. For we can only lift our voices in thanks to the Almighty Father who made our success possible, and who so opened the hearts of our young people that they were ready and willing to accept Christ and make a full surrender to his divine will.

Remember that what has been done can be done again, and it can be done better next time, if we only put our trust in God. Let us pray for a better, bigger, and more spiritually effective Assembly for 1921.

Wanted! Ambitious Men and Women

We are receiving calls daily for men and women of character, ambition and business training, men and women who can accept and efficiently fill responsible positions, positions that give every opportunity for advancement; positions of high salaries, positions in banks, law offices, insurance, real estate, brokers' offices; positions with manufacturers, jobbers, retailers, in every imaginable type of business in the South.

Many of them we capably fill, others are yet vacant. The men and women who fill them need not be wealthy, nor even moderately well-to-do. They need not be young, nor need they be college or even high school graduates. All that is necessary is that they possess character, ambition and a business training.

The character and ambition they must possess, the business training we will furnish under the direction of the South's most efficient training corps and in one of the South's most efficient and best equipped business colleges. A training with unique courses in bookkeeping, stenography, typewriting, accounting, banking, business administration or our secretarial course. Such a training we will furnish in a few months' time at little cost to you, and at terms to meet your own financial condition.

Thousands of Southern men and women have taken advantage of the opportunity and trained themselves for a higher calling, a better salary and a greater opportunity for advancement. Many who have accepted the positions we offer have risen to the top of the ladder, and are numbered among America's foremost and wealthiest business and professional men and women.

An institution with such standing and reputation as the Georgia-Alabama Business College does more to advance the business interests of its graduates than can be done by any amount of family or personal influence.

Consider your present status—would you not like to improve your station in life, increase your income, attain financial independence and success? An opportunity awaits you, for positions are being constantly offered us that must be filled.

Write for our inspiring book, "Your Future—What Does It Hold in Store?" It is sent free on request, explains our offer in detail and points the way to a brighter future.

FROM MOUNT PLEASANT, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: Mount Pleasant circuit is in good shape spiritually—a fine revival at each church and conversions in all the churches. There were twenty-seven additions to the Methodist church, and some will join other churches. Children's services were held in all the meetings, and the children were instructed in the Christian faith. We also held a flower service in three of the meetings, that were blessings to all hearts.

The two Ladies' Aid Societies have been changed to Missionary Societies, with the same officers. There are twenty-seven members in the Mount Pleasant Missionary Society and seventeen in the New Salem Missionary Society.

TO KNOW THINGS ABOUT GOD.

By Robert A. Bernard.

Deep down in the souls of men—by men I mean the common man, the ordinary man there exists, when not steeped in dogma, an ever-present yearning to know things about God. Upon the one hand, there are those mightily concerned over the divinity of Christ; others about the beginning of things and what nots. But in the heart of the average common man is this yearning to know things about God. And all the arguments and controversies of the so-called infidel, atheist or any other -ist or -ism in the whole world cannot sidetrack the main issue in the average man's life—this yearning to know things about God.

When God put the breath of life into man, he also put a part of himself; we are made in his image, we feel his presence in our lives from the very fact that he is the architect of the body, and we are part of his flesh and blood. Therefore, I say the average common man, being in the image of, and breathing the breath of God, yearns to know about God and his great love. And I challenge any atheist or infidel or what not, that if he be truthful to himself, he cannot deny the existence of one greater than himself, for the structure is bound to show forth the character of the builder. Therefore, I say every human mortal feels the presence of his God coursing through the very arteries of his body, hid in the inmost crevices of his soul, and though tossed about on a sea of discontent and doubt, still, ever still he feels himself always in the presence of one greater than himself, the Almighty Father of the universe, the giver of all good gifts and graces.

Up from the dragging, nagging ruts of life this ordinary man hies himself to a church or some revival meeting; the flames are fanned and then we have the ordinary man divested of all the superfluities of life, the thinker as God thinks, the lover as God loves, the giver as God gives, and the prayer as Christ prayed, one who has come to know things about God.

SCHOOL MOTTOES.

By Rev. H. W. Bowman.

Dear Dr. Carley: In a recent issue of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, Dr. R. E. Smith, Dean of Centenary College, at Shreveport, had a fine article in which he sets forth the effort of Dr. Sexton to get teachers for the college.

Dr. Sexton's method with the teacher of science set me to thinking. I thought of the sign I see so often, "Stop. Look, Listen!" This sign has to do with wrecks along the highway. Railroad crossings are taking their toll of human life because this sign is not heeded and obeyed, but recklessly disregarded. To obey this sign would eliminate accidents at all crossings.

When I read this article, I "Stopped"—in meditation and thinking, I heard and saw some things. One of the things I saw was sufficient to get a man down on his knees to thank God for one college president who would look out, and with utmost care select the faculty for his school, and then, to the Master of Science, say: "I want in the classroom of science this motto on the wall, 'In the beginning, God!' Can you subscribe to this?" And that man expressed himself unequivocally in the affirmative—an examination to see if the man is in the faith.

It is time that the church in its school rooms begins to say, "In the beginning, God." That makes the line short enough for anybody, but there is no "black cat" of short circuiting.

I have changed my opinion relative to presidents of our colleges in recent years. Formerly, I was of the firm conviction that preachers should not be at the head of the schools, but leave that place for the laymen, while the preachers stayed in the pulpits. But I have changed my mind. A little study of this question settled me. Who was at the head of the school which has been deflected from the church, and changed its policy on religious things, preachers or laymen? I have had some Christian mothers say to me in recent years, "I think Mr. Blank is a very fine teacher, but I do not want him to teach religious subjects to my children."

As the head is, the feet and hands do move. The college is shaped, colored and moulded by the head. No man who has the right and responsibility of selecting his workmen, those who are to be with him, or under him, will select those who are contrary to him or his way of thinking. He gets those in harmony with him. "In the beginning, God." All comprehensive. It is the answer to the inquiring mind of universal humanity. No matter what a man's religion may be—followers of Buddha, Confucius, Mohammed—all are seeking GOD. From the mystic sleep of Nirvana to the wild dance of the Snake Indians, to the sun worshipers of the Aztecs, all are seeking to appease the wrath of some being. Paul on Mars Hill found everything in the line of worship, and the altar to the "Unknown" was the revelation of the human seeking to know GOD.

I am glad to know we have a school where, in the hall of science, the belief in God is truly expressed. For if our church schools are not going to be religious in faith, then the State school will do as well, and we may as well quit our profession.

This is a wonderful age in which we live. It is the age of the locomotive, automobile, aeroplane. The locomotive is a powerful machine, that must have its rails of steel laid on the well-built roadbed. It reaches from one certain point to another, and must keep the track if it reaches its destination. There is no steering wheel, just the flanges on the wheels; and the engineer, while he has nothing to do with guiding it, nevertheless must be equipped, trained, and vigilant. There are many crossings, blind sidings, switches, etc., and he must keep watch that no switches are open. "Stop, Look, Listen!"

The automobile is a great machine—not so powerful as the locomotive, but far more flexible. It is incapable of going anywhere except the ditch without the firm hand of a sane driver. It does not have to follow the same beaten way, as does the railway train, but when it leaves the beaten highway, it does so with great risks of rough road, blind trails, deep quagmires, and has to back up. The aeroplane is a great institution, and it is not held to the rails of steel, or graveled highway, but in every direction and in every way it goes at the sweet will of the pilot.

There is to my mind a likeness of the church in all three of these great means of locomotion. There stood the church in the past, with its mighty lines of truth, which has carried the freight of humanity along its lines through the years.

Then the automobile, with its own driver, independent of the railway (but usually parelleling), going as its driver would direct, and then heedlessly disregarding the old fogy warning of the railway, trying to beat it across, and the fearful results. There are wrecks along the way. Many are trying to beat to the crossing with modern ideals and modern thought, and while some get across, many pile up. The automobile of modern religious thought had better be sure of getting across, for when the collision comes, the old line of truth and stability will surely get the best.

Then we come to the aeroplane. It does not belong to the earth, it is to be in upper strata. The plane of safety is far above the maddening roar of earth, and in those higher places of seeking to know, only the most experienced can safely go. The great danger of the aeroplane church is stunt performance. Many stunts are being pulled off to-day. They are spectacular, thrilling, and attract attention. But when the aeroplane starts out to traveling, it points its nose toward the line of the old railway tracks, and follows same as far as it goes. To lose sight of the lines of steel, is to lose the course until it finds it again.

So with the great automobile age in the church. We may think we will get there quicker by "shortening the line," turning short corners, and cutting crisscross the open fields, and make it. But we had better watch the signals, "Keep to the right," and go cautiously. With Sexton standing on that foundation, "In the beginning, God," and with Smith as Dean, I am not afraid of Centenary of Shreveport. May God bless the college, and may our boys and girls come back home believing in "God"!

THE PLAN OF NATURE.

Manuals of devotion with complicated rules for getting on in the Christian life would do well sometimes to return to the simplicity of nature; and earnest souls who are attempting sanctification by struggle instead of sanctification by faith might be spared much humiliation by learning the botany of the Sermon on the Mount. There can indeed be no other principle of growth than this. It is a vital act. And to try to make a thing grow is as absurd as to help the tide to come in or the sun to rise. . . . A boy not only grows without trying, but he cannot grow if he tries. No man by taking thought has ever added a cubit to his stature; nor has any man by mere working at his soul ever approached near to the stature of the Lord Jesus. . . . Christ's life unfolded itself from a divine germ planted centrally in his nature, which grew as naturally as a flower from a bud.—Drummond.

FROM SHUQUALAK, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We have just closed one of the best meetings on the Shuqualak charge that I have had the privilege to be in in a long time. I brought together two of my churches, Cooksville and Paulette, in a union meeting at the Consolidated High School, in the center of two communities, and was fortunate to secure the help of Rev. J. A. George, our pastor at Duncan, Miss. We ran ten days. Some of the visible results were: Thirty-four additions, thirty-two on profession of faith and the other two coming from the Baptist church; a Woman's Missionary Society and an Epworth League organized at Cooksville. The membership of the two churches was greatly revived.

While Brother George is quite a young man, I doubt if there is another preacher in the North Mississippi Conference that is more successful in evangelistic work. His chief aim is to bring the pastor and people in closer relationship, and he stands for the principles of Methodism. I can heartily recommend him to any pastors who need help in revival meetins.

FROM THE PACHUTA CIRCUIT.

We have finished our round of revival meetings. The Lord has been with us in the power of the Holy Ghost. Here follows a brief report of the various churches:

Poto Rico: Preaching done by pastor. Thirteen were received into the church on last night of the meeting.

Orange: The quarterly conference date opened our revival services here. Brother Hardin, our efficient presiding elder, gave us a good start by delivering four fine sermons. We had a good conference. Four were added to the church and three children baptized. After the conference the pastor continued the services five days.

Adam's Chapel: Brother T. M. Ainsworth gave us some fine preaching in this meeting. Two were received into the church.

Pachuta: Here the preaching was done by Brother J. E. Williams, of Poplarville, who stayed with us about eight days, preaching two forceful sermons each day. Two joined the church.

McGowan's Chapel: The pastor did the preaching. Five or six family altars were set up. Three were added to the church, and at the next preaching service following two more joined the church.

Salem: Preaching was done by the pastor. Some promised to erect family altars in their homes. On the closing night, eighteen were received into the church. Sixteen of these were boys and girls from 8 years of age to 15 or 16. Four children were baptized.

Some time ago I asked the Lord to give us a good meeting at each church, and the prayer has been answered. Many in the testimony services said that they had been blessed, and a number begun praying in congregation. We feel that great good has come to the churches. We praise God.

THE HORSE PARADE.

By Rev. H. W. Rickey.

The feeble-minded parade the plural-toed fossil-horses up and down, as if their little horse-show was squelcher of upstarts.

They recede to the Orohippus, the fox-size, four front-toed, horse-like creature shout for joy: "Here is our invulnerable argument for Evolution!" They are lacking in sense of logical values as well as being devoid of humor. What on earth does it prove?

Haeckel copied Marsh's drawings of the four, three, two toed fossil-horses, and bull-dogmatically declared: "The descent of the present horse is thus graphically pictured before us in completed detail." Fleischman tore this precipitate notion to shreds by demonstrating that the structure of the teeth, skull, etc., did not permit any succession arrangement of pedigree descent. It was impossible, anatomically.

Moreover, these varied toed horses are shut up to their respective Eocene, Miocene, Pliocene periods. They had no mortal chance to mix. They are equine Melchizedeks; possess no ancestors, leave no heirs. They appear abruptly, linger unchanged, vanish suddenly out of their period-eras. They are barred off from each other by impassable gulfs.

Owen informs us that "these extinct horses differ from each other to a greater extent than do the horse, zebra or ass." Mivart said that "they are not only physiological, but zoological species." The little horse-show offers no proof that a cat can change into a dog, a pig into a goat or any animal into a totally unlike one.

On earth, now, there are quagga, zebras, ass, horse; if they cross-breed at all, the issue is a mongrel, half-breed or mule; the aforesaid hybrids are sterile with each other, and non-fertile with either parent-species. They are all one-toed. They never revert to the two-toed stage.

These plural-toed horses cannot be conveyed across the abyss of disconnected periods, and they cannot be made to leap the fatal chasm of sterility. The best they can make out of this little horse exhibit is that, once a horse, always a horse, even on the allowance of interminable ages. Time is a negligible factor; eternity would be helpless.

There must be something magical, mysterious in toeology. It lures me on. The loss of toes leads to brains, strength, size, speed, perfect figure. If so, a visit to a chiropodist, the removal of their toes, is the first duty of Evolutionists. They do not explain why the toes, and nothing else, were singled out for expulsion. Is it naughty to have toes?

It is an affecting spectacle to see a fat, bulbous, heavyweight of learned lore astride the back of a fox-size horse, shouting and whipping: "Gad up, Evolution!" Innocent little Orohippus, can thy weak back stand such a burden of proof?

REV. NELSON F. HOFFPAUIR.

Rev. Nelson F. Hoffpauir, a former member of the Louisiana Conference, died in the Methodist Hospital, Los Angeles, Calif., on Friday night, Aug. 24, 1923. He had long been suffering with stomach trouble, which developed into cancer, and took from an active pastorate in Yuciapa, Calif., a useful and consecrated minister of the gospel.

Brother Hoffpauir was born in Acadia Parish, near Rayne, La., on July 13, 1878, and had passed his forty-fifth birthday before his death. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Hoffpauir, are well-known Methodists in Louisiana, and reside now in Cedar Grove. Brother Hoffpauir was converted in the Indian Bayou church when he was 11 years of age, and was licensed to preach at the age of 18 under the ministry of Rev. Josh Sanders, at Branch, La., and joined the Conference later.

After five years spent in an active pastorate in the Louisiana Conference on account of his wife's health he removed to the New Mexico Conference, and later to California, where he took work with the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was in his second year's work at Yuciapa. A sorrowing people laid him to rest in Redlands, Calif. He leaves a wife and four children in his immediate family, and a large number of relatives, to mourn his loss.

Brother Hoffpauir lived a faithful, earnest, Christian life. He fought a hard battle against sickness and disease, and yet accomplished a great work. He has passed to his eternal reward.

PUT UP YOUR CURTAIN.

By Garfield Evans.

Riding on the train with a friend, a man remarked as they passed a certain town: "This town is my problem, it is needy. With all of its misery and filth there seems to be nothing that I can do to relieve it." And with that remark he pulled down the curtain of his window.

To which remark his companion laconically replied: "You could at least put up the curtain."

You have heard missions talked and talked until you are tired of its phraseology. You have heard appeals made for more money and needs of the fields that are unmet, until you are ready to pull down the curtain and think about something different and more pleasant.

The ostrich when pursued by an enemy often burrows his head in the sand, feeling satisfied that he is hid from the enemy when he has only hid his eyes. Because you are not concerned about our missionary tasks does not lessen their demands or alleviate their tragic necessities.

When you have done all that you could and with a sincere heart you realize that you are faced with very positive limitations, will you then pull down the curtains? Or will you look the thing squarely in the face and with the courage of a divine assistance continue to face the problem until it is solved?

During the world war a subordinate officer had been commissioned to make an investigation regarding the plans and methods necessary to take a certain position. In making his report to his superior officer he reported, with this information, "I must say that it is impossible for us to take that position," to which statement his commanding officer promptly replied. "Impossible you say, impossible! Then we will take it."

We are not given any easy tasks to do. The needs of the world are as great as any story you have heard or to the extent of any dream you may have had, and even then you have not been able to visualize but to a small degree the real enormity of the situation; but does this discourage us? By no means; we know it needs to be done. We are persuaded it is a part of God's program and within his will. Therefore we will do it.

RESOLUTIONS OF LADIES' AID SOCIETY OF SHARON, MISS.

Many hearts in our church and community were grieved when God, in his wise but mysterious providence, called from earth to heaven, on Aug. 13, 1923, our beloved friend and co-worker, MRS. P. M. PACE.

Therefore, in view of the loss which we have sustained and the greater loss to her family, be it resolved:

1. That the Ladies' Aid hereby desire to express their deep sense of bereavement and grief in the loss of so faithful a member.

2. That we sincerely sympathize with her family in this dark hour of sorrow and grief, and that we commend them to God for consolation, who "doeth all things well."

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each member of the bereaved family, and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The will of Heaven
Be done in this and all things! I obey.

SUCCESSFUL PARENTS.

Just as the success of a factory is measured by the quality of its output, so ought the success of parents be measured by the character of the children that go out from the home. A man may have plenty of money, stand high in business and social circles, live in an elegant house, supply his family with all the conveniences, comforts and luxuries of life, and be counted one of the shining lights of the community; but if his son is wild, reckless, immoral, he has failed as a father, and, failing in that, he has failed in the most important duty committed to his hands.

Too many parents are failures as fathers and mothers. Their children are not what they ought to be—nothing like what they ought to be. These parents are failures because they have not taken seriously the task of properly rearing their children. They have not taken the time to train them in the things that are really worth while. They have not associated with them as much as they ought to have done—they do not know their children and their children do not know them. They put clothes on them, give them something to eat and a place to sleep—and then let them shift for themselves. Their love for their children is apparently little more than the love any animal has for its offspring. The father is busy in the store, on the farm, in the office, in the shop—so busy about other things that he is too busy to pay attention to what his son—bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh—is doing, what he is thinking about, what he is reading, with whom he is associating. He may be making a living, but he is ruining a life. Failure as a father—what a tragedy!

Fathers, mothers! Measured by what your children are, have you succeeded or have you failed?

SYNDICATED SERMONS.

Now comes an adviser-in-general to the churches who suggests that preachers of renown be selected to furnish weekly sermons, to be syndicated to preachers of less ability throughout the land and read from pulpits on Sunday morning, that the people may have the benefit of these superior productions, while their own pastors devote themselves more diligently to other activities that go with the pastoral office. The chief merit of the suggestion, as we see it, lies, not in the possibility of making the pulpit more attractive to those who do not ordinarily go to church, but in the hint to the preachers themselves that there are some people who think their Sunday morning sermons are lacking in qualities of originality and strength that make a subtitute desirable. We do not think "syndicated sermons" are likely to become popular—but we do think some of us might devote a little more time to making our own sermons what they ought to be.

OLD-FASHIONED VIRTUES.

When we speak of "old fashioned" virtues, we have in mind those virtues about which from the beginning there has been no question and which fathers have taught their children as belonging essentially to true manhood. We shall not undertake to enumerate all of them, but we do wish to call attention to some of them as needing special emphasis, now as always in the past.

Honesty.

Honesty will never go out of fashion, no matter how generally it may cease to be practiced. The essence of honesty is to take nothing to which we have no right and to hold nothing to which we have no claim. The commonest test of honesty—and one of the surest—is the payment of debts. Honest debts are usually contracted by borrowing money or by buying goods on a credit. Debts are also made by promising to pay definite amounts at stated times to specific causes.

The test of debt-paying is applied not only among Christians, but also (and perhaps more rigidly) among those who constitute the business community at large, whether Christians or not. A "dead-beat" not only does not deserve the confidence and respect of his fellow-men, but he also very quickly forfeits it when his shortcomings become known. This loss of confidence on the part of the business community is the penalty visited upon the preacher of the gospel who fails to pay his debts as quickly as it is upon the most ungodly man in the neighborhood. A creditor may be forbearing and he usually is when there is evidence that an honest effort is being made to meet an obligation—but he makes no allowance for a persistent disregard on the part of the debtor who allows the time of an obligation to pass without meeting it and without offering an explanation or asking for an extension. Simple honesty is an indispensable requirement for maintaining the respect of those with whom we have business dealings.

The tragedy of a dishonest preacher (if there be any such), lies in the fact that the church itself is brought into disrepute, and brother preachers who are honest are made to suffer the opprobium properly cast upon the one recreant to his trust. We know of a banker who says he would not lend a five cents to any preacher without gilt-edged security, because he has been deceived by some. This banker's position is illogical and unjust—but grows out of unhappy experiences with men who ought to be shining examples of at least the old-fashioned virtue of honesty.

Truthfulness.

We sometimes hear it said of a man, "His word is as good as his bond." We know of no higher compliment that can be paid a person than for those who know him well to express unbounded confidence in the sincerity and truthfulness of his speech. The term "liar," when applied to an individual, is commonly looked upon as an unendurable infringement upon one's self-respect.

The essence of truthfulness is the determination always to represent things, persons, facts, situations exactly as they are if any representation at all is to be made. Truthfulness ordinarily expresses itself in words, though misrepresentation may be made by silence, by a shrug of the shoulder, by the cast of the countenance. The casuist may draw distinctions between positive falsehoods and what he is pleased to call "white lies"; but the man who "speaketh the truth in his heart" will have little difficulty in conforming his speech and actions to the requirements of "old fashioned" sincerity and veracity.

Self-interest or pure maliciousness is ordinarily responsible for untruthfulness; and both of these are sins that eventuate in the utter disintegration of moral character. That we must take a man's statements "with a grain of salt" is a pretty clear indication that the man himself is morally reprehensible.

Courtesy.

We were on a crowded street car the other day. Occupying the seats were several young men and young women—mere boys and girls, some of them. In the crowded aisle were two women whose hair was white and whose shoulders were stooped with the unmistakable burden of years, and an elderly man who could scarcely maintain his footing as his feeble body swayed with the lurching car. Simple courtesy would have made every one of those young people who were seated offer a place to those whose physical weakness justly entitled them to tender consideration; but not a move of the kind was made.

The essence of courtesy is considerate regard for others, especially for those whose comfort or convenience would be ministered to by such regard. It is a beautiful expression of a quality of soul that is truly noble. It is the mark of good breeding, but it is infinitely more than that—the sign of grace that sings in the heart.

Are these "old-fashioned" virtues becoming obsolete? We do not think so; but in the sordid commercialism of the age, the insistent appeal of self-interest, the rush and hurry of modern social contact there is danger of their losing the place they ought to occupy in the thinking of those upon whom rests the responsibility of shaping the destiny of future generations.

Be honest, be truthful, be courteous—commonplace injunctions, these—but fraught with a meaning the centuries have not been able to lessen or wipe out.

AT LEAST ONCE.

It is an old injunction to "think twice before you speak." The exhortation may be a little too strong for "babes"—but we do think everybody ought to think at least once before expressing an opinion.

I THANK THEE.

For the earth and all its beauty,
The sky and all its light;
For the dim and soothing shadows,
That rest the dazzled sight;
For unfading fields and prairies,
Where sense in vain has trod;
For the world's exhaustless beauty,
I thank thee, O my God!

For an eye of inward seeing,
A soul to know and love;
For these common aspirations
That our high heirship prove;
For the hearts that bless each other
Beneath thy smile, thy rod;
For the amaranth saved from Eden,
I thank thee, O my God!

For the hidden scroll o'erwritten
With one dear name adored;
For the heavenly in the human,
The Spirit in the Word;
For the tokens of thy presence
Within, above, abroad;
For thine own great gift of being,
I thank thee, O my God!

THE POWER OF ONE TRUE MAN ALONE.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

Lowell says, "That cause is strong which has not a multitude, but one strong man behind it," and all history attests the truth of the observation.

The great causes in which the welfare of mankind has been most vitally involved have been saved in most cases by solitary men, who stood alone. This has been most manifest in times of great crises.

A celebrated historian has said that "history began on the night when the Israelites went out of Egypt," and the exodus was almost exclusively dependent upon Moses. He alone, by command of God, brought it to pass. He alone directed the life and movement of his people during their wanderings in the wilderness. Through him Jehovah gave them the law and established the form of their worship. Amid their murmurings and without their sympathy, Moses toiled and suffered until the end. What would have been the history of all mankind if he had been unable to stand alone?

Later Elijah preserved the true faith against the prevalence of Baalism in the days of Jezebel and Ahab. That foul cult had become the established religion of the nation, and the prophets of Israel were persecuted almost to the point of extirpation. Not without reason the Tishbite responded to the Lord's call at Horeb, saying: "I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts: for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left, and they seek my life, to take it away" (I Kings xix. [illegible]). [illegible] the Lord could find no more than seven thousand souls who had not bowed the knee to Baal. Nevertheless, this brave [illegible] prophet, despite all the [illegible] of the day, gave Baalism a [illegible] which it never recovered, and preserved the faith which had come down from Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. He felt keenly his loneliness [illegible] to despair.

In like manner John the Baptist, coming in the spirit of Elijah, prepared the way of the Lord by bringing the whole Jewish nation to repentance when he came as a voice in the wilderness, crying, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matthew iii:3). He was beheaded by Herod at the bidding of [illegible] Jezebel; but the cause for which he [illegible] was not lost. He wrote not so much as [illegible] but he traced ineffaceable lines in the life of the people of his day.

Scarcely thirty years later, Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles, stood almost alone for the universality of the Christian religion and the freedom of the faith. He, too, was persecuted and beheaded; but the truth he proclaimed [illegible], and it will never perish.

Another man of like character was Athanasius, who withstood Arianism when the cry was "Athanasius against the world." Arianism tottered under the blows of this one man, although he was reviled and persecuted.

What historians call the Reformation must be traced to Martin Luther, the [illegible] monk of Wittenburg; and Scotland received its benefits and blessing through brave John Knox.

It has thus pleased God to work his works of grace through faithful men standing alone in faithless and perverse generations. He relies on a man rather than on a multitude. So [illegible] the prophet Isaiah, who was sawn asunder rather than conform to the current corruption of his day. He said, "A man shall be as an hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land" (Isaiah xxxii. 2). Commenting upon the striking words of the prophet, Dr. George Adam Smith has said: "Where the desert touches a river, valley or oasis, the sand is in continual drift from the wind, and it is this drift which is the real cause of the barrenness of such portions of the [illegible] as abut upon the fertile land. For under the rain, or by infiltration of the river, [illegible] spring up through the sand, and there is [illegible] promise of considerable fertility. But [illegible] down comes the periodic drift, and life is smothered or choked out. But set down a rock on the sand, and see the difference it presents [illegible]. After a few showers, to the leeward side of this, the blades will spring up; if [illegible] you will see in time a garden. How has the [illegible] produced this? Simply [illegible] the drift. * * * History is swept by drifts [illegible] error, poisonous custom. [illegible] What has saved humanity has been [illegible] of some great man to resist [illegible] his will, strong through [illegible] ing tendency, and [illegible] the shelter of [illegible] but not less dangerous, [illegible]. The history of what man has [illegible] in the world is at bottom the [illegible] who have worked [illegible] human power is the [illegible] ever used it as his [illegible] instrument."

This great truth of the [illegible] true man, trusting in God and [illegible] not a popular view [illegible] eration, being obsessed and [illegible] and ponderous things, and having [illegible] things invisible and divine [illegible] organizations. It is therefore [illegible] to trust in the force of one true man. This is its folly. It needs [illegible] confidence in huge bodies and [illegible] the old, old truth that "one man with God is a majority."

[illegible] today because too much in mobs and [illegible]. Hence leaders of heavenly mind are [illegible] men who are able to lead are too feeble [illegible]. They hold to Napoleon's [illegible] that God is on the side of the [illegible] battalions, and, therefore, they are forever [illegible] for battalions to support them, instead of [illegible] in brave contests for the right.

As a matter of fact, history shows that God is [illegible] battalions. He sent [illegible] battalions back home, and overthrew the Midianites by a brave three hundred, [illegible] than the three hundred [illegible]. Our God is no cowardly deity, [illegible] most hoary, honorable, [illegible] organized evil in all the world. It is [illegible] overwhelm them without strain on his [illegible]. Thus with soft snowflakes he [illegible] battalions of Napoleon in the [illegible] campaign of the confident Corsican.

[illegible] well-intrenched evil in our day be considered impregnable. Let but one brave man, [illegible] his heart, strike it a lusty blow, and [illegible] down dead at his feet as Goliath of [illegible] before David, the shepherd youth [illegible].

All evil is doomed to death. Only right is [illegible] alone is [illegible] able in a world over which [illegible] God reigns.

"The Lord is in his holy temple, the Lord's throne is in heaven: his eyes behold, his eyelids try the children of men. The Lord trieth the righteous: but the wicked and him that loveth violence his soul hateth. Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone and an horrible tempest: This shall be the portion of their cup. For the righteous Lord loveth righteousness; his countenance doth behold the upright" (Psalms xi:4-7).

In this faith let every man stand in his lot, serving his own generation by the will of God. Though the whole world should conspire to defeat the cause for which he stands, his victory is certain. He cannot fail. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith" (I John v:4). Such faith is more powerful than the combined forces of evil throughout the whole earth.

THE FUTURE OF MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

By Dr. D. M. Key, Vice President.

In May, 1918, at the very darkest hour in the history of civilization, at the nadir of the Allied forces in the Great War, the Southern Methodists, in their Quadrennial General Conference, had the audacity to project the most ambitious financial plan for their missionary and educational work that had up to then been undertaken by any religious body. In commemoration of the Centenary of their Foreign Mission activties, they planned to enter on a four years' campaign; the first two years of the quadriennium to be devoted to the raising of thirty-five million dollars for Foreign Missions, and the last two years to be devoted to the raising of a similar amount for the firm establishment of our educational foundations. When the time came for putting on the Educational Campaign, it seemed that again the darkest hour overshadowed the enterprise. The peak period of prosperity had been succeeded by extreme depression. Cotton was said to be selling below the cost of production. Two-fifths of the Centenary pledges remained to be paid.

Yet, despite all, the Southern Methodists pledged themselves for eighteen million dollars for their educational institutions. These pledges were made under circumstances that impelled the closest conservatism. They are undoubtedly far below our ability to pay under the present circumstances of optimism and prosperity. In the [illegible] development of the great and ambitious [illegible] of our church, it is now the time to call for the [illegible] payment of these pledges.

As one of the beneficiary institutions of the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences, we at Millsaps College wish to make as clear as possible our urgent need of the additional resources that will come to us as a result of the faithful payment of these pledges and also the more agreeable picture of the splendid possibilities open for this great A-Grade Christian College in the complete realization of success in the campaign.

The Urgent Need.

The urgent need of the college for additional resources is due to four reasons:

First, the rapid growth of the college. The attendance has more than doubled since 1918. In 1917-18, there were 110 students in the college, including special students. In 1918-19, there were 117, not including the S. A. T. C. unit. In 1919-20, there were 216; in 1920-21, 250; in 1921-22, 309; in 1922-23, 329. This growth has resulted from causes which will be permanent. There has been a general development of interest in education and in the number of high schools and high school graduates in the State. Mississippi has but three A-Grade Liberal Arts Colleges for men, and they will continue to be filled. Millsaps is on the approved list of the General Educational Board as one of the institutions which has the location, the clientele and the resources to become a great institution. There is no question that with the growth and prosperity of Jackson and this territory Millsaps will in a few years have an annual attendance of 500 students.

In the second place, the change in the cost of living has made necessary an increase in professors' salaries. These have been more than doubled since 1916. Even now, our men are being induced to go elsewhere where the opportunity for Christian service is as great and the remuneration is more adequate. Four members of our faculty were this year offered positions at salaries much greater than they are receiving at Millsaps.

In addition to the increase in individual salaries, the increase of the number in the student body has made necessary the employment of additional members of the faculty, all at the increased rate; so that the salary budget has increased from $20,000 in 1916 to $50,000 last year.

Third, all other items of expense in operation, such as coal, electricity, labor, etc., have greatly increased as they have everywhere else.

Fourth. Very little has as yet been realized from the Educational Movement Campaign. Practically nothing has been added in the past five years to our income from endowment to meet the increased expense of the salary budget indicated above.

The income from the splendid gift of Brother Tatum, which became immediately available, is all used in developing the new Religious Education Department of the college. It puts us at the very front in instruction in the Bible and in specific training for religious work, but it does not increase our ability to meet the obligations that are upon us in other departments. Class rooms are becoming overcrowded, professors are overworked. Something must be done.

Help from the General Educational Board.

To meet this emergency, the college authorities have planned wisely and well. In anticipation of the funds to be received from the Educational Campaign, a proposal was secured from the General Education Board to grant $100,000 when $250,000 had been collected from other sources. This grant came from a fund of fifty million provided by Mr. Rockefeller for the purpose of making possible the increase of salaries, and was made conditional upon our raising the salaries of our professors. To make this immediately possible, a further grant was made by the General Education Board of several thousands per year until the principal sum of $350,000 could be secured. This annual grant has now been made for three consecutive years, and the time for us to complete our part of the contract has arrived.

It is therefore imperative that the necessary steps be taken to get in hand at once the $250,000 necessary to claim the offer of the General Education Board. And we have the money already subscribed and pledged by our people. The interest of Millsaps College in the Educational Movement subscriptions is as follows:

The Three-Fold Task.

May we not expect [illegible] Millsaps [illegible] and alumnus, every loyal Methodist, every friend of Christian education to join in this three-fold effort:

THE REMOVAL OF SCARRITT TO NASHVILLE.

By Rev. [illegible], President, Scarritt [illegible] and Training School.

[illegible] the Board of Missions [illegible] and Training School to [illegible] the matter [illegible] to the church. Space [illegible] a very brief statement.

[illegible] program of missionary training drawn [illegible] by a committee representing the [illegible], the Woman's Missionary Council [illegible] at Atlanta and at [illegible] the Scarritt Bible and Training [illegible] by the Woman's Missionary [illegible] in April. It was brought [illegible] action of the Woman's Missionary [illegible] Board of Missions at its annual [illegible] May. With a few minor changes, the [illegible] adopted both papers and empowered its [illegible] Committee to act in connection with [illegible] Committee of the Woman's Missionary Council and the Board of Managers of [illegible] Scarritt Bible and Training School in locating [illegible] the proposed institution in keeping [illegible] provisions of the program of training [illegible] provided that these committees report [illegible] for relocation, both as to place and [illegible] to other institutions of learning, to the Board of Missions at its next meeting for final action.

This Joint Committee, with Bishop E. D. Mouzon as chairman, began its work immediately [illegible] the meeting of the Mission Board, and gave careful study to the provisions of the program [illegible] the various locations proposed, [illegible] of institution that was suggested. The [illegible] of the committee's work were laid [illegible] Board at its meeting on Sept. 12, with [illegible] recommendations: "(1) That the [illegible] from the citizens of Nashville be accepted and that the Scarritt Bible and Training School be located at Nashville, Tenn.; (2) That [illegible] may be affiliated with the George [illegible] College for Teachers, with the understanding that it shall have its own separate identity [illegible] any organic alliance with or control [illegible] any other institution. Affiliation shall mean [illegible] the privilege of securing at a minimum cost [illegible] educational advantages as may be particularly [illegible] and as would be approved by the [illegible] of the church." After a discussion [illegible] the day the Board, by [illegible] to eighteen, adopted the [illegible] of the committee.

[illegible] meeting of the Board of Missions, the Joint Committee took steps to secure a suitable [illegible] school and to work out for it a [illegible] in line with the instructions [illegible] Board of Missions. As soon as definite conclusions can be reached, the results will be [illegible] to the church. Meantime, the committee [illegible] the responsibility resting upon [illegible] this splendid piece of work, and [illegible] desires the earnest prayers of [illegible] Church that the task may be accomplished to the satisfaction of the church and for the best interests of the Kingdom of God.

IN FURTHER ORTHODOX REPLY TO BISHOP MOUZON.

By T. H. Lipscomb, B.D.

When the very title of an article, "Brother Lipscomb Constitutes Himself and the Presbyterian General Assembly Judges of Methodist Orthodoxy," is an argumentum ad populum (an appeal to popular prejudice), and the opening paragraphs an argumentum ad hominem (a thrust at the individual), neither of which is permissible in high-class controversy, little can be expected in the form of fair and reasoned discussion; and little appears in the reply of Bishop Mouzon to my recent articles in which, on the basis of his published utterances, I show his theological position to be unsound and misleading.

So the very title of Bishop Mouzon's article is disappointing, and the absurdity of his charge apparent to all; but his thrusts at me personally were even more so—may God forgive him. To attempt to destroy my influence and the weight of my arguments, not by counter arguments, but by holding me up as unworthy of belief because of the alleged "unjustifiable and absurd" testimony I bore in a pamphlet addressed to the last General Conference, is a procedure which will the less commend him to all fair-minded men; especially when they know the facts in the case. He says: "It will be remembered that this is the same Brother Lipscomb who some time ago brought accusations of 'heresy' against certain distinguished brethren connected with one of the great institutions of the church. A telegram was read during the session of the General Conference at Hot Springs (and that telegram may be seen printed in the Journal of the General Conference on page 151) declaring that those 'charges are unjustifiable and absurd.' Let me assure all good people that the present charges of 'heresy' laid against me are equally 'unjustifiable and absurd.'"

What is the evidence adduced that my charges were false? A fair and thorough investigation? Oh, no. There has been none, though I requested the Trustees to make such. What then? A telegram! From whom? The parties involved? Oh, no. Not to this day has a person involved denied a single word quoted in that pamphlet. The Faculty Club, before whom in monthly meeting the alleged statements were made? Oh, no. They have remained as silent as the grave and have signally failed to defend their colleagues, or even suggest that I misrepresented or misunderstood the utterances quoted. From whom, then, did this wonderful telegram come, so weighty as to brush aside as nothing the testimony of the Pastor-Professor of the University whose reputation for probity is yet untarnished? Why, from a body of students (which Bishop Mouzon fails to mention), who of course not being present at any of the Faculty Club meetings or interviews in question, were utterly incompetent as witnesses. Their testimony would not have been accepted in the humblest civil court. Yet a bishop of the church refers trimphantly to such a farcical telegram as evidence that I am unworthy of credence. And he is of course (as all who know us both know); but as some do not know us both he must write thus, lest my articles do some harm to the church which he loves better than his life. My own love for Christ and the church I hope I need not proclaim.

But as is apparent to all discerning minds, a students' telegram about another matter eighteen months ago will hardly suffice to prove that Bishop Mouzon's published utterances (quoted by me) are in harmony with sound doctrine; and there is still much room left in the Advocate for reasons and proof thereof, though I know it is far easier to find words, or telegrams, wherewith to censure than reasons wherewith to prove another wrong. He asks apologies freely. I assure him such will be forthcoming readily and heartily when he proves that he is not the author of the words and paragraphs accredited to him, or when he has explained them to show that they mean quite other than what they seem to say. So long as I quote him fairly he must accept the logical implications of his utterances, whether complimentary to himself or otherwise. I agree to do the same.

But since the Bishop has brought up again the pamphlet which I addressed to the General Conference, "The Content of Christian Education, An Arraignment and an Exposition," in which I constructively discussed what is Christian education, I am reminded that I therein showed that unsound teaching is proceeding not only from some of our leading professors of theology, but that Bishop Mouzon was himself uttering strange words concerning the mission of the church, the Second Coming of Christ and the Apostles' Creed. With perilous repudiation not only of the content but even of the phraseology of New Testament teaching, Bishop Mouzon affirms, as quoted in my pamphlet from his Keynote Address, Christian Education Movement (pp. 8, 9): "We are not seeking to gather out the 'elect' from all nations, and get them ready to meet the Lord in the air at his second coming when the world will be destroyed. Such a notion of the mission of the church can have no place in the religion of Christ and none in the program of the church." He sees in such conception the work of the church as ending in failure only! The gathering together of "multitudes which no man can number," "out of every nation and people and kindred and tribe," redeemed from the curse and defilement of sin as they have responded to Christ's call; the great invisible church; the "Bride of Christ," being prepared and made ready for him when "he shall come again to judge the quick and the dead'" (Creed), is a mighty spiritual achievement in which he sees no satisfactory triumph of righteousness, no consummation of the ultimate ends of Christ's coming. "The world itself," he insists (as all agree), "is the subject of redemption." Yes, but it is not the end of redemption; and we weary of having our eyes forever fixed on terrestrial ends, any progress toward which is possible only as the heavenly light shines clear upon the soul. In his recent article against the Fundamentalists, the Bishop again opposes the doctrine of the "Imminent" (spelled immanent, a very different word, in the Advocate before me), "Physical Second Coming of Christ," which doctrine is so obviously the teaching of Christ, Paul, Peter, John, Jude, that it is unthinkable how men professing to believe the Bible can question or deny it. Bishop Mouzon leaves room for only one inference: that he accepts the modernist doctrine; along with Dr. Rowe, editor of our Quarterly Review, and Dr. Thomas Carter, of Vanderbilt University; the latter of whom (Dr. Carter) bluntly stated to me at Monteagle two summers ago that Christ is not going to come again except in the spiritual sense, that the world is going to get better and better until the spirit of Christ permeates all society, adding, when I quoted Scripture to the contrary, that Christ and Paul inherited the old mistaken Judaistic notion of a "cataclysmic end of the world," and therefore did not undertake any social and moral and political reforms, thinking the world would soon end. My only reply to this was: "I thought you were a heretic, now I know it."

But hear also Dr. Rowe (Quarterly Review, April, 1923, Editorials, pp. 355-60). He is dogmatically evolutionary, and has no place for Adam at the beginning or for Christ's Second Coming at the end. Science takes the place of Scripture throughout. "As the imagination endeavors to run back along the track of humanity's slow travel, it is appalled by the stories which those countless ages relate." "No human mind would have planned such interminable suffering." But thus God was evolving the race. At the other end he says: "The time will finally come when life upon this planet will cease. There is nothing upon which there is more general agreement than that the solar system is destined to run its course. In the vivid language of Scripture, 'The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up.' In the more sober language of science, the heat of the sun will gradually pass out into space, and the planets be retarded in their motion until their orbits become so small that they will finally be drawn into the sun." So dismally, amid darkness and frigid cold, long after life shall have been frozen out, the universe will, infinite ages hence, collapse.

But is there no chance for God to intervene? Hear him again: "As prisoners seek refuge from the monotony of dungeon walls by indulging in day dreams of freedom on sunny hills, seers in impossible times fly upon the wing of apocalyptic vision into a future in which conditions are reversed and the righteous come into their own." * * * "Ever and anon a voice is raised in proclamation of a second coming, through which the kingdom will be set up and earth's tangles will be straightened out. But minds sobered by a knowledge of the long, hard past have no such hope." (Black-faced type ours.) Throughout, both in past and future, the supernatural and miraculous are eliminated, only natural and spiritual processes are allowed to work.

I appeal to all men to answer: Is there anything in all this to indicate that such men believe what they say when beside the open grave, after saying "ashes to ashes, dust to dust," they triumphantly affirm their faith in Christ's "Second Coming in glorious majesty?" Is such in harmony with the Apostles' Creed, which they recite every Sunday: "From thence he shall come again to judge the quick and the dead?" or with the Third Article of the Twenty-five? And how do they harmonize with that angelic declaration on Mount Olivet: "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven?" Again, "Behold, he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, and all the kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." Again, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." What becomes, too, of those sublime words of Jesus: "When the Son of Man shalll come in his glory and all the holy angels with him?"

Verily, brethren, have we not here fulfilled rather the words of Peter: "There shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation?" Shall Methodist elders and bishops, with solemn vows upon them, and the precious heritage of their Christian faith, sit idly by while doctrine so destructive to all sense of responsibility to God is openly proclaimed in our official organs, in flat contradiction to the impressive words of Christ, "Watch;" "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man." (Oh, but I forgot. Noah never lived. All before Abraham is fable. Dr. Bland recently said so. Christ was mistaken about the whole thing! These, however, are nonessentials.) But let us quote once more: "But if that servant shall say in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming—the Lord of that servant will come—and appoint him his portion with the unbelievers." "For in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." If the "Imminent, Physical Second Coming of Christ" isn't Bible doctrine, there is none.

Bishop Mouzon affirms in his very title that I constitute myself and the Presbyterian General Assembly judges of Methodist orthodoxy. No, Bishop, you know I do not. I simply appeal to plain Bible teaching as Methodism has always received it, in harmony with the historic Christian faith. It was essential Christian faith common to all churches which I quoted, and my exact question was: "But on these fundamental matters, wheresoever or by whomsoever stated, where does Bishop Mouzon himself stand?" Surely a man of your breadth and liberality would not refuse to assent to a statement simply because Presbyterians made it. Yet you evado definite commitment even to so simple a deliverance. Really I am surprised to find you so bound by our denominational standards. I count myself even so broad and liberal that I gladly assent to and welcome truth wherever and in whomsoever found. I say with John Wesley: "Is thy heart right as my heart? Give me thy hand.'" But I know Wesley too well to believe that he would for an instant tolerate the erroneous and strange doctrines which "strike at the root of Christianity" (from the Bishop's own quotation), rampant in the church to-day. His very bones would cry out against the outrage of representing him as sympathetic with such utterances as I am protesting against in these articles.

I almost wonder whether you remember, Bishop, the ancient criteria by which the Fathers tested doctrine: "That only is of the faith," they affirm, "which is accepted semper, ubique et ab omnibus"; and that there is a great body of Christian dogma, the consensus of Christian thought throughout the centuries, which properly may be called "the catholic and orthodox doctrine." "The Romance of Orthodoxy," as Chesterton finely puts it, is that as "a heavenly chariot" she has come "thundering through the ages, the dull heresies left sprawling and prostrate, the wild truth reeling but erect." "She swerved to the right and left, so exactly as to avoid enormous obstacles. She left on the one hand the huge bulk of Arianism," as she must now leave Modernism, "buttressed by all the worldly powers to make Christianity too worldly. The next instant she was swerving to avoid an orientalism which would have made it too unworldly." Surely the hand of God is seen in Christian history, preserving his eternal truth, that its proclamation should never cease in the earth, to the saving of men's souls. So, Bishop, the standard by which I would judge Methodist orthodoxy, if such were needed, as happily it is not, is this great blessed body of Christian truth, revealed in God's Holy Word, believed among men of whatever name throughout the ages; and which you nor I nor all the modernists whom you hold in such high esteem can alter in one jot or tittle, and in departing from which you or I or any or all of us become heretics, traitors to the truth, in peril of damnation. I for one do not skim upon the thin surface of the centuries.

You formally ratify the Apostles' Creed as a Fundamental of Methodism. Why, then, do you disparage it time and again, as I have shown?

You formally ratify our Articles of Religion; why, then, do you disparage the doctrine of the Second Coming of Christ, the Atonement, and the infallible authority of the Bible? Please stop knocking down the things you stand up, and then standing up again the things you knock down.

You elaborately expound the General Rules in your second article as a Fundamental of Methodism; why, then, do you omit all reference to "the wrath to come which they saw continually hanging over their heads," and the express condition, "a desire to flee from the wrath to come," which has such orthodox doctrinal import and is so powerful a dynamic of faith? Perhaps you know the "liberalists" would laugh at you, and be driven into actual avowal of their latent infidelity.

In one point only do you attempt directly to answer me, and in that you place yourself in a dilemma that is ludicrous indeed. You are quite indignant that I should say, "You propose a truce, yet ask one side only to stop fighting"; and in proof that you ask both sides you quote in black-faced type your words, "and scientists who know little about the Bible and nothing about theology join in and add to the confusion." Well, take your choice. Either admit that our liberalistic brethern were not included among those whom you condemn for "joining in and adding confusion to disorder," or see yourself as charging them—your liberal editors, theologians, pastors, and professors—with knowing little about the Bible and nothing about theology. Some of us suspected that their Biblical scholarship was but skin deep; but none of us expected that you would assert it publicly. Really, now, was it not the secular scientists outside the church whom you had in mind? However, my proof is not confined to this one utterance of yours. I have quoted you elsewhere to the same effect—you even propose to drive us into Catholicism, and devote a whole article to denouncing the orthodox Fundamentalists and their Methodist sympathizers. You have even defended the liberalists—witness Dr. Rice—and placed them in positions of power and large emolument. Until you come out more definitely against the liberalistic propaganda, you have no complaint to make when I say, "You propose a truce, yet ask one side only to stop fighting."

But again I must say, enough, until you present a more direct and successful explanation of your utterances and refutation of my arguments. As for your naming me as one who holds that "a correct creed is of more importance than a good life," I will say that I have sense enough and religion enough to understand the genetic relation of faith and works, and know that error cannot bring forth the fruit of truth, any more than a bad root can produce good fruit. So I emphasize both doctrine and practice, as need may be, in harmony with our Articles of Religion and General Rules. As for the unknown party whose conversation at second hand you quote, I have never heard from human lips such an utterance and have no part nor lot in such views. A statement made in private conversation can hardly be proclaimed "a false note sounded in Southern Methodism." Quote me a published utterance, please.

"I call to my side," you say, "all right thinking and loyal Methodists." I call them to Christ, the great HEAD of the church, to whom supreme loyalty is due: before whose Words as well as Name bishops must bow as humbly as any, if they would be trusted leaders of the hosts of Israel; knowing full well that no mutilated Bible, discarded in public estimation, can be a transforming power in human lives, or arrest our godless age in its headlong downward plunge.

To claim that mutilation of the Bible from Genesis to Revelation—belying its history, denying its miracles, repudiating its Pauline theology and glorious prophecy—are but non-essentials, is to utter words which only blind men and servile dupes can be deceived by.

The maintenance of its doctrinal integrity is as vital to the very existence of the church as the foundation stones to a great cathedral. Undermined or destroyed, the whole collapses in tragic ruin. So the church is of God only as "the pure Word of God" is proclaimed and believed therein. Otherwise it becomes but an organization, earthly but not heavenly, human but not divine.

West Point, Miss., Sept. 20, 1923.

NOTES FROM THE NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT.

The month of August and early September are the period of least activity and greatest difficulty in New Orleans, when many are out of the city, and there is not much of interest to report at this time. The interest and attendance in our Sunday schools, however, have kept up through this period as well at least as in previous seasons, and plans are being laid for the opening of the more active season.

• • •

Two new deaconesses have come to St. Mark's, Misses Young and Rogers, and have taken up actively their new duties. The workers, at a recent staff conference, laid plans for a very active program of work through the winter.

• • •

Two of our preachers have recently been under the surgeon's knife, and are in process of recovery. Rev. E. V. Duplantis was operated on in Alexandria for the removal of his tonsils, and has been unable to preach for several Sundays; and Rev. J. B. Grambling was operated on at the Presbyterian Hospital in New Orleans for chronic appendicitis, and will be unable to fill his pulpit for a few weeks.

• • •

Rev. C. C. Wier is spending a good part of September on a visit to friends and relatives in Texas and Louisiana. After a year of hard work and severe trial, this relaxation was very needful.

• • •

The Sunday school workers of the city are working and planning to make the third district training school for the city a success. A fine faculty has been secured, arrangements are being perfected, enrollment secured, and the prospect is that this will be the most successful school yet carried out in New Orleans.

• • •

Under the leadership of Mrs. J. G. Snelling recently a conference of Sunday School Missionary committees was held with a view to improving the missionary departments of our Sunday schools and assisting in the completion of the Centenary pledges by the schools. Good work is being done by these committees.

• • •

The First Church school, which has already paid out in full its five-year Centenary pledge of $1,500, has adopted for the coming year a $500 special, directed to the support of a French Missionary pastor. A good example for other schools to follow.

• • •

At the joint quarterly conference at Houma, Aug. 23, Rev. C. D. Atkinson, Conference Superintendent of Sunday School Work, was present and presented the work and plans of the Sunday School Board. At the close of his address, it was decided to erect a sub-district for the vicinity of Houma and plan for a Standard Training School there next spring.

• • •

Reports from the charges of the district up to the end of the third round show additions of about six hundred and fifty members to the churches. This record will doubtless be materially increased by Conference time.

• • •

Offerings of at least $100 have been raised for the relief of the sufferers from the Japanese earthquakes, from the churches of this district.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION DAY.

Sunday, Oct. 14, has been designated as "Christian Education Day." On this day we are asked to bring up the deficit on our Christian Education pledges. Bishop Ainsworth is calling on all our people to respond to this call.

Delinquent pledges in the North Mississippi Conference amount to a hundred thousand dollars. We can find no better time than this to meet this obligation. May we do our best to wipe out this deficit on that day.

J. H. HOLDER,
Conference Secretary.

BANISHING THE WRONG.

Each solitary kind action that is done, the whole world over, is working briskly in its own sphere to restore the balance between right and wrong. The more kindness there is on earth at any given moment, the greater is the tendency of the balance between right and wrong to correct itself and remain in equilibrium. Nay, this is short of the truth. Kindness allies itself with right to invade the wrong and beat it off the earth.—Frederick W. Faber, D.D.

THE BEGINNING OF THE SPECIAL EFFORT FOR ADEQUATE SUPERANNUATE ENDOWMENT.

We're off! For five years we have been publishing on this page that a time would come when our great church would give serious attention to the needs of her worn-out preachers. Many have read these promises only to smile and doubt their fulfillment. But now the wonderful movement has actually begun. It would require volumes to tell of the years of anxious waiting, the soul longings, the pleadings for justice, the unyielding faith, and the patient, persistent toil through which we have passed to enter this day of beginning. But, thanks be unto the God of the "forgotten man," our church has at last quit merely singing psalms over the hungry and broken bodies of her retired servants and has cleared her mighty track for the superannuate endowment special. Sixteen trained and gifted dispatchers (bishops) are in their places giving orders; three hundred busy yard foremen (presiding elders) are setting to work with determined will, looking to have night and day shifts if necessary; sixty-five hundred clear-eyed engineers (pastors) have their hands upon the throttle and their eyes upon the rail; and thousands of firemen (lay members) have started shoveling coal. Come on, everybody, and make reservations on this wonderful train. Notice: Free list suspended!

Illinois Conference.

The little town of Odin, Ill., had the honor of entertaining the Illinois Conference, where on Thursday, Aug. 23, 1923, the plan of the special effort for superannuate endowment was first presented. It was very fitting for Bishop Darlington, the warm-hearted and sympathetic friend of the old boys, to be in the chair. His emphatic statements concerning the movement left no doubt in my mind about its complete success in the episcopal district under his superintendency. Rev. W. E. Brown, of the St. Louis Conference, made an inspirational address that aroused in those present a will to work. Among the many pointed statements made by Brown, there was one with power like a two-edged sword,—namely: "If the church fails to raise the $10,000,000 for superannuate endowment, it will not be because she is stingy but because she is selfish. Most everybody has money to-day, as is evidenced in the amount being spent. But this expenditure is chiefly for selfish ends."

The preachers of this Conference promised faithfully to do their best for the cause. I believe they meant it, too. The Illinois Conference was the first to get the plan, and I believe she will be the first to get her quota. Several of her preachers who toil on the hardest circuits said to me: "It must be done, and we will do it." One preacher said: "It will be a hard task in my charge on account of difficult local conditions, but I will find a way to do it." Another preacher said: "I believe I can raise every dollar of my charge's quota from friends of the superannuates who are not members of the church." God be with the boys in Illinois, give them grace and grit to carry on, and let them be greatly blessed while they are helping others.

Denver Conference.

Rev. R. R. Langston, transferred from the Tennessee Conference to Colorado, met me at Pueblo and gave me a wild thirty-mile ride in his Ford to the Rocky Mountain Assembly Ground, Beulah, Colo., the seat of the Denver Conference. We busted into the side of a street car, knocking a lot of things off the auto; but the Ford went on to Beulah, and as long as I was able to see the street car had not moved. We had a blow out and some other things, but nothing could stop us. Langston said that the go of that Ford was typical of the spirit of the preachers in the Denver Conference toward the special effort for superannuate endowment.

The Conference was holding a Saturday afternoon session, and I had an appointment to speak at 3 o'clock. Bishop W. F. McMurry was in the chair, as alert and lusty as ever. Langston told me that the Bishop had spent the whole month of August in the bounds of the Denver Conference and that he had visited and preached on both sides of the Great Range until he had reached practically every charge. I heard Rev. H. D. Thompson, pastor at Pueblo, say to the Bishop: "Your itinerary in this Conference this month reminds us of the strenuous traveling of Bishop Asbury." The Bishop replied: "Well, I have wanted to give personal attention to the work in this Mission Conference and took the month of August for it, so that I might be able to respond to the request of the Secretary of the Board of Finance in assisting to present the plan of the special effort for superannuate endowment to the Annual Conference this fall." I said nothing, but could have told how Bishop McMurry had worked almost day and night during the year in his Seventh Episcopal District in an effort to get his work well in hand in time to serve the Board of Finance in doing this work.

The Denver Conference preachers and lay members were a unit in their hearty appreciation of the plan for the special effort. Without exception, they promised that the quota of the Conference would be raised and paid as called for under the plan. This Conference has but one district, and Rev. C. W. Hall is the lone presiding elder. His territory embraces all of the State of Colorado and part of New Mexico. How would you like to go around with him? Brother Hall told me that he intended at the first quarterly conference of every charge in his district to give one dollar cash to the charge as the first contribution on its quota on the special effort. Other presiding elders might learn something out of Colorado. If Brother Hall thinks enough of this movement to make it cost him not only hard work but money, he is a fine man for presiding elder for such a time as this. Hats off to him.

You all know Bishop McMurry, don't you? Well, get a mental picture of him in a Ford coupe with two big grips and a sizable chauffeur, all driving down one of those seeming straight up-and-down foothills of the Rockies on a hundred-mile trip. I am sure you will agree with me that a bishop with such a persistence for doing difficult things is sure to prove a valuable asset in the special effort for superannuate endowment. And his preachers of the Denver Conference, who ride these bucking Fords under similar conditions twelve months of the year over the winding and ever-rising-and-falling roads of this great mountain country, are just the boys this heroic Bishop needs in such a field to do justice to the cause of the "forgotten man."

Western Virginia Conference.

From Beulah, Colo., where the Denver Conference was held, to Barboursville, W. Va., seat of the Western Virginia Conference, is a journey of two days and two nights—and a little more. Of course the constant traveling wearied me, but I forgot all about it when I reached Barboursville and experienced such a warm welcome at the hands of the Western Virginia Conference. Bishop Darlington had the stage all set for the presentation of the special effort for superannuate endowment. When he announced the time of beginning for the program, the preachers did not start going out to get a drink of water. They kept their places with an air of earnest expectancy. Other preachers who had before been out of the room came in and took their places with their brothers. I cannot tell you how much this pleased me. It is much easier to work with a will to succeed when those who are expected to help with the task join heartily in co-operation. Somehow it inspires a confidence where otherwise doubt and misgiving would prevail.

The Bishop, after a few pointed statements, introduced Dr. Frank L. Wells, of the Virginia Conference, for the inspirational address. Whew! That man has something besides a bald head. For forty minutes he held that splendid body of men in rapt attention as he delivered one of the best addresses concerning the superannuate cause that I ever heard. When my time came to explain the plan, Wells had the pot boiling. Bishop Darlington poked the fire some more and then called for me.

It was an inspiration to see that splendid group of preachers and lay members so eager to get the specific directions for projecting the movement in behalf of the "forgotten man." Invariably it is a difficult task to explain the details of a program for raising money, because the average listener becomes impatient under a process of mere analysis. But if the Western Virginia Conference felt that the consideration of the plan for special effort was tedious, the brethren were surely adept in concealing their feelings. I am sure that the character of the cause for which a plan of special effort is now being presented is such that one can suffer even the tedium of explanation for the sake of a movement so sacred.

One preacher handed me a check for $25, saying: "This is the first contribution on my charge's quota for superannuate endowment. I believe we will be able to raise every dollar of our part and more." This is an example of the attitude of the preachers generally on this subject; and not only do the preachers feel this way about it, but the laymen are even more enthusiastic and hopeful. A prominent layman of our Johnson Memorial Church in Huntington, W. Va., said to me: "Our charge has done its part in every financial movement that has been presented to us during the past five years, and you can be assured that we will respond to the special effort for superannuate endowment in a manner that will be to your entire satisfaction." I told him he was putting it pretty strong, for my satisfaction concerning the movement for our worn-out preachers is not so easy to reach. However, the brother was not inclined to change his statement, and I believe that the great church for which he testified will do a magnificent thing for the sacred cause.

I left Barboursville fully convinced that there is no need to worry about the Western Virginia Conference in the great special effort. For five years these brethren have been encouraging me with positive promises and assurances that they would do their part in the chance so given. About three years ago members of a little chapel of a circuit located in the mountains of this Conference subscribed $3,600 to superannuate endowment. A Conference that has in it even a little chapel of a circuit willing to do this thing in such abundance can certainly with all confidence be expected to do a noble part when the organized movement is on in earnest.

DREAMS.

Last night I dreamed the queere[illegible]

That I was in my room at school,
And stood up to recite.

The funny thing to me was this:
I talked a perfect streak,
And answered all the questions [illegible]
I didn't know last week.

I wish I could, while I'm asleep,
Examinations take!
I know I'd do much better
Than when I am awake!

The patient in the private ward of a hospital was a testy old millionaire whose case at first gave the physician considerable difficulty.

"You're getting on well," replied the physician, rubbing his hands in satisfaction. "Your legs are still swollen, but that doesn't bother me."

Too Much.

On the Western plains the sheepman goes out with several thousand head and one human companion. The natural result is that the pair, forced on one another when they least want it, form the habit of hating each other.

An ex-sheepman, while in a narrative mood, was telling a party of friends of a fellow with whom he once rode. "Not a word had passed between us for more than a week, and that night, when we rolled up in our blankets, he suddenly asked:

" 'Hear that cow beller?'

" 'Sounds to me like a bull,' I replied.

"No answer, but the following morning I noticed him packing up.

" 'Going to leave?' I questioned.

" 'Yes,' he replied.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The regular annual meeting of the Publishing Committee is called to meet in the office of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, 512 Camp Street, New Orleans, La., on Thursday, October 18, at 10 o'clock a.m. It is hoped that every member of the committee can be present.

JOHN F. FOSTER, Chairman.

WORK DAY FOR THE ORPHANAGE.

Rev. Robert W. Vaughan, the Superintendent of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, located at Ruston, La., has announced that Saturday, Oct. 13, will be "Work Day," and that the next day, Sunday, Oct. 14, will be "Harvest Day" for that institution. The Orphanage is so well established in the affection of the Methodists of Louisiana that we are sure all Sunday school superintendents and pastors will call attention to these special days and see that they are observed; but we add a word of exhortation lest, in the press of other matters, they should fall to make announcements far enough in advance to secure the best results. An offering should be taken in every Sunday school and every congregation in the Louisiana Conference.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

National Father and Son Week has been set this year for the period beginning on Nov. 11—Armistice Day.

The Corinth District Bulletin, dated Sept. 10, states that 779 additions to the membership of the church have been reported thus far.

Randolph-Macon College for Women, Lynchburg, Va., is beginning a campaign to raise a fund of $1,250,000, of which $800,000 will be added to the endowment and the remainder used to pay for recently erected buildings and provide other needed equipment.

Rev. J. G. The board of stewards of the church at Amory, Miss., at the fourth quarterly conference, passed highly commendatory resolutions concerning Rev. T. H. Dorsey, for four years presiding elder of the Aberdeen District. Special mention is made of his success in the business administration of the affairs of the church, and of his ability as a preacher. The resolutions were presented by a committee consisting of C. M. Harrison, J. M. May, and C. B. Baker.

Bishop W. N. Ainsworth authorizes us to announce that Rev. Arthur J. Moore, pastor of Travis Park Church, San Antonio, Tex., will deliver a series of evangelistic addresses at the North Mississippi Conference, and that Rev. Walter Anthony, D.D., pastor of the Mulberry Street Church, Macon, Ga., will deliver a similar series at the Mississippi Conference. Both of these are among the foremost of our city pastors and are reaching thousands with their evangelistic messages.

Bishop W. N. Ainsworth is indeed a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. In addition to rounds of visitation in Mississippi, Georgia, and Florida, he is meeting the presiding elders of each of his four Conferences for a preliminary survey; he will speak several days at the St. Louis and the North Alabama Conferences, and from Oct. 28 to Oct. 31 he will speak daily at the anniversary celebration of the Old John Street Church in New York City. We have learned with real sorrow of the recent death of Mrs. J. H. Scruggs at Corinth, Miss. Mrs. Scruggs was the daughter of Bishop Paine and a sister of Captain George Paine, of Aberdeen, Miss. She married Rev. J. H. Scruggs, of the North Mississippi Conference, over forty years ago, but most of their united ministry was spent in the South Georgia Conference. Dr. Scruggs was paralyzed two years ago and had to give up his work in that Conference, and he and his wife have been living since in Corinth. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to Dr. Scruggs and to the other loved ones and friends of the deceased.

We take the following from the Oxford (Miss.) Eagle: "The union services of all the Oxford churches, which have been held on the beautiful lawn of the Presbyterian church during the summer months, were closed last Sunday evening. Rev. L. M. Lipscomb preached the closing sermon to a large and attentive congregation. His text was, 'How shall ye escape if ye neglect so great salvation?' After the services a great many members of the congregation expressed their appreciation and thanks for the sermon. These union services have been well attended and were a great blessing to the community."

A CHRISTIAN REPLY TO THE REV. THOMAS H. LIPSCOMB.

By Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

Our good friend, the Rev. Thomas H. Lipscomb, has concerned himself to pass under review certain articles which I have written in recent months wherein I tried to call again the attention of the church to the old Methodist emphasis on Christian experience and holiness of heart and life. Brother Lipscomb is greatly disturbed. He would have much preferred that I lay stress altogether on dogmatic theology. Brother Lipscomb has a lively imagination and has invented for me a theological position which I do not hold, and has then gotten very angry with me about the matter. Brother Lipscomb, I am not a bit angry with you; I am just sorry for you.

Let us look at a few of his criticisms.

1. It seems that in writing the word Calvinism I hit a wrong letter, or my excellent secretary struck the wrong key, or the printer had a bad "spell." Anyhow, Brother Lipscomb calls the attention of his readers to the fact that a word was mispelled. Horrible! Now that was "the most unkindest cut of all!" Brother Lipscomb, I will confess the truth. You got me at one of my weak spots. I have had a hard time with my spelling ever since I studied Webster's blue-back speller. I wonder, Brother Lipscomb, if you found any commas misplaced, or any capital letters wrongly used. I am pretty good on commas and capitals. But seriously, when a man sees little things big, he is certain to see big things little. And I am afraid that my critic is a little too critical.

2. Brother Lipscomb is alarmed over my having said that as a result of the broadening and deepening experiences of divine grace, I have come to have "a large indifference to things, whether of creed or of practice that make no difference to the Christian life." I gather from what Brother Lipscomb says that he, himself, pays great attention to "things of creed and practice that make no difference to the Christian life." But I am at a complete loss to know why he should be so deeply concerned about things that do not really matter. Christ—his life, his teachings, his death, his resurrection—Christ is the center of my faith and the source of my Christian life. Brother Lipscomb must have a mind that runs to abstract thinking—thinking abstracted from the great things which touch Christian life.

3. Brother Lipscomb is grieved because I said that "it is not theology that saves a man; it is Christ that saves." To Brother Lipscomb this statement made by me is such a great "heresy," that he prints it in black-faced type. Then he goes on to impress upon his readers his own position that a correct theology about Christ must be formed before a man can be saved. Now that is where he and I part company; for I know that one must have a personal experience of Christ before he can have any real understanding of the significance of his Person and his Death. We are not theologians first and afterwards Christians. We are first Christians, and afterwards theologians—if ever theologians at all.

4. Brother Lipscomb is shocked at my ignorant exegesis when I take the position that St. Jude himself knew what he meant when he wrote in his epistle that he was going to "contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered unto the saints." I went to Jude's epistle to find out what Jude's message was. Now comes Brother Lipscomb: "Now whoever heard of such a principle of exegesis!" Well, I was under the impression that Brother Lipscomb had a B.D. degree from a first-class theological seminary and that he also once taught in a school of theology. I wonder how he missed the first lesson that I used to give my students at Southwestern University in New Testament Theology. Evidently Brother Lipscomb would read back into Jude's words some system of theology, and then seek to enforce his own theology by quoting Jude in support of it. Now what we ought all to do, is to go to the Bible and learn what the Bible teaches, and then shape our thinking in the light of God's word. By the way, the Board of Managers of Tract and Evangelistic Literature of our church have printed in tract form my sermon on "The Faith Once for All Delivered Unto the Saints," and by writing to Lamar & Barton, it may be had for use in revival meetings and otherwise.

5. Brother Lipscomb objects to my saying that the "penal substitution" theory of the atonement is Calvinistic. He thinks that the doctrine that "the penalty that was due me on account of my sins fell on Christ—that violated law demanded a victim, and that Christ was punished in my place"—"is the obvious, undeniable teaching of Scripture." And he tells us that he settled that "long ago" in an article he wrote for the Review! He insists that the only Calvinistic thing about Calvin's view of the atonement is that Calvin limited its application to the elect. My critic has failed entirely to understand Calvin. The essence of the Calvinistic theory is this: The sins of the elect were transferred to Christ and Christ was punished as a sinner; and Christ's righteousness is transferred to the elect and the elect are rewarded as righteous. "Penal substitution" and "substitute righteousness" are the two legs of the Calvinistic theory. Now Methodists believe in actual righteousness and not substitutionary righteousness; and I believe that the atonement wrought out by Christ was actual and real—the mightiest event in human history. The language used by Calvin and others who hold the same theory is horrible. Calvin says: "He endured in his soul the dreadful torments of persons condemned and irretrievably lost"; "He suffered that death which the wrath of God inflicts on transgressions." That is to say that since the penalty due man's sin is eternal death, Christ suffered on the cross the torments of the damned. This Brother Lipscomb believes is what the New Testament teaches. Well, thank God, I do not believe any such horrible misreading of the death of my Lord! And this Calvinistic doctrine has never been able to make itself at home in Methodist theology. But enough of this. One feels ashamed to let it be plainly known what this barbarous theory is that we are now being told is the essence of the gospel. Before the cross of Christ I bow in amazement. "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." The last thing men ought to do is to dispute about the cross of Christ. I feel like saying with Saint Paul, If I have spoken as a fool it is because I have been compelled to do so. Brethern all, proclaim the great redeeming fact of Christ Crucified, the one hope of the world! To dispute about the cross is almost as sacrilegious as the gambling of the soldiers for his seamless robe while he was dying above their heads.

I brought a spiritual message to the church. My critic sees nothing good in what I have said. It is only evil and that continually. He reminds me of another critic:

The critic stood with scornful eye
  Before a picture on the wall;
"You call this art? Now see that fly,
  It is not natural at all.

"It has too many legs, its head
  Is far too large—who ever saw
A fly like that, so limp and dead,
  And wings that look as if they—pshaw!"

And with a gesture of disgust
  He waved his hand, when, lo! the fly
Flew from the picture. "Ah! some dust,"
  The critic said, "was in my eye."

It is too bad, Brother Lipscomb! I wish you weren't so awfully critical. I wish you were just a little more human. I wish you were just a little more brotherly.

In conclusion, let me quote from John Wesley: "Love me not in word only, but in deed and in truth. So far as in conscience thou canst (retaining still thy own opinions, and thy own manner of worshiping God) join with me in the work of God; and let us go hand in hand. And thus far it is certain thou mayest go: Speak honorably wherever thou art, of the work of God, by whomsoever he works, and kindly of his messengers. And, if it be in thy power, not only sympathize with them when they are in any difficulty or distress, but give them a cheerful and effectual assistance, that they may glorify God on thy behalf."

E. BAYLEY KENT was born Dec. 11, 1845, and died July 22, 1923. He was married in 1879 to Miss Annie Kent. Their home was blessed with sons and daughters, who have gone out into the world to brighten it. He united with the Methodist church at an early age and lived in it. When asked if he was ready to go, he replied, "If my God wants me, I am perfectly ready to go." He not only commanded respect, but admiration, for he was endowed with kindness, which was a chief attraction and a part of his being. As a friend, he was loyal beyond measure; as a citizen, he was patriotic. Memories of him will ever find an abiding place in the hearts of his friends and brethren. Thus he leaves his dying bequest to his family, while we are all impressed with the splendor of his life and the gentleness of his death. May God bless the bereaved family.

His Pastor.

THE QUEEN OF GRANDMAS.

I think my grandma is a queen;
Her throne, a rocking-chair;
A little, ruffled crown of white
She wears upon her hair.

And I her loyal subject am,
Her wishes I obey;
A morning kiss, a kiss for night,
As proud tribute I pay.

I think her spectacles are made
Of rosy-colored glass,
She looks through them at every one
So kindly as they pass.

Her two small feet upon a stool
And I together sit;
I'm glad it's no smaller, for
We just exactly fit.

She tells me lovely stories then
Of what the fairies know,
And all about strange continents
Where giants grow and grow.

Then when I tell her everything
I learn, and do, and see,
She thinks I'm very big and smart,
And listens carefully.

And when I stoop and kiss her hand
That's wrinkled, small and white,
She says if she's my grandma queen,
Then I'm her gallant knight.

THE TREASURE.

We devote ourselves to the acquisition of the whole field of life and character, until we are able to say that the new-found treasure is love. The only price of divine treasure is love. We cannot pay for it in any other way. And love comes out of faith. Nothing in the world enriches a soul, develops its powers, completes its real life more naturally than the faith that there is somewhere, not far away, a pure and true and perfect Being, whom we can love without reserve.—Herbert Snell.

All that is best in the world is due to religion.—W. W. Bellinger.

LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

Did it ever strike you, electric light customer, gas user and street railway rider, how much genius you get for every dollar you invest in the labor-saving devices of the public utilities?

Did you ever stop to think that a water heater, electric fan, that handy little motor that sweeps carpets, drives the washing machine or cream separator or makes ice for you with very little investment on your part, may be a direct means of adding years to your life? Every electrical or gas fed device is an economy not only in terms of money but in terms of life itself.

A GOOD DAY IN FIRST CHURCH, COLUMBUS, MISS.

Yesterday was a very happy day with us here in Coumbus. For three months we have been busy repairing the great old auditorium of First Church. Seven thousand dollars have been expended this summer in putting the house in order for the great work it has a chance to do. We now have not only the most ample quarters for the congregation, but attractive and inviting. A great congregation gathered yesterday to hear Dr. W. L. Duren, of New Orleans. He has as many friends here as any pastor who ever served this charge. His coming was hailed with delight and a most inspiring message did he give us. He read the story in Luke's gospel about the walk to Emmaus, and used for his text the verse which says, "Jesus made as though he would have gone further." It was a splendid sermon, well thought out, and presented in a most delightful style. The service made a profound impression. He was given quite an ovation at the close of the service.

First Church is making some headway all the time. The Sunday School Workers' Council has laid plans for a great promotion day program the fifth Sunday in September. Our attendance has held up fairly well during the summer. Yesterday we had 94 men present in the Baraca class.

We are planning to begin a revival meeting on Oct. 14. Mr. P. M. Boyd, and Mr. Twilley, his pianist, will be here to assist the pastor. Pray for the meeting. We are expecting a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. When the roll is called at Greenville on Nov. 7, we are expecting to be able to make a good report. These are most excellent people and are giving us faithful and earnest co-operation.

Brother and Sister W. M. McIntosh are here for a little rest from their almost continuous evangelistic labors. They are with their daughter, who lives here.

The coming of a thousand or twelve hundred young ladies to our splendid college will put new life into this old town, especially into the boys, the picture shows, and the soda fountains. Last year we had 410 Methodist girls, and we will hardly have a smaller number this year. This lays upon us a very grave responsibility and gives to us a most glorious opportunity. The pastor of Central Church, Rev. A. S. Raper, and the writer, backed up by the good people of our churches, promise to do everything possible for the religious wellbeing of these young ladies. The college is presided over by a most excellent gentleman, a steward in my church. Dr. H. P. Walker, the newly elected head of the department of mathematics, is an active member of the Methodist Church. He will be a big help to us. If there is any special thing we can do for these young ladies at the college, we are at your command.

THOUGHT BACK WOULD BREAK

Nothing Helped until She Began Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"When my baby was born," says Mrs. Posluszny, 106 High Street, Bay City, Michigan, "I got up too soon. It made me so sick that I was tired of living and the weakness run me down something awful. I could not get up out of bed mornings on account of my back; I thought it would break in two, and if I started to do any work I would have to lie down. I do not believe that any woman ever suffered worse than I did. I spent lots of money, but nothing helped me until I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I felt a whole lot better after the first bottle, and I am still taking it for I am sure it is what has put me on my feet."

If you are suffering from a displacement, irregularities, backache, nervousness, sideache or any other form of female weaknes you should write to The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Massachusetts, for Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women." It will be sent you free upon request. This book contains valuable information.

A SUGGESTION.

Brother Carley: Recently, in conversation with Hon. J. A. McLeod, of Hattiesburg, and other prominent laymen of Mississippi and Louisiana, I suggested that the Seashore Camp Ground would be an ideal place to have a great Sunday School Institute each summer. All the laymen with whom we discussed the plan were enthusiastic over it. Our young people need a little summer trip, and there is no place so delightful as the coast—you know all about it from personal experience—for vacation joys. Now if PROFIT can be combined with PLEASURE, the answer is easy.

My suggestion is as follows:

1. Let the Conference Sunday School Committee arrange a three or four-year course, ten days each year, and invite all interested to come. A small fee would be readily paid, which could be used for advertising and incidentals. The course should go over one Sunday, or two if found advisable.

2. The hours of study and lectures could be fixed in a manner that would allow abundance of time for recreation.

3. Each Sunday school could send delegates, if desired, and pay the incidental expense. With trained instructors, the profit would be unquestioned.

Yours fraternally,

J. C. BALLARD.

Biloxi, Miss.

H. G. WELLS ON EVOLUTION.

Dear Brother Carley: Anent the present discussion of evolution, the objectionable feature of the Dawinian theory is expressed in the following quotation from H. G. Wells' Outline of History: "The record, in harmony with a mass of biological facts, pointed away from the Bible assertion of a separate creation of each species straight towards a genetic relation between all forms of life in which even man was excluded! The importance of this last issue to the existing doctrinal system was manifest. If all the animals and man had been evolved in this ascendent manner, then thero had been no first parents, no Eden and no Fall. And if there had been no Fall, then the entire historical fabric of Christianity, the story of the first sin and the reason for an atonement, upon which the current teaching based Christian emotion and morality, collapsed like a house of cards."

The above being the creed of the whole subject, I must accept either one or the other; so I of my own free will and accord accept the Bible.

FROM THE CORINTH CIRCUIT.

Dear Brother Carley: Please allow me space in your columns to say that we have just closed one of the greatest meetings in the history of Gaines Chapel Church. The meeting was held under the tent owned by the Corinth District. The Rev. E. R. Smoot, our much beloved and efficient pastor of First Church, Corinth, did the preaching, and he did it well. Under the leadership of the blessed Holy Spirit, he brought message after message throughont the ten days' services, to the delight of all the people as they thronged to hear the message and to receive the inspiration of the personal touch of the messenger, the man of God.

God honored His Word, and under the magic touch of the old-time gospel message many were convicted and converted, swept into the kingdom of God—66 came and gave their hearts to God, and there were 25 additions to the church, with more to follow. Some will go to other churches.

Brother Smoot is a great preacher. Consecrated and wholly given over to God, both soul and body, he knows God, he loves God, and he has the passion for souls. He has power with God and influence with men. He is deep in his thought, uncompromising with sin, sound in the belief in the divinity of Jesus Christ.

Our busy presiding elder, Rev. J. B. Randolph, as occasion would permit, was with us, whose presence and service added impetus to the services. One gratifying feature of the closing hour came when Brother Smoot called for life service volunteers, and four young men and two young women with sterling character came forward to accept the call of God, as follows: Hubert Bass, Arthur Austin, Edward Marlele, and Lesley James, to preach tho gospel of Jesus Christ, and Mrs. John Brady and Miss Elizabeth Dalton, to do missionary work.

God mightily stirred the hearts of our people. New visions came in view, and resolutions were made to live a clean, pure life of service for God.

Pray for us.

GOOD RESULTS IN BILIOUSNESS

BLACK-DRAUGHT RECOMMENDED BY A TEXAS LADY, WHO DESCRIBES HER DAUGHTER'S INTERESTING CASE.

Paris, Tex.—"We have been using Black-Draught for seven years," says Mrs. M. B. Salter, of this town, who related the following description of how Black-Draught proved beneficial in the case of her daughter:

"Our oldest daughter would get very bilious; was 'naturally of a bilious temperament,' said the doctor. The medicines we tried seemed too strong and would leave her in a weakened condition, and her stomach so weak.

"We began to look for a remedy that would correct this and not leave her so weak. Some one suggested Black-Draught. We tried it and the result was so good we never use anything else with her.

"We make a tea from Black-Draught and it certainly gives satisfaction. I, myself, use Black-Draught for headache and indigestion and colds, and recommend it to others. Am sure it has benefited us."

Biliousness has been relieved, in many thousands of cases, by the use of Thedford's Black-Draught. It is easy to take, and has none of the disagreeable after-effects of calomel and other mineral drugs. Black-Draught is purely vegetable. Try it. Sold everywhere 25c a package.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The pastor, superintendent, and thirteen teachers at Charleston have agreed to take the first four books in the training course and complete them by June. When they pass on these books they will be eager for the other eight units, and, best of all, they will have a higher respect for the Sunday school. Of course this school will observe Rally Day and take an offering for the Sunday School Board, and they will observe Promotion Day and Children's Week. This school will not be long in doing the full work of a real school.

When Miss Virginia Thomas, a graduate of Grenada College, entered Northwestern University her credits were fully recognized by this great institution. Such recognition was given because one of the leading teachers of Northwestern has first-hand knowledge of the class of work being done at Grenada. Miss Virginia is preparing to work in the North Mississippi Conference.

Occasionally some good people find fault with our Sunday school literature. Invariably, I have said write out your criticism and I will take pleasure in calling Dr. Chappell's attention to what appears wrong. Dr. Chappell is a Christian gentleman, a loyal Methodist, and a man of genuine piety. He does not lay claim to infallibility, but it is hardly fair to criticise him before the public and not give him a chance to reply. The Golden Rule is not out of date. It is worth something to be orthodox iu conduct as well as in creed.

It is somewhat spectacular to criticise the different boards of the church—one can do enough criticism until he feels like he has joined the host of martyrs; but after all how much has been done to establish the Kingdom of God in the hearts of men? The same effort put forth in constructive work would go further and last longer. The main thing to keep in mind is to be brotherly in all kinds of criticism.

If any pastor would have a packed house of eager listeners, let him get ready to observe Children's Week, Oct. 14-21. He can have three people besides himself give messages on the following: "Home Training and the Problem of Authority," "The Power of Example," and "The Child, a Citizen." People love their children. The child is the key to establishing the Kingdom. When you do something for the children you do something for almost everybody. Why not give this project a fair trial?

GUNS AND BULLETS.

By Garfield Evans.

The distance which a bullet goes does not depend so much upon the size of the bullet as it does upon the kind of gun that shoots it. Youug man! You see Doctor A—— making a success in the Christian ministry. He prays with poise and ease. You say, "I feel the hand of God leading me into definite Christian work, but I couldn't ever speak like him." You are looking at the size of the bullet.

Young woman! You see Miss B—— make a wonderful report of the work she has been doing as a home missionary. You are thrilled with the possibilities of work in her field and you say, "I'd like to do that kind of work, and according to my ability and opportunity I could do that; but I could never preside with the poise with which she presides." You, too, are looking at the size of the bullet.

At your last revival you saw Mr. C—— speak to a friend of yours who was under conviction of sin. He spoke with clear words and well choseu Scripture quotations, and in a few moments had led him to a clear understanding of his relation to God and theu to a decision for Christ. You would give almost anything to have been able to speak as convincingly as Mr. C——. And you are looking at the size of the bullet.

At the Epworth League service, Miss D—— was called upon almost unexpectedly to discuss a missionary topic because of the absence of one of the members. She spoke as though she had been notified days in advance. She quoted facts and incidents of missionary life with ease and held her audience with intense interest. How you wish you could do like her. And you are still looking at the size of the bullet.

Do you realize that the choice of words, the poise of bearing, the ease in speaking, and the knowledge of facts have come to all of these by the most prodigious labor? They have acquired all these things after many failures and at times when they thought they never could succeed. But all the time they were growing and developing. And it should be noted that their object all the time was not to develop themselves—which came as a by-product—but they were all the time seeking to serve others. Their service now is a finished product. It is therefore the size of the gun, and not the bullet.

PLANTING THE GOSPEL—AMONG THE REDS.

By J. O. J. Taylor, Superintendent Liberia Mission.

The Russians may be divided into three classes, as follows:

First—Those who hold with a blind determination to the old State Church, regarding every blow at it as a sacrilege.

Second—Those who have, in their enthusiasm, cast aside all churches and turned away from Christ and God and all things religious.

Third—Those who feel that the Russian State Church is no longer able to function, yet who are spiritual, and are groping for some church in which to find spiritual life and light.

Class number one meutioned here, those who cling blindly to the Old Russian State Church, may be found in two types of people. First, there are those among the peasants who have been trained to believe that only this church is a church and that their soul's salvation depends wholly on the life or death of this church. They still crowd around their ikons and their altars with a zeal and a determination that speak of years of devout worship.

The other type are those in whose hearts the love of the old royalty still reigns supreme, despite revolutions and changes of government. Silently they worship and swear "never to change their faith."

Class number two, those who have thrown aside all religion, are mostly to be found among those in Government service, who have no time for other things, and among the young men who have grown fanatical over the teaching of Communism. This type of young men desires to take over all churches as clubs for the "Young Men's Communistic Association," and are violent in their opposition to religion of any type. Many of them are orthodox Jews.

By far the largest class, however, are those who realize that the Russian State Church cannot longer function—that it is a fossil, petrified—yet who know that their hearts cannot exist without faith. Protestant Christianity stands little chance in its work among classes one and two. It is class three of this classification, by far the largest and best group in Russia, which brings to Protestant Christianity an unparalleled opporunity. They compose the great middle class, the best thinkers, and the "common people." As Abe Lincoln says, "God must have loved them a whole lot, he made so many of them." This class offers to us "The Greatest Missionary Opportunity of this Generation."

Wanted! Ambitious Men and Women

We are receiving calls daily for men and women of character, ambition and business training, men and women who can accept and efficiently fill responsible positions, positions that give every opportunity for advancement; positions of high salaries, positions in banks, law offices, insurance, real estate, brokers' offices; positions with manufacturers, jobbers, retailers, in every imaginable type of business in the South.

Many of them we capably fill, others are yet vacant. The men and women who fill them need not be wealthy, nor even moderately well-to-do. They need not be young, nor need they be college or even high school graduates. All that is necessary is that they possess character, ambition and a business training.

The character and ambition they must possess, the business training we will furnish under the direction of the South's most efficient training corps and in one of the South's most efficient and best equipped business colleges. A training with unique courses in bookkeeping, stenography, typewriting, accounting, banking, business administration or our secretarial course. Such a training we will furnish in a few months' time at little cost to you, and at terms to meet your own financial condition.

FROM DeKALB, MISS.

My Dear Brother Carley: One more meeting and I will finish the annual meetings on the DeKalb circuit. This closes eleven weeks in protracted meetings.

This year closes the fourth year on this circuit; thirty-three years in the Conference; twenty-four spent on six circuits. I realize I am growing old in years, but, so far, I have not felt my age. I love to preach as well as ever—only it takes me a little longer to get rested. I guess this is a sign of old age.

I have just returned from helping Victor Clifford in a meeting at Macedonia, the old home church where I was dedicated to God by baptism, where I joined the church fifty-six years ago, and where I was recommended for license to preach thirty-six years ago. At Mount Carmel Church, ten miles from Macedonia, at a quarterly conference, I was licensed to preach. D. A. Little, presiding elder, and R. M. Cassells, secretary. I have so far kept the confidence and preserved the license unblemished, and shall to the end.

About eighty-five years ago, at the Mount Carmel Church, my father and mother joined the Methodist Church. Father joined on Sunday, happily converted, came home, carried my mother, and she was converted and joined the church. Both of them shouted. I think there were three children in the family at the time. The thing that makes me glad is, I was licensed to preach in the church where my parents joined, and joined the church and was recommended from the church, Macedonia, where my father was largely responsible for the building. A large generation has come from this father and mother, and all but some two or three are standing by the Methodist Church. G. P. White, of the Louisiana Conference, and myself are striving to perpetuate the memory of Rev. Archie White and do his preaching.

It was the greatest eight days I have had in my life to preach to my schoolmates and kinfolks, young folks that have grown up since I left Wilkinson County, and spend the time partly with my son-in-law and daughter.

The meeting, from every standpoint, was satisfactory—eleven accessions to the church and the membership revived to the highest.

Victor Clifford is much loved by all the folks. They say he is a great preacher. For a man of his age he is great. I heard him once and was helped by his sermon. I am thinking that it is time for me to rest and let the younger preachers have the field I fear I cannot carry the loads that I have carried heretofore. I do not want to break down.

Fraternally,

M. L. WHITE.

CHICAGO CRIMES DECREASE.

Major crimes, including murder, burglary and robbery, have substantially decreased in Chicago in the last four years and there has been a great decrease in the number of automobile thefts, according to the fourth annual report of Henry Barrett Chamberlain, director of the Chicago crime commission, just made public. Mr. Chamberlain noted, however, that the number of murders decreased 51 per cent in 1920, a year when there were 14 hangings, and the number increased in 1922, when there was but one hanging.

Humility does not mean doubt of one's own ability or hesitation in expressing an opinion, but it holds a due regard for the ability and views of others.—Selected.

It might be quite embarrassing to call the roll of preachers and laymen and jot down those who have not read a real book in a month, or two, or three.—Exchange.

We have had a good year spiritually, and we cannot afford to go up to the Conference until we have done our very best to raise the finances so necessary for the ongoing of the Kingdom.

I am sure the laymen will see that their pastors are paid in full. They cannot and will not do less than this.
